But this type of approach will lead to the same type of bad feelings generated by the building of the Campus Center. Students who were consulted as to its design aren't the ones who are paying for it. We are. And if we authorize the building of a new and desparately needed convocation center, will we be subjecting ourselves to the same kinds of grumblings and cursings that are heard on the escalators of the Waffle? No one who is a student now will be around to see a future Julius Erving sink a pretty, soft, jumper from outside the key in the first game played in a new building. Are we willing to let someone else, someone in the near future and not in 1980, have that pleasure?

Education

College Offers Education

By CHUCK HALLBERG
Staff Reporter

Has it ever occured to you that college life is more than grass, beer parties and football? It has to some people on this campus and to some on other campuses as well. These people feel that college can offer an education which has value to an individual being. They do not hesitate to state that many existing conditions have to be altered to provide such an education. We feel that it is high time to initiate a medium of communication to the community for these people and for the whole student body.

This is the first article in a new weekly column which will concern education at the University of Massachusetts. From the student perspective, there are really only two aspects of life on campus: social life and educational life. The content and quality of the social life on campus is determined for the most part by the students. The educational aspect, however, is controlled as tightly as possible by time worn tradition, outdated ideas of the function of the University and conservative professionalism on the part of some professors. In effect, the student has little voice in the content or quality of his education (the aspect of college life which he pays for). A college professor is in the position of being one of the few, if not the only professions left that is not client oriented. Students are continually told that because professors have assimilated much more experience than the students, that they know what the students should learn and how the students should go about learning it (at least if they want to be considered "educated").

However, the purpose of this column is not to be critical of the present situation as such. Rather, it is our intention to give students examples of alternatives that are available to them to give the college education an intrinsic value. We believe that this positive action will produce more effective results then mere critical criticism.

Through this column we plan to keep the student body informed of all the educational experiences happening on campus, and off campus where information is available. We request and encourage anyone undertaking any sort of an individual or group project to tell us about it so we can tell the rest of the campus. Needless to say, the free advertizing you will receive is not a bad idea either. Whether it is a dorm lecture series, or an independant study project or an educational trip (in the physical sense) off campus, they are all worth discussing.

We will attempt to explain many of the alternatives of education on the University-wide scale. Programs such as the 4-1-4 calendar year and the University Special Credit Program are among those that will be dealt with. We would like to keep the student body up to date on events and practices of the Faculty and Administration and the effects that these will have from a student point of view. An example is the Faculty Senate Long Range Planning Report.

If any students have any questions on anything that concerns the educational aspect of the University, we urge you to mail them or bring them to us. The address is noted below. Very often a student may hear of some educational endeavor or project and desire more information on it but does not know where to look. This is an attempt to create more and better communication among the student body on their educational activities. In essence, we will deal with anything that has anything to do with the academic/educational aspect of campus life.

While I am introducting this column, I would like to introduce the Student Senate Academic Affairs committee, the group which does all the work for this column. Traditionally, this committee has been a "research and report" committee generally producing one major publication a year. Chairman Thomas Filmore is leading this committee in a new direction. His philosophy is to explore potential and alternatives of education for the students and to bring these to the attention of the community. Under this new direction, the committee is helping to mold the new role the University is to play in our society. Marshall T. Spriggs is heading a sub-committee to research long range planning for the future of the University. Nicholas Apostola is heading a sub-committee to set up liasion between various student groups on campus. Chuck Hallberg is heading a sub-committee to educate the student body to the alternatives in education. A finance and a research and development committee are both still being set up. If anyone is interested in working on any aspect of the Academic Affairs committee they can attend a meeting (place and time are in the notice section of the MDC on Mon. and Tues.) contact one of the above of fill our an application in the Senate office.

Tippo Kicks In

Med Society To Present Seminar

The Pre and Para Medical Society will present a seminar on the "Health Delivery Crisis" in America, as seen from the point of view of the clinician and private physician, on Tuesday, November 24, at 8 P.M. in the Campus Center, Rm. 163-64. Founded early this semester in response to the pronounced need for interesting medically-oriented programs, the Medical Society has initiated a Distinguished Lecturers Series. The seminars are open to everyone, especially Pre-Meds, Nursing Students, Med Techs, and other health-affiliated students. A discussion on venereal disease and medical sociology have been among the past topics. In December a panel discussion on mental illness on college campuses and a presentation on birth control are planned.

In past years, health-affiliated students have had little exposure to realities of the medical world. The undergraduate curriculum offers little insight into the professions of health service, so it is hoped that the Society will succeed in this capacity.

Amherst Plans Overnight Parking Ban

The annual winter season ban on all-night parking will become effective on December 1, 1970. Under this regulation cars parked on any Amherst street after 2 A.M. are liable to towing at the owner's expense. This ban on overnight parking will be in effect for the entire period December 1 through March 21, 1971 regardless of snow and ice conditions. In addition to the ban on all-night parking, vehicles may be towed away at any time, day or night, if they impede or interfere with the plowing and removal of ice or snow or if illegally parked.

In order to provide off-street overnight parking areas during the no-parking ban, the town will allow cars to park overnight on three public parking areas; the Amity Street Parking Area, the Lincoln Lot off Main Street, and the Pray Street Parking Lot. Vehicles may park overnight only on these three lots without charge. Because vehicles are to be allowed to park on these lots overnight, it will not be possible to plow and remove snow from these areas as quickly as from other public parking areas.

Fellowships Offered For Would-Be Pols

Students interested in a career in public administration in the national, state or local government are offered an opportunity to apply for a fellowship to study at three different universities. Candidates must be American citizens who have completed or who will complete a bachelor's degree with any recognized major by June of 1971. Each fellowship for single fellows has a total value of $4,540. The stipend is $3,300 and the remainder of the grant consists of the remission of fees and tuition at the three cooperating universities. Each fellowship for married fellows has a total value of $4,940. The stipend is $3,700 and the remainder of the grant consists of the remission of fees and tuition at the three cooperating universities.

Beginning this June, fellows will serve a three-month internship either with a department of the State Department in Alabama, Kentucky, or Tennessee or with a federal agency in the south such as the TVA. During the 1971-72 academic year, they will take graduate courses in public administration at the Universities of Alabama, Kenetucky and Tennessee.

Completion of the twelve-month training period entitles fellows to a certificate in public administration. They can be awarded a Master's Degree at one of the three universities attended upon completing a thesis and passing appropriate examinations.

For information and applications, students should write to Coleman B. Ransone, Educational Director, Southern Regional Training Program in Public Administration, Drawer I, University, Alabama 35486. The deadline for submitting applications is March 1, 1971.

Program Council Downs People's Weekend

Members of the Radical Community Union issued the following statement Monday:

At the end of October, a student approached the Program Council of the Student Union, a nonelected group responsible for all social activities at the Student Union, with the idea of sponsoring a festival for people with free music, free films, and inexpensive food in the Campus Center. The idea was to hold the event for the entire weekend of December 4, 5, and 6 using the entire two bottom floors of the Waffle. The Council discussed and expressed approval of the idea at both the initial meeting and a subsequent one in early November. Unofficially, up to $1500 was promised and the problem of an official vote made to sound inconsequential. As a result, 26 films at a cost of over $900 were ordered. Momentum gathered, willing bands were found to play free, and the festival seemed imminent.

On Wednesday night, November 18, the Council met and refused to provide the money. It reasoned that it could not rish such a sum right now without a detailed budget presented for the event in light of a threat of $12,000 to its student budget from SUG Board for new chairs for the Student Union Ballroom. The Council suggested another try next semester.

Program Council is funded by SUG Board with over $45,000 for this academic year. The money ultimately comes from proceeds of the student-funded Student Union comples. It recently spent over $1100 on the poorly attended "Awful Waffle Week" and now refuses even an equal sum for an event probably known more widely now than "Awful Waffle Week" was at its end.

If Program Council is to be responsible to its constituency, its reconsideration of People's Weekend is crucial. Petitions to urge an Emergency Meeting of the Council before Wednesday are being circulated to save the festival before it's too late.

Faculty Recital At Bowker

Jon Humphrey, a member of the UMass music faculty, will present a recital Dec. 1, not tonight as reported in yesterday's Collegian.

The recital will begin at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

He will be assisted by Peter Tanner on the piano and Ernst Wallfisch on the viola.

Mr. Humphrey has performed professionally throughout the United States and Canada with such groups as the Robert Shaw chorale, the New York Pro Musica and the Cleveland and Philadelphia Orchestras. He has recorded for RCA Victor and Columbia.

The program is part of the UMass music department series and is open to the public without charge.

Redmen Head All-Conference Team

The University of Connecticut, which won its first outright Yankee Conference football title in 11 years, and runner-up University of Massachusetts dominated the league All Team selections, it was announced today after a vote of the coaches of the six New England state universities.

Connecticut placed nine players and Massachusetts 11 on the first offensive and defensive units. Repeaters from 1969 were UConn halfback Vin Clements, guard Bill Spencer and defensive back Dom Carlucci and UMass offensive tackle Bob Donlin, tight end John Hulecki, defensive tackle Bill DeFlavio and linebacker Joe Sabulis. It was Clements' third selection, while Sabulis was the only unanimous choice.

UConn's Brian Herosian and UMass' John O'Neil won dual honors. Herosian, the only soph cited was chosen split end and kick-return specialist while O'Neil was selected as safety and punter.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Lee can be in the forefront, ahead of the crowd. Her is for Lee individuals to follow their hunches, insidests. These persons seldom go wrong when they wager on their own abilities. Lee is the natural executive. Lee is showy and a showman. Natives of this radiacal sign possess an abundance of creativity and personal magnetism. Some famous Lee persons include Will Chamberlain, Robert Mitchum and Helen Gurley Brown.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Friend surprises you by making special disclosure. You should follow conservative course. Some will make unusual claims. Don't throw caution aside. Instead, measure statements and actions.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Work methods are due for change, revision. Your associates appear impatient. Make some concessions. But insist on finishing basic chore. Then you can wipe slate clean for new start.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): It may be worthwhile to travel in order to effect a reunion. Your creative juices flow. You feel more alive. Don't suppress natural desire to express yourself.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Business negotiation involving property are featured. Accent is on security, ability to be compatible with older individual. Follow through on hunch.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): You are apt to be on the move. Visits and visitors are featured. A relative in transit makes appearance. Surprise of pleasant variety is due. Large details to others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Money matters, personal possessions are highlighted. Protect yourself. Some claim to know what is best for you. Smile and study fine print. Then you survive — with profit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Personal magnetism soars. Many are drawn to you. Now is time for meaningful changes. Show what you can do — and do it with dedication. Feature bright colors. Come out of shell.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): What was hidden is now revealed. You gain greater degree of enlightenment. Family member deserves to have request granted. Realize this and respond accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Solid gains indicated. Promotion in due. You receive credit in personal and professional areas. Many confide that they have new-found respect for your efforts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Greater recognition comes due to unusual events, circumstances. Be prepared. Your view should encompass potential. No time to feel limited. Spread the word; back it up with action.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): You gain access to what was confidential or privileged information. Adds up to opportunity to gain possessions. Take initiative. Don't permit chance for success to dissolve.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you appreciate music, drama, the arts. Tod have been through period of emotional turmoil. Now you emerge with more confidence and greater opportunity for happiness.

NEW YORK (AP) - Johnny Bench and Boog Powell, most valuable players in their respective leagues, are the two nominees for Player of the Year, the Major League Baseball Promotion Corp. announced yesterday.

Bench of the Cincinnati Reds was the Most Valuable Player in the National League; Powell of the world champion Baltimore Orioles the Most Valuable Player in the American League.

The two Cy Young award winners, Bob Gibson of St. Louis in the National and Jim Perry of Minnesota in the American, are the nominees for Pitcher of the Year.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rookie Mark Washington of the Dallas Cowboys says he doesn't practice the fumble but he'd be quite willing if it would enable him to run back a kickoff 100 yards every game.

Washington, a 13th round draft choice from Morgan State, was credited with a 100 yard kickoff return early in the third period Sunday that gave the Cowboys an insurmountable 31-14 lead over the Washington Redskins and renewed hope for a playoff berth. Dallas won 45-21.

UMass Opens Hockey Season Tonight vs. Lowell Tech

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

Contrary to reports and rumors, UMass students will not be charged admission to tonight's hockey home opener, UMass against Lowell Tech, nor any other home hockey game this season at Orr Rink.

The admission policy will be the same as last year. UMass students will be required to show their University I.D., while non-students will have to pay a normal fee of 50¢ or $1.

As far as the game itself goes, the Redmen will be seeking their third consecutive victory over Lowell when the teams face off at 7 p.m. Last year Jack Edwards' hat trick paced the Redmen to a 9-3 victory over the hapless engineers.

Coach Jack Canniff plans to skate three lines and use two sets of defensemen, while junior P.J. Flaherty will start in net. Sophomore Peter Ericson will be the backup Redman goalie.

One line will have last year's freshman sensation, Pat Keenan, centering for Edwards, who was the leading scorer on the varsity last year with 15 goals and 12 assists, and converted center Dan Reidy.

Teaming up again will be Dennis Grabowski and Mike Waldron, but left wing Bill McMann, who graduated last June, will be replaced by sophomore speedster Lonnie Avery. Dan Riley will center for Bob Shea and Eric Scrafield.

Defensively, an injury to junior Al Nickerson, has forced Canniff to juggle his defensive pairings. Junior Brian Sullivan will be paired with Don Lowe, while Bob Bartholomew will team up with sophomore Bob Shilalie.

ICE CHIPS-A new first at UMass will be the addition of hockey cheerleaders...WMUA, 91.1 FM, will be taping the game for a future airing...Last year against Lowell, Charlie Donovan scored two goals, but his best move was when he forgot to take off his skates after the game, and came running out of the dressing room with them still on...So far this year no one has been challenging Bartholomew for the coverted gold belt, but he has been hearing foot steps of late.

Wrapping Up The Freshman Football Year . . .

Poor Showing Deeply Concerns Kelly

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Sure, the 0-5 record bothered him. It would bother any coach tc see his team go through a winless season. But of greater concern to freshman football coach David Kelley was the fact that by season's end, his squad, by injuries and an originally poor turnout, had been reduced to an incredible low of 28 players. Why? Why in a school of this size were there less than 40 candidates at the first team meeting? This is the question Kelley sought to answer.

He viewed the problem in a social context, saying that in a society as free as our's discipline has suffered. "There is too much social freedom in decision-making at the high school level, and this has caused a general lack of discipline; kids don't want to go into football because it's an area of extreme discipline, particularly because it's such a team sport."

Kelley laughingly recognized the fact that "this is probably a 'hard-hatted' approach, but as a coach I feel without discipline there is no team."

"Each player must conform to the norms and criteria involved in playing football," he continued, "but the current obsession with non-conformity causes many to not go out and affects those who do go out for football."

As an example he cited the occasional problems his defensive ends had with containment, that is, keeping the play to the inside. "It was their responsibility to do this, but at times they did not heed this responsibility, which shows a distinct lack of discipline -- responsibility and discipline are directly related."

The smallness in numbers obviously did hurt: "The problems were compound. One injury led to a virtual revamping of the whole line-up; one problem touched off a series of related problems."

Also, because many players spent a lot of time practicing with the varsity, there were not enough players left for the freshman coaches to work with.

According to Kelley, the thing that hurt the most was players' quitting. "The game is more demanding now; both mentally and physically, and kids start dropping off because of their academic load or some other reason. Consequently, all the coaching hours spent on these players are lost, and this hurts the team immensely."

When asked if he had any suggestions on how to improve the deteriorating football situation, Kelley pondered the question for a moment and then offered, "It's possible that football can be made attractive. Perhaps more scrimmages and better training camps would help. There are many other little things we could do to take some of the drudgery out of the game and to create a more complete sense of unity, of 'we-ness'."

"The problem here, however, is that kids expect too much fun and freedom from football. This is not possible; the game necessarily entails a certain amount of drudgery. If the players can understand th drudgery involved and develop their mental outlook to the game accordingly, then fun can be extracted from playing football."

Acknowledging the fact that money plays a huge part in the problem, the frosh coach could offer few suggestions because "it's not in my jurisdiction."

In summarizing his team's performance, Kelley said that he felt all along his team would win a good percentage of its games. He noted that three of the games were lost in the last quarter and attributed this to, along with the smallness in numbers, the fact that the team was "not in extra-good shape."

He closed with an evaluation of his players. "We uncovered some pretty fine football players. There are at least eight or nine that will help the varsity considerably."

In particular, he mentioned the names of Mark Tripucka at quarterback, Paul Hanson who "will be a good defensive-back" tackle Dave Yushinsky, guard Bill Hale, Kevin Moran at tackle, Ken Hoff at fullback, and Tim Berra, who was labeled by Kelley as "a good, well-disciplined football player.

Discipline, too much social freedom, lack of numbers, and injuries -- excuses? No, not excuses. A coach who has just gone through the frustrations of a winless season seeks valid reasons, not excuses. These are the valid reasons determined by a concerned coach. And there certainly is reason for concern.

Touch Football Tourney On Tap For P. Pipers

Ted Schmitt, Director of Intramural Activities, has announced that the Hamlin Pied Pipers, UMass Campus Touch Football Champions, have accepted an invitation to compete in the National Touch Football Championships in Columbus, Ohio on November 27, 28 and 29th.

The Pied Pipers, a team composed of UMass students, residing in Hamlin Residence Hall, have been victorious in 11 straight games. Their most recent victims were the University of New Hampshire Campus Champions (Phi Mu Delta Fraternity), who went down to defeat 34-6.

One of 32 teams from throughout the country accepted to participate in the Tournament, the Pied Pipers are most anxious to engage in national competion and are optimistic as to their chances of being crowned National Champions.

Nixon Turns Back On Public Bird

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon Tuesday was given a turkey he said he wouldn't eat. The bird showed no elation at the news: she flapped her wings into the President's face.

To reporters witnessing the presentation in the Rose Garden there seemed to be mutual dislike. The President stayed well back of the agitating wings; the turkey gave the President a baleful red eyed glare.

The turkey, 45 pounds of energy, was given to the President by Lloyd H. Peterson, president of the National Turkey Federation, Mount Morris, Ill. Also there, and helping to hold down the turkey, was Rep. John B. Anderson, R. Ill., is whose district the federation headquarters is located.

When the bird began flapping her wings the President, unmindful of the turkey's sex, asked "Has he been trained?"

The reply was lost in the flap, flap, flap of wings that seemed more than two feet long.

The President said he would probably eat turkey for Thanksgiving but "not this one."

The White House is going to cook six turkeys, each 20-25 pounds, and serve them to veterans in the Washington area who are dining with the First Family.

Giving a Thanksgiving turkey to the President has been an annual thing for 25 years.

Peterson said the broad breasted Nicholas White will dress out at about 35 pounds.

After the brief ceremony the President walked back to his office pausing occasionally to look apprehensively at the dynamo of a bird still slapping merrily away.

People's Weekend Dashed

The Campus Center Council met to decide on a proposed People's Weekend with free movies and free food, and free bands last week.

The resulting rejection was based on a lack of concrete facts about the program, poor planning (a contract was pending for $900 worth of films that have either been shown this semester are planned for next semester or are in the University film library) and budget problems.

Draft Director Outlines Method For Evading Military Service

WASHINGTON (AP)—Deferred men with high lottery numbers may join the 1970 draft pool at the last minute, just in time to accompany its survivors into a low risk category, the Selective Service System announced Tuesday.

The order clears up uncertain ties about a man's right to pick the time when he drops his deferment, regardless of when his local board gets around to considering his application.

Two warnings:

Only high school and college student, occupational, agriculture, fatherhood and hardship deferments may be dropped voluntarily while their justifying conditions still exist.

And only men who received lottery numbers last December can take advantage of the opportunity in 1970; men whose lottery numbers were drawn last July don't face their prime exposure to the draft until 1971.

The Selective Service System already has said that local draft boards, in 1970, may not call men holding numbers higher than 195, as drawn in last December's lottery.

Under the lottery plan, men who are exposed to the draft in 1A classification and whose lottery numbers are not reached by the end of that year step into a lower risk category in the following year when a new group becomes the prime target of the draft.

Previously, most draft boards considered a man could lose a deferment only by losing the conditions on which it was originally granted.

McCormack's Aide

Voleshen Pleads Guilty

NEW YORK (AP) - Nathan Voleshen, lawyer lobbist who pleaded guilty to using House Speaker John W. McCormack's Washington office as a base for extensive influence peddling, received a suspended one year prison sentence and was fined $10,000 Tuesday.

The 72 year old Voleshen could have received $160,000 in fines and up to 20 years in a federal prison. His sentence came after a government disclosure that he has cooperated in a new probe on corruption.

Federal Court Judge Marvin E. Frankel, who put Voleshen on probation for a year and gave him 60 days to pay the fine, castigated the long time friend of the House speaker and termed his activities "crimes of the utmost heinousness, crimes that tend strongly to corrupt the democratic process."

Voleshen, fidgeting nervously and standing with the aid of a cane, stood mute before the court until he was asked if he remembered pleading guilty last June 17 to conspiracy and three perjury counts.

"Yes, yes, yes," Voleshen replied.

Voleschen also pleaded guilty Tuesday to one court of a 21 count separate indictment which dealt with a scheme to defraud a California prisoner, John W. Hagenson, jailed for armed robbery, and his wife, Janet.

To get Hagenson out of jail, Voleshen said he promised he would use McCormack's influence, said he invited Mrs. Hagenson to meet McCormack, and said he would intercede with then Gov. Edmund G. Brown of California.

Voleshen admitted soliciting $10,000 from the Hagensons. He said he told them the money would be contributed to Brown's reelection campaign. This was not true, he said.

In seeking leniency for his client, defense counsel Jules Ritholz cited Voleshen's age, his ill health, and his willingness to cooperate in new investigations of corruption. Ritholz said Voleshen was suffering from aortic stenosis, a heart condition.

Pope Paul Begins Journey

DACCA, East Pakistan (AP) - Pope Paul VI is making a one hour stop in the capital of storm whipped East Pakistan early Friday morning on his way to the Phillippines to extend his sympathy to victims of the disaster.

The Pope is expected to arrive at 1:15 in the morning. The cyclone and tidal waves Nov. 13 left 150,000 or more dead.

Dacca, where the Pope will stop, is about 100 miles north of the Ganges Delta disaster area where some 2 million survivors are desperate for food, clothing and shelter.

East and West Pakistan are 88.1 per cent Moslem and 10.7 percent Hindu. Only 0.8 percent are Christians.

Some relief was provided Tuesday by 100 British landing craft, which delivered troops and supplies along the devastated coast in a major effort to reach survivors.

A flight over the area where the British were landing revealed thousands of human corpses mingled with cattle carcasses along the shore where 150 mile an hour winds uprooted three story tall trees. Some human movement was seen along the shore.

Four U.S. Army helicopters went into operation near the Bay of Bengal coast to carry rice, molasses, matches and salt to island areas hitherto inaccessible to relief.

Laird Defends N. Viet Invasion

Campus Reaction

Mobe Protest In Low Key

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Denunciations of the U.S. military actions in North Vietnam as hoaxes designed to promote the Nixon administration's true desire for a complete military victory in Southeast Asia marked the Student Mobilization Committee rally yesterday afternoon in the Hatch. Cold weather forced the rally to be held inside where it was met with mild interest by those in the Hatch.

Spokesmen for the group cited the size of the force which sought to free the POW camp as being three battalions which they viewed as too large a force for its intended purpose and the fact that there were no signs of recent evacuation of the camp, as evidence for their accusations.

They contend that the administration "knew that the camp had been evacuated as early as three weeks ago" and that the rescue of American POWS in the camp was just an excuse for an invasion of North Vietnam.

It is also their view that the fact that remnants of two American missiles found four miles outside of Hanoi points to the fact that the liberation of the camp was just a pretense.

"It is definitely clear that these actions, coupled with the bombing raids indicates that the Nixon administration desires a clear cut military victory not only in North Vietnam but in all of Southeast Asia as well". They went on to state that this action will invariably prolong the war rather than bring it to any reasonable settlement.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird Tuesday defended the American raid on a North Vietnamese POW compound as an extremely important signal that Americans "do care about the prisoners of war."

But Senate critics, among them Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, said the mission - which rescued no one - might worsen the plight of American captives. Muskie called it "a valiant exercise in futility."

Laird appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee in closed session, and agreed to testify publicly before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

"The mission was extremely important to show that the United States - the people of this country - do care about the prisoners of war," Laird said after briefing the Armed Services Committee.

Laird said the Friday morning raid caught North Vietnamese guards and air defense systems completely by surprise. There were no American prisoners in the compound.

Laird said the would be rescuers - he did not disclose their number - found conditions in the POW camp extremely crude. He said "they confirm our worst suspicions" as to the conditions in which Americans are held.

Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss. chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said the men who planned the raid understood the possibility that the prisoners might be moved. Stennis said there was no sign of a hasty departure from the camp.

Laird said the Pentagon knows of other POW camps, but most of them are in populated areas of North Vietnam, where a surprise landing and rescue attempt would be most difficult.

Stennis who called the raid "this brilliant effort," refused to say how many prisoners the camp might have held, but said: "It wasn't just a handful, it was more than a more token figure."

As for the absence of any prisoners, he said "I think the intelligence was just as good as it was possible for it to be."

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, suggested the problem is not so much failure of U.S. intelligence as the effectiveness of Hanoi's.

Laird said most of them have been there for two to five years, since the time of heaviest American bombing of the Communist North.

But on the Senate floor, Muskie said compassion for the prisoners, and opposition to the practices of the North Vietnamese, "should not blind us to the follies of the administration's latest military adventure....

"I am troubled...that even a success in this instance would still have been a failure for hundreds of other prisoners," Muskie said, because it further disrupts chances for a negotiated settlement that would free all the prisoners.

"I'm afraid that this will simply delay the end of the war," said Sen. George D. Aiken, R.Vt.

Laird would not say whether there might be more POW rescue attempts.

But Stennis said Laird had emphasized that "this rescue operation does not represent any change of policy on the manner of conducting the war."

At the Pentagon, a spokesman said unofficial channels had advised the Defense Department of between 5 and 17 possible American deaths in North Vietnamese prison camps.

The No Knock On The Door

WASHINGTON—There was a shoot-out in Phoenix last week which has national implications. The police, taking advantage of a "no knock" law, raided a house where they suspected hippies had narcotics. Unfortunately, at the time of the raid the hippies had moved out a and a married couple had moved in. Since the raid took place at 1:30 in the morning, the husband refused to believe the men were police and shot one. He in turn was shot. The police sergeant said after the raid, "It was a misunderstanding. The couple probably felt they were defending their home against some hippies, and the officers thought they were fighting some criminals."

Now, opponents of the "no knock" law have always claimed the big danger of it was that if the police enter someone's home without knocking they could get shot.

Since the Constitution permits you to defend your own home, it is possible that more policemen will be shot than narcotics will be found.

This will make the cops uptight, and so, to protect themselves, they'll start shooting first, and before you know it there will be blood baths all over the country.

The reason law enforcement officials say they need the "no knock" law is that, if they knock first, the suspects inside the house will flush narcotics evidence down the toilet. Only a strong "no knock" law, they claim, can prevent anyone from dashing to the bathroom.

This sounds reasonable but, as we have seen in Phoenix, it can only lead to a shoot-out, because the people inside the house can never be certain that the people crashing into their home are policemen.

There is a solution to this problem which we think could satisfy the law-and-order people, as well as the innocent home owner.

I am proposing that the "no knock" law be stricken from the books and replaced with a "no flush" law.

This is how it would work: The police would still have to get a warrant to enter someone's home. They would also have to knock before entering. But if it were a narcotics or gambling raid, they would have to shout at the top of their voices, "This is a raid. Anyone who flushes the toilet will be arrested."

One policeman would be stationed by the water meter nearest the house or apartment to monitor any fluctuation in water pressure during the raid.

When the police enter the apartment, they will have the authority to check the bathrooms. If anyone flushes during the raid, he will be assumed to have committed a crime, and this evidence will be accepted by the court as prima-facie evidence of guilt.

The "no flush" law may be considered by civil libertarians as an invasion of privacy, but it is certainly more acceptable than a "no knock" law, and safer, too.

I made this suggestion at the annual meeting of the American Bar Assn. in St. Louis in a speech last summer, but they only laughed at me.

So I've decided to take my case to the public. Would you rather have the police crash in on you at 1 o'clock in the morning without warning? Or would you rather first hear a knock on the door and give up your bathroom privileges while they're searching through your home?

It's all a matter of taste.

THE TOUCHABLES....with the growth of the campi, it is inevitable that the temptations should increase, too.

So it came to pass that, according to the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee POST, coeds are no longer safe even in their own dormitories. Seems that six girls have charged they were "indecently touched" during a disturbance by several teenage males who also shouted obscenities.

Home was never like this.

MORE ON BOMBS....At Mankato (Minn) State, the Student Senate is offering a $400 reward to bounty hunters who may help in the arrest and conviction of bomb threats.

They didn't waste any time in reacting. There have been only three (3) threats on the campus.

A NEW HITCH ON UNDERGRADS....The prexy of the University of California System is plumping for reforms in undergraduate education.

According to the Daily Californian, "Because of the greater emphasis on teaching and education, rather than research, his statement seems certain to incur some objections from the faculty."

Aiming for a Fall 1971 implementation, President Charles Hitch asks that "Each campus must act to ensure that undergraduate students receive education of the highest possible quality....The University," he cautioned the chancellors of each campus in California, "now needs to give renewed attention to the quality of its programs for undergraduates There must be greater commitment of faculty of all ranks to the instruction of undergraduate students."

AGE OF AQUARIUS is "in", witness this want ad in a recent Vanguard of Portland (Ore) State U.

"Hey Roommates: (girls only). Need a pad? Come join us. Large house. Space, privacy, bus lines. Libra, Gemini and others. Liberal but not raggedy. Fun place. See Kaye in Psych office."

Irresistible.

STUDENT UNION IS GAY at UCall-Riverside, according to the Highlander. A dispatch by Reporter Dennis Cassidy says, "There is now a bona fide homephile organization at the disgustingly apathetic campus at UCR. This is, my fellow students, an organization that caters specifically and exclusively to the vastly different needs of the homosexual students. It is inconspicuously called the Gay Student Union...What's in a name, anyway?"

What, indeed?

THINK—YOU—GOT—TROUBLES—DEPARTMENT.

A student at Columbia Basin College in Pasco, Wash. says a letter he mailed in a College envelope was returned unmailed and opened because "It is the policy of the school to open and read outgoing student mail, if the letter is enclosed in an official CBC envelope, and if it has a student's name and address over the CBC return address."

We read about it in The Collegiate.

Why This Is A Short Column

Good morning. Are you really still on campus? Most everyone else left yesterday. In any case, I'm glad you're still here. How is/was your breakfast/lunch? Oh well tomorrow's Thanksgiving, and Momma will fix you right up.

I was going to have a long column today. I even had it written, but this is a short week. This guy Buchwald, he always has his column in on time. His stuff is pretty consistent, and for some reason we never get any complaints about his columns, except from some of our other columnists who want to get paid Art Buchwald salary. The only problem is that he brings his column in typed at seventy-five spaces, and as every Collegian reader knows, Art Buchwald "must be typewritten, double-spaced, and at sixty spaces to a line." Same as a Letter to the Editor. But Art has a mind of his own, and he's dependable, so we let him get away with it. I mean even Lou has his faults.

So, since Art usually runs on Thursday and today's the last paper this week, I thought I'd let him see his name in print once more before the week ended. I wanted Art Buchwald to have a Happy Thanksgiving too. Happy Thanksgiving, Art.

So I put Art up top, and under him I put Tony Granite. Tony is as dependable as Art. He only comes in once a week, but he comes in at sixty spaces. Tony, as the reader well knows, has his finger on the pulse of colleges and universities across America. As a day editor, it's nice to have a columnist with his finger on the national student pulse. Among other things I can tell who has speed, and where.

Besides all that, Tony is a busy man, and I truly appreciate his writing a Wednesday Column for me. So I put Tony under Art Buchwald. Happy Thanksgiving, Tony.

How everyone in the office wants me to wish them Happy Thanksgiving. Happy Thanksgiving, Mark, Anne, Dave, Ed, Earle, Sully, and Metawampe. Now I can print my column for today.

Happy Thanksgiving, reader. You've earned it. Peace.

Bad Lights Kill

To the Editor:

Last Thursday evening our roommate was killed. He was struck by a car on Commonwealth Avenue. Thursday evening was wet and rainy and supposedly the car that struck him was speeding. We would like to make the following statement: we feel that it is the University and not the individual driver, whether he was speeding or not, who is responsible for Fred's death. Commonwealth Avenue is ill-lit, poorly paved and poorly placed. Like all the roads that go through campus Commonwealth is a hazard: our campus should not have two major roads going through it and a poorly planned, badly lit third road circling it. Besides the immediate necessity to properly light the area where Fred was hit, we would like to propose that some alternative means of transportation be provided for those members of our University that live off-campus. Parking areas should be located far from campus to lessen the direct chance of tragedy and bus service from these parking lots should be provided for those students, faculty and staff that need to drive to campus. There is no reason to have this volume of traffic going through our campus every day. There is no reason to have three roads going through campus. There was no reason for Fred's death besides lack of planning and thought on the part of the University. Let us not risk another tragedy.

"And I heard him exclaim, as he ran out of gin, Happy Thanksgiving to all; The Lions better win."

Letter From Kent State

Dear Howard:

Thanks for your phone call on the idea of UMass providing sanctuary for the indictees. I talked this over with people here, and the consensus is that the 22 of us who have now been arraigned are committed to an open, legal battle, and the other three have apparently found sanctuary elsewhere. But thanks for the offer.

What we need is money. As you know, legal justice is the luxury of the rich, and none of us is. Furthermore, although most of us will probably be aquitted once the cases are tried outside of Ohio, and perhaps once outside of Portage county, the cost of trials and appeals will probably run into six figures. And it may take as long as five years.

Contributions should be made to the Kent Legal Defense Fund, Inc., P.O. Box 116, Kent, Ohio, 44240, and my personal preference is that a note be attached which specifies that the contribution is for the legal fees of those indicted. It turns out that some of the costs of litigation are immediate, while the legal fees come later. The way the fund is now set up, it is being used first-come-first-served, and my worry is that the fund will not be able to cover legal fees when that time comes.

We also need political support. It is an important case here, which concerns academic freedom and the rights of dissent everywhere. The indictments were not of 25 people, but of The American University. I was singled out not for inciting to riot (however that might be construed, I did not do it) but because I am a visible symbol of free dissent in the classroom and on campus.

(Parenthetically, I am not much of a radical, and as for being a "trouble-maker," all of my efforts have been within the "system." The troubles I have made have been minor ones to which the system has accommodated (and thus reformed). Which is to say that the thing that has happened to me can happen to anyone who is not completely orthodox.)

Repression does not happen all at once. As the movie of that title puts it, "The seasons change," and people come and go, but the forces of bigotry gradually gain footholds here and there, on some days but not others, until the whole society has moved a noticeable and perhaps unretraceable step away from freedom. The Kent State indictments are symptoms of the ways in which universities are being attacked everywhere. But our case is so blatant that it can and should serve as a rallying point for us and others, and as a signal that we must all take the offense. Our lawyers are beginning that offense now in the Federal as well as the local courts, and they must be supported. But there is also a need for political support, nation-wide, in the form of students and faculty who self-consciously realize and exercise their rights. Until and unless that happens, what happened to the Kent State 25 will be repeated more and more frequently, and less and less revocably.

Perhaps I repeat the obvious, but the situation here has made me very much aware that freedom presupposes continual conflict; it is never won, and each generation has to fight for it all over again. Any generation that stops fighting for it may also lose it for future generations. And freedom is the freedom to dissent and to disagree with those in power. As I.F. Stone notes, you are free to agree openly with the government everyplace, including Haiti, Angola, etc.

I think that's what the Kent State 25 is all about. (For your further information, I enclose some materials on the factual aspects of our situation here.)

Sincerely,
Thomas S. Lough

What price glory?

The turkey above sensed his eminent doom, but, like all turkeys, sought to immortalize himself before dying. He tried to paint "Free the Turkey Ten!!!" on Herter Hall, but he didn't have any hands, so that failed. He swam all day on the Campus Pond Tuesday, but when his photo was brought in, it was dismissed by the managing editor who said, "This is not a muskrat." He next tried the poetry page, but found that there would be none this Friday. In desperation, he submitted his poem and his picture to contest #5. We told him he would indeed be immortalized. This, we thought surely, would cheer him up. But he left, looking sad, saying, "I'm in a lot of trouble."

I am a turkey. I admit it; I hold no glorious and perverted image of myself. I am a turkey. Complete with the plumage of my army jacket, my dungarees, my UMass notebook and my bic pen. I am a turkey. Much of my speech is garble I make a lot of noise and often speak only for the sake of the Holy Rhetoric with little regard for the substance of my mumblings.

I am a turkey. I run around in a simple existence, worring about matters of importance only to my own individual turkey coop here in the Pioneer Valley. I don't really care about the great problems outside of the State farm. Sure, I worry about everything I'm supposed to, like the war and repression and genocide. But I find it hard to devote total concentration to these far away worries.

I am a turkey and tomorrow is Thanksgiving. The hunters will be coming soon. They will move on to the State farm, shoot me and then devour my remains.

"Go back, the bridge is closed," warns the sign by South College. Yes, folks, a flood of humanity has hit Amherst, and since there are no banks to reinforce, they're building a library instead. The people conditions are still listed as hazardous, although the MDC weatherman informs us that there will be a three day ebb before the tidal wave returns. So UMass will be calm until Monday, "when human voices wake us, and we drown."

New WMUA Schedule Features Night Music

For the late-night listener, music occupies the 11:15-3:00 a.m. spot on WMUA. These shows tend to feature good music and a little bit of the unordinary. So if you're up studying or doing something constructive (perhaps getting a blacklite tan), tune in and hear the latest in music.

On the weekends, WMUA continues its Coffee on Campus beginning at 6:30 in the morning. At 9:00, and lasting until noon, folk music is featured. Three hours of music follow up the folk show. Then, at 3:00, it's more music to fill your Saturday afternoon. At 6:00, there's a half-hour of news to let you know what's been happening throughout the day. Then it's back to music again, lasting until 11:00, when the late night news rolls along. Finishing off the night, it's music once more beginning at 11:15 and lasting until 3:00 a.m.

Sunday starts off at 10:00 with classics for the serious minded music lover. Eight hours of classics later, the 6:00 report keeps the university up to date on the day's events. From 6:30 - 9:30, it's music time again. Then, at 9:30 - 10:00 Hank Tracy reports on the Senate's activities. at 10:00, Ken Horseman and Dave Melvin conduct Sports Talk for the sports fans of the campus.

Miss Nancy Ferraro, a freshman studying wood science and technology at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, is the winner of the 1970 New England Kiln Drying Association Scholarship (NEKDA).

Wood Tech Prof Honored

Dr. Harold B. Gatslick, Professor of wood science and technology at UMass was honored at the recent fall meeting of the New England Kiln Drying Association (NEKDA).

Secretary and treasurer of NEKDA for over twelve years, Gatslick was presented with an engraved plaque and a life-membership in the association, which is devoted to promoting better wood drying and manufacturing practices in the forest products industry.

He was influential in establishing the J. Harry Rich Memorial Scholarship Fund.

The 1970 Rich Award was presented to Daniel J. Buckley, a student in the wood science program at the University. In addition to a certificate of recognition, the association awards a $500 scholarship. The Swansea senior was the 1969-70 recipient of the Outstanding Junior in Wood Technology Award.

Miss Nancy Ferraro, also a student at UMass, was awarded an industrial scholarship designed for beginning students in wood technology or wood utilization programs at a New England school. Miss Ferraro, a freshman from Somerset, New Jersey, received a $250 scholarship and a certificate of recognition.

Parking Ban Begins Dec.1

The annual winter season ban on all-night parking will become effective on December 1, 1970. Under this regulation cars parked on any Amherst street after 2 a.m. are liable to towing at the owner's expense. This ban on overnight parking will be in effect for the entire PERIOD December 1 through March 21, 1971 regardless of snow and ice conditions. In addition to the ban on all-night parking, vehicles may be towed away at any time, day or night, if they impede or interfere with the plowing and removal of ice or snow or if illegally parked.

In order to provide off-street overnight parking areas during the no-parking ban, the town will allow cars to park overnight on three public parking areas; the Amity Street Parking Area, the Lincoln Lot off Main Street, and the Pray Street Parking Lot. Vehicles may park overnight only on these lots without charge. Because vehicles are to be allowed to park on these lots overnight, it will not be possible to plow and remove snow from these areas as quickly as from other public parking areas.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn persons have deep need for affection. They don't always make this obvious — in fact, they can have a cold exterior. But natives of this zodiacal sign find fulfillment only when love is present. Affection, understanding and love can actually change the physical appearance of Capricorn, to say nothing of mental outlook. Some famous Capricorn persons include Steve Allen Ava Gardner and James Earl Jones.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Activity centers on legal affairs, marriage, partnerships. Some around you are apt to be pugnacious. A relationship could end if too many harsh words are permitted. Accent self-restraint.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Headstrong actions could alienate co-worker associate. Obtain hint from Aries message. Be receptive to new ideas. Trying to hang on to outmoded methods could be costly error.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): You are gratified to receive meaningful compliment. One who did beat about the bush makes declaration of feelings, intentions. Your own instincts will provide response.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Practical issues surface. You can handle them. Key is to have alternative methods at hand. Depending wholly on one person — or procedure — would not be wise. Act accordingly.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Light touch is advocated. Avoid being too fixed in ways. One you admire deserves special consideration. Keep communication lines open. Write, call — express your feelings.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Discuss financial matters with mate, business partner or close associate. Someone may be trying to maneuver you into uncomfortable position. Stand tall for principles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Cycle is high but avoid taking unnecessary risks. Specifically, cut down on driving where possible. Excess speed now creates problems. Mate or partner is apt to be unusually aggressive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): You may feel somewhat confined. Ride with the tide. Don't neglect your own health requirements. One who makes unusual emotional demands may not have your best interest at heart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Activate hopes and wishes. Means start doing something solid to fulfill desires. Member of opposite sex plays prominent role. Permit creative forces to flow.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Accent on civic duties, professional obligations. Many look to you as example. Set pace toward cherished goal. Your appeal becomes evident. There also are added responsibilities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Travel is spotlighted. How you relate to neighbors and relatives plays important role. Remember to send best wishes or anniversary gift. You are concerned with projects at a distance.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Obtain hint from Virgo message. Guard valuables. Means don't take for granted that others are familiar with necessary procedures. Hunch could pay dividends.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you tend to be introspective. What you reveal on the outside is not what you may actually feel. You are connected with justice, law and political activity. If recently married, problems faced are now due to dissolve. If single, financial barrier is removed. You may be headed for altar.

Ecology First Slated For UMass In June

The first international symposium to discuss the ecology of rivers and the impact of man on the great river systems will be held June 20 through 23, 1971, at UMass, sponsored by the Northeastern Division of the American Fisheries Society.

Scientists from many parts of the world will discuss some of the great river systems of the world -- the Nile, the Thames, the Volga, and in the U.S. the Columbia, the Delaware, the Illinois and the Wisconsin. Each will be reviewed as a case history in the light of past and present uses.

The purpose is to bring together scientists who have a particular knowledge of rivers as biological and physical systems and to synthesize this knowledge into concepts of river ecology that will suggest directions and designs for future management.

Symposium chairman is Dr. Robert A. Jones, fishery biologist with the Connecticut State Board of Fisheries and Game. Others taking part include such leading scientists as Dr. Kenneth Mann of the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Nova Scotia, who will describe the Thames, Dr. John Bardach of the University of Michigan, and Dr. R.S.A. Beauchamp of England's Central Electric Generating Board, who will discuss heat effects on river systems.

Further information is available from Christopher Percy, executive director of the Connecticut River Watershed Council, Box 89, Greenfield, Mass. 01301.

Wrapping Up Football . . .

Character and Redmen Go Together In 1970

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

"When you consider the intangibles, it really wasn't a losing season", remarked a quiet head coach Vic Fusia when he was asked to generalize about the UMass football season just completed last Saturday.

Recordwise it was a losing season for the Redmen, who wound up with a 4-5-1 mark when they dropped their last game to mighty Boston College, 21-10.

It was a season that saw UMass win its first game, lose its next four, tie its next one, win three in a row, and drop the capper.

Fusia added to his summation of the campaign, "I had great expectations of this club in early practice, but we suffered many heartaches during spring practice and during the summer. I don't know what effect it had on the club but it had some."

The coach has tried to pick this season apart and find an answer to why his team lost five games, making it the second Fusia-coached squad in ten years to have a losing record. He commented, "When you dit down and try to analyze the whole year, you can't put your finger on any one thing; it's a combination of things."

And, it's a darn shame that this football team will always have to bear the label of a loser. And there's a reason for saying this. The reason does not lie in the statement, "They got gipped against Buffalo and B.U., with just a little bit of luck, they should have won these games easily. And Connecticut, wow did they ever luck out to tie us, we really deserved to win that one." No, the real reason the 1970 UMass team deserves to be a winner does not come from statements like that. That kind of a quip is more a rationalization than a reason, although it does contain some constructive thought.

But there's a bigger reason. Thinking back to what Fusia said about the intangibles, one should dwell a while on one of those intangibles, team character. It was the Redmen's team character that sets it apart from teams that usually fall into the loser category.

Fusia says it best, "Oh! This team was all character! There were several occasions when this could have been a winless year, but never once did those who remained try to take the easy way out.

"Never once was there the lockerroom lawyer. I think the worst thing any individual can manifest is self-pity, and this never occured. As a team, and as individuals, if we work toward this psychological move (self-pity), downfall is inevitable.

"This certainly is a team, and individuals, with character."

Fusia took time to talk about more specific aspects of the UMass team. He had one concise comment to make about the year-long performance of the defense, "Wish it were possible to put it in bronze."

He chatted a little bit on the offense and concluded, "I thought they came around very nicely."

As to the best game he thought his club played all fall, he pointed to two of them and the choices were obvious, "It had to be the BC game and the Dartmouth game, without a doubt two of the best teams in the East...we had fine performances (against them)." Against these two powers, Fusia felt that what hurt the Redmen most was "our own errors at the most critical times...and this is what dogged us all year."

About the leadership performance given by co-captain John Farrelly, coach Fusia reiterated something he had said on Monday night at a team affair, "A real man grows with responsibility, and he just grew to a man of ten feet tall. John is one of the finest captains I've ever been associated with. He just grew with responsibility."

And so, as journalists are prone to say, that just about wraps things up. The story of the season can best be found in a person like Pat Scavone, senior halfback of the Redmen. It was written before but, before the second half of last Saturday's game against BC, this guy realized that he was going out to play his last game in a Redman uniform, and that as a senior member of the UMass team, it would take great efforts by guys like himself to upset that Eagle and reward themselves with a winning season. Otherwise, they get tagged 4-5-1.

Scavone's comment to his coach at that time: "I'm going out there and give the best 30 minutes of my life." He did. Others did. The Eagle was just too much. The season came to an end, 21-10. The Redmen were supposed to get routed. They didn't. They didn't. But they still ended up 4-5-1. No self pity among the members of this squad. They have character that they can pass on to another year. They'll be back.

QB CLUB LUNCHEON - The UMass Redmen Quarterback Club will conclude its series of luncheons today at the Newman Center at 12:15 p.m. A film of the UMass-Boston College football game will be shown along with a narration by head coach Vic Fusia.

Also featured will be the awards given to the outstanding Redman offensive and defensive players against BC. There will be a door prize.

Impressive Debut For Mermaids

The UMass Women's Swim Team had its first competition Saturday at the third annual Albany Invitational Swim Meet. The UMass effort was accented by some fine individual and team performances.

Outstanding swimmer for the UMass team was Joy Yoder, who set a new pool record in the 100 yard freestyle with a time of 1:03.9, and captured another first in the 50 yard freestyle event.

Cyn Erwin, newly elected team captain, took second place in the 100 yard back stroke and third in the individual medley. Also placing were Nancy Tysienski, Diane Kearney and Robin Betts. Janice Brack, Janet Manning, Claire Briana and Evelyn Huskins also participated, as UMass placed fifth in the field of nine competing schools.

The team will compete next in a dual meet with Springfield College at the Women's Physical Education (WOPE) pool on December 3. Anyone interested in assisting, timers, etc. will be needed and should contact Miss Reed at the women's physical education building. All are invited to attend at the WOPE pool.

NEW YORK (AP) - Thurman Munson of the New York Yankees was named the American League's 1970 Rookie of the Year Tuesday by a landslide margin, becoming the first catcher ever to win the award.

Munson, a stocky line drive hitter following in the footsteps of former Yankee catching greats Bill Dickey, Yogi Berra and Elston Howard, received all but one vote from a 24 man committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

NEW YORK (AP) - Jim Plunkett, Stanford's record breaking quarterback who needed government loans the last three years to stay in school but turned down a lucrative pro contract a year ago to help his team win a championship, won the Heisman Trophy Tuesday.

Plunkett is a 6 foot 3, 210 pounder from San Jose, Calif., who smashed the all time college total offense and pass yardage career records this season in leading Stanford to an 8-3 record.

Ex Of WBZ

A Ryan Named PA Czar

Joseph A. Ryan, a journalist-broadcaster with more than 20 years experience in communications and community relations, has been named director of public affairs for the University.

Appointment to the newly-created position was announced by UMass President Robert C. Wood. Mr. Ryan joins the University staff Dec. 7 from WBZ-TV (Ch-4), Boston, where he has served as press and public relations director since 1959.

As director of public affairs, Mr. Ryan will be responsible for developing and improving University relations with its several publics; directing communication and interpretation of its purpose; and coordinating individual campus activity in these areas.

Mr. Ryan began in journalism as a student correspondent while attending Boston College. He has been a news, sports and feature writer for the former Boston Post; the (Boston) Pilot, the nation's oldest Catholic weekly; and the Boston Bureau of United Press International.

He entered broadcasting in Sept., 1355, as a writer for the NBC television network press operation in New York. His press and public relations assignments included the "Today" show, and all NBC news and documentary programs. In 1957, he was named NBC-TV business news editor.

Since his return to Boston in May, 1959, Mr. Ryan has received national and local recognition for his voluntary public relations efforts in behalf of a variety of community services. Among them: the President's Committee on Mental Retardation, Muscular Dystrophy, Massachusetts Service Corps, United Fund, Citizens Housing and Planning Association, Family Counseling Service, and the National Center for Afro-American Artists.

He has been the recipient of national awards both for writing and public service TV programming.

Mr. Ryan was the first person in public relations or broadcasting elected an officer (vice-president) of The Boston Press Club. He has served on the BPC board of directors since 1963.

Outside of his profession, he has served as a member of the Boston College Alumni Education and the Boston College Communications Council.

He is a member of the Massachusetts Trustees of Reservations, Hingham Friends of Conservation, and the Hingham Harbor Committee. He served for two years as a member of the Hingham Schools sex education study committee.

Mr. Ryan was born in Arlington, Mass. He was graduated from Boston College's School of Arts and Sciences in 1951, and followed with graduate studies at Harvard University.

He is married to the former Pauline McDonough of West Roxbury, Mass., a graduate of the Boston College School of Nursing. They reside in Hingham with their three children, Kevin, Sean, and Justine.

Pope May Retire After Two More Years

VATICAN CITY (AP) - A fast succession of indications in the past week has set the Vatican buzzing anew with speculation that Pope Paul VI may abdicate in two years as ruler of the world's 600 million Roman Catholics.

Pope Paul's heavy work schedule and exhausting trips have left him tired. Controversy within the Roman Catholic Church and challenges to papal authority have placed him under unusual strain. And he himself has fixed 75 as the age when his prelatism would step down from their jobs.

He will reach that age on Sept. 26, 1972.

No Pope has abdicated in more than five centuries. But some think Pope Paul has been hinting at abdication recently. They see the most recent indication in the forced retirement of Curia cardinals past 80.

In the most authoritative comment so far on the possibility of Pope Paul's abdication, Michele Cardinal Pellegrino of Turin, a friend of the pontiff, said over the weekend speculation that the Pope might retire should be taken seriously.

In an interview with the Turin daily newspaper La Stampa, Cardinal Pellegrino said the hypothesis of Pope Paul's resignation is "precisely in the line of pastoral concern of Pope Paul, who gives first place to the good of the Church."

Coupled with the Manila assassination attempt-a grim reminder of the vulnerability of any Pope-were remarks by the French born dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals, Eugene Cardinal Tisserant.

In an interview on French television last Wednesday, Cardinal Tisserant was asked if the Pope was thinking of retiring instead of holding the highest office of the Roman Catholic Church for life.

"This has been said," the 84 year old prelate replied. "It has been repeated many times. His state of health is such that it could well be that he has no need to take a decision on that subject. It is visible that Pope Paul is ill...."

The Vatican promptly denied this.

Who might succeed Pope Paul is anyone's guess. The most powerful man in the Vatican below the pontiff right now is the French secretary of state, Jean Cardinal Villot.

Other French prelates also have been mentioned as "papabile" or candidates to papacy. They are Gabriel Maria Cacdinal Garrone, like Villot a member of the Vatican Curia, and Francis Cardinal Marty, archbishop of Paris.

Security Log

The following are selected entries from the logs of the Campus Police, Residence Hall Assistants, and Security Guards for the period Thursday, November 26th to Sunday, November 29th.

November 26, 1970.
12:19 a.m. Report of a beige microbus in A lot shooting a four foot flame from behind it. Cruiser checked and found persons were getting a heater started for use inside the bus.

1:38 a.m. Report of a suspicious person attempting to enter a Southwest Residence Hall. Cruiser dispatched–person gone on arrival. During the evening, a Security Guard found three doors pegged open in a Southwest Dormitory.

1:54 a.m. Report of three persons trying doors in Orchard Complex.

November 27, 1970.
10:10 p.m. Report of two males in Southwest Complex checking doors. During the night, Security Guards discovered people living in two Central Area Dorms, and doors unlocked in two Southwest dorms. These doors had all been locked the previous morning.

November 28, 1970.
10:00 p.m. Trespass notices were given to two non-students in Parking Lot V.

November 29, 1970.
1:00 a.m. A Security Guard found new lights in the Central Area smashed. The first floor bathroom window of a Central Area Dormitory was found open. Doors of Residence Halls in all areas of the campus were found unlocked.

4:28 p.m. Report of a bicycle theft (10 speed Columbia, approximate value of 70 dollars) from Southwest.

ROTC students continue to man the "Pakistan Relief Fund" booth in the Campus Center. John Murphy, spokesman for the charity drive stated that, "the fund raising drive will continue after the Thanksgiving recess with solicitation of individual dormitories."

Tell It To Joel

Students will have a chance Thursday to tell Food Services what they want for changes in the dining commons. On a questionnaire to be handed out in each of the commons, meal ticket holders will have a chance to rate each commons for its food and its atmosphere.

Items will deal with such things as the quality of the food and its preparation and the frequency with which various main dishes are served, and whether students want changes to be made.

The questionnaire was formulated by a committee of students working with the close cooperation of the management of Food Services and dining commons managers. They are very receptive to instituting changes requested by students, according to the student chairman of the committee and he says the questionnaire will give students a chance to be listened to.

Peel Off Those Pounds

Two diet lines will be opening in the dining commons today, one in Worcester (north) commons and one in Hampden (#7 in Southwest).

According to Assistant Director of Food Services Arthur Warren, the lines will be open the same hours as the regular lines, but may be adjusted later according to dieters' demand.

Calorie numerical values will be placed on all food in the diet lines so dieters will be able to keep track of calories as they pick up their meals. Many of the meals used in the regular lines will be repeated minus butter, potatoes, etc.

In most cases, two meals will be offered but in the case of "universally accepted" meals, dieters will be offered one plate.

Approximately 800 people are estimated to take advantage of the new system in each dining commons during the first day. However, Mr. Warren expects a "leveling off" to about 200 people on each line to occur within time.

Mr. Warren feels that if 200 people take advantage of each line, the system could be termed an accomplishment and "would be worth the staff's time and labor."

Chains Keep The Goods In, Thieves Out

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

Chains on the doors of Central Area dorms (over Thanksgiving recess) proved an effective experiment in dorm security, according to Assistant Dean of Students Mike West.

Spokesmen for Student Affairs said at Whitmore yesterday that, there were no security problems at all in Central and Southwest during the recess. Security Police confirmed the lack of reported incidents.

In Southwest the usual security patrol was supplemented by police notification of all residence heads and their guests remaining in the area over vacation, Assistant Dean Tom Trottman said. Careful attendence to locking doors prevented unwanted entries, he added.

The chains for Central dormitories were provided by the Physical Plant, and Southwest loaned padlocks to secure the chains, West said. Previously the padlocks were used to lock closet doors when students and conventions occupied rooms during vacations, he reported.

Heads of Residence were responsible for securing the doors of each building as each deemed necessary, he continued.

The usual procedure was to chain all doors if the dorm was completely empty and leave the front door unencumbered if the residence heads remained, explained West. No students were allowed in the dorms during the vacation, he stated.

The Central experiment was an example of one of the two alternatives available for security when school is recessed, said West. A dorm can either close everything up tight or stay wide open with all the lights on, he explained.

"We had no qualms about what we did," said West, "Because we couldn't guarantee good security otherwise."

During the Christmas recess different plans may be made in spite of the success, said West, because different dorms have asked to remain open. He said new guidlines would have to be set up, in that case.

The guidelines would include a reorganization of security during vacations, a reallocation of personnel, and student volunteers in the open dorms, he outlined.

"Security does a good job," West claimed, "but there aren't enough of them."

Trottman's comments on the problems that did not develop in South west echoed West.

He said that the major problem in the past had been determining who did or did not belong in the buildings during vacations.

Since the Southwest dorms (except Prince) were completely closed to students (although there were no chains) it was easier for those remaining to secure the buildings, he explained.

Final responsibility for dorm security procedures rests with the Student Affairs, but they said area co-ordinators and many others are consulted.

Free Univ. Thriving In Union

By ROBERT SCHEIER
Staff Reporter

Each day, at least several thousand people walk through the front doors of the Student Union and over the large central area in front of the candy counter. Directly underneath this, opposite the Hatch, in the old student Union store, the Free University is alive and well and waiting for ideas.

A walk through the new headquarters of the Free University reveals mostly empty space old shelves and book racks piled up against walls, chairs lined up together at the edge of open spaces waiting to be used. And everywhere there are paper-cartoons, movie and rally leaflets, magazines, publications and listings of all sorts, lining the walls and the floor. And everywhere there are signs of projects started but not finished, of ideas waiting to be acted on.

"Learning shouldn't be a drag-it's like cramming for a test and forgetting it all two weeks later. It's just taking information and putting it in a vacuum," said a member of Free U.

What the Free University is working towards is a whole new approach to education, an outgrowth of the goals of F.U.N.E. (the Free University of New England.) "The problem is not just more relevant courses; it is the whole concept of courses, with information coming from one central source, in a lecture hall where the professor is usually a bore."

The basis of the Free U. will be getting many different people together with different talents and knowledge, and to make these people's skills available to the rest of the University, making ample use of new media equipment which already exists in many cases, but is not used. What the members of the Free U. are attacking is what they see as the fragmentation of knowledge and roles, both in the university and society as a whole.

One of the problems of the Free U. now is a lack of mobility, which hampers the flow of knowledge. The university hopes to overcome this by the use of buses and videotape, with the possibility of a video tape mailing network, which would distribute tapes of unusual speakers or interesting events to those interested in the knowledge.

Again, attacking the lack of mobility, the university is investigating the possibility of a van, to live in while exploring areas of interest to the members of the university. Ideas such as these, along with the use of video-tape portable units, could start of skills and imagination progressing in many different directions.

Basically, the Free University is looking for people with something to learn, or something to teach, to get people and ideas together who will create, hopefully, a "process" which will be greater than the sum of its parts. "There a vast number of possible products of this process, but right now what we want are to get people interested in education together to get things going."

NASA Rocket Fails, $98M Down The Drain

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)—The largest space telescope ever launched apparently failed to reach orbit Monday night, ruining an ambitious $98.5 million experiment.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration reported the Orbiting Astronomical Observatory, OAO 3, "apparently did not achieve orbit. We likely had a problem, but we do not know what it is."

The 12 story tall Atlas Centaur rocket vaulted away from its launch pad at 5:40 p.m. EST, and the space agency reported 12 minutes later that the booster apparently had done its job and propelled the 4,680 pound payload into orbit.

However, 11 minutes later, a spokesman said some conflicting data had been received which had to be evaluated.

After nearly an hour, the spokesman announced the apparent failure.

He said the assessment was based on "tracking data from the Canary Island station, which lost contact with the satellite earlier than expected and from the Madagascar station which did not contact the satellite on schedule."

This indicated the payload reentered and burned up in the atmosphere over either the eastern Atlantic Ocean or Africa.

The satellite was the most expensive scientific payload ever built by the United States, costing $83 million. The rocket and launch costs were $15.5 million, raising the total pricetag to $98.5 million.

It was the second failure in three launchings from the Orbiting Astronomical Observatory program. OAO 1 suffered an electrical failure minutes after it reached orbit in 1966. That resulted in an extensive redesign of the satellite.

Two years ago, Dec. 7, 1968, OAO 2 was launched successfully and is still transmitting valuable data on stars and other mysteries of interstellar space. It carries a 66 inch diameter telescope, the largest ever placed in orbit.

OAO 3 packed a 38 inch telescope which would have given astronomers their clearest look yet at stars, galaxies and nebulae from above the distorting influence of the atmosphere. Hopefully, it would have provided clues to the origin, function and future of the universe.

DVP To Host Sibeko Lecture In Hasbrouck

David M. Sibeko, Head of the Pan Africanist Congress Mission in Europe and the Americas, will deliver a lecture at UMass Wednesday, December 2, at 8:15 p.m. in Hasbrouck 20, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor Program Committee. The Pan Africanist Congress is an organization supporting the total overthrow of white or any foreign domination in Africa and a continental government for Africa.

In words of Sibeko, "P.A.C. stands for Africa for the Africans, with all those who owe their only allegiance to the continent qualifying as its citizens. We believe that all forms of oppression are basically economic and that for as long as there exist on African soil, particularly on Azanian soil, an economy which permits the exploitation of the many for the few, there can be no genuine liberation."

Sibeko was born in Johannesburg, South Africa in 1938. He was employed by South Africa's leading non-white newspaper and magazine, Drum and Post, and worked his way to the editorial board. He joined the P.A.C. in 1960 after the Sharpeville shootings.

In 1963 he was arrested and spent seven months in prison awaiting trial on charges of inciting Africans to rise against the regime and stealing fire bombs from the South African army. Released due to lack of evidence, he operated underground for four months and then was instructed to leave the country to work in the External Misson of the P.A.C. His wife and three children excaped South Africa and joined him in Tanzania in 1964.

Poll Shows Nixon Trailing Muskie

NEW YORK (AP)-A poll conducted by Louis Harris reports President Nixon behind Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, (D) Maine, for the first time since Nixon took office, the polling organization said Monday.

The survey indicated Muskie had 46 per cent of the vote to 40 for Nixon and 10 for independent George C. Wallace. In September, Muskie and Nixon were even at 43 to 43 in a similar poll. A year ago Nixon led 49 to 35.

The Harris poll, taken November 14-19, reports three other possible opponents of Nixon trailing by 6 to 8 percentage points. Nixon led Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D) Mass., 45 to 39, with Wallace getting 11 per cent.

Against former Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, Nixon led 46 to 39, with Wallace getting 11 again.

Nixon had an 8 point lead over Republican Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York, 45-37, with Wallace getting 12 per cent.

Harris said the result " put the stamp on Muskie as far and away the stronest of the Democrats tested who might face Nixon in 1972."

Hockey on the Rise

Play-off Berth Goal For Talented Puckmen

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

April, 1967 ... Former Boston College star and Gloucester High coach Jack Canniff has been named hockey coach at UMass. December, 1970 ... Coach Canniff, now in his fourth year as Redman mentor, has transformed UMass into a respected and successful New England hockey team.

The transformation has been slow and is as yet unfinished. UMass finished 5-15 in 1967-68, improved to 9-12 during the 1968-69 season, but most important the foundation for the UMass hockey program had been laid. A well-recruited freshman squad, featuring such players as P.J. Flaherty, Jack Edwards, Dennis Grabowski, Mike Waldron, Eric Scrafield, Dan Reidy, Charlie Donovan, Bob Bartholomew, Al Nickerson and Brian Sullivan finished 10-2 and best the BC frosh 3-0 at the Heights.

Last year the Redmen, using 14 of the previous year's freshmen as a nucleus, finished 10-8, a winning record for the first time since the 1960-61 season. Yet the improvement continued. Another successful freshman squad featuring Pat Keenan, Don Riley, Bob Shea, Lonnie Avery, Don Lowe, Peter Ericson and Bob Schilalie finished 7-4.

The 1970-71 squad is a culmination of the last two year's successful frosh teams. For the first time in Canniff's four years and Redman hockey history, a coach will be able to start a season with enough experience, depth and most important, talent that could put UMass into ECAC Division II play-off contention.

When asked what were his objectives for the current season Coach Canniff knew of only one.

"Make the Division II play-offs...if we do that every other objective should fall in place."

The chances for the Redmen making the play-offs are good, the potential is there. But a realist once said, "potential is only something that could be achieved, not something that has been prove." The realist speaking these words was Jack Canniff.

One winning season doesn't make a great team. UMass has to establish a winning tradition. In order to win your team has to have talent, depth, experience and desire. The current UMass squad has these qualities. Also, one or two good years of recruiting isn't enough if you want to be a winner. Every year you must get new talent. Hopefully, this year's freshman squad will continue in the tradition of the last two.

Recruiting problems arise - does a great hockey hopeful want to go to a school that doesn't have its own rink. Coach Canniff, only by dedication, has overcome such a major handicap by bringing talent to the UMass campus. Other problems arise though. His team's are forced to practice at night, sometimes traveling 15-20 miles in order to get ice.

A big time hockey school needs an arena, a good team should have at its disposal about three hours of ice time a night. But what about the freshmen? They also have to be developed. Where are they going to get ice?

The fans jamming into a small arena that another school is nice enough to rent UMass so that Redman fans can watch their team. Another problem faced is competition. Despite having the talent to win, your competition is going to be just as good if not better than you in many cases. Canniff felt that Division II would be particularly rough this year with experienced players coming back for such teams as Vermont, Howdoin, Middlebury, Norwich, A.I.C. and Merrimack, not counting sophomores being added from the previous year's freshman teams. Yet the schedule gets tougher with the addition of such Division I teams as Northeastern and Providence in addition to Pennsylvania and New Hampshire with Boston University being added to the 1971 schedule.

Yes, Coach Canniff has brought respectability to the UMass hockey program. Yet the job is unfinished and the finish is a long way off. Division I lurks ahead, but first let's get into the Division II play-offs. As the realist Canniff commented, "walk before you run."

The potential is there. The Redmen have size in their three forward lines. The UMass game will be one of aggressiveness, digging for the puck in the corners, persistent forechecking, harassing the opposition into mistakes in its own end.

Defensively, the Redmen are a bit slow in taking the puck out of their own zone. Nickerson, a good rusher, has been slowed by a knee injury leaving the defense a bit weak in the depth department. Right now this looks like Canniff's biggest problem if an injury should shelve Sullivan, Bartholomew, Lowe or Shilalie. In goal, Canniff has Flaherty who can be tremendous. Last year when Flaherty played well the Redmen played well. When Flaherty is on the ice he is the leader, he'll make the great save that can lift the club's spirit. Behind Flaherty is junior Bruce Crawford who had five shutouts last year and sophomore Peter Ericson.

The outlook for this year is one of optimism. This could be the year UMass finally makes the playoffs. Under Canniff the hockey team has climbed into respectability and hopefully this year it will continue to climb upward.

Coach Canniff finally has a team that even a realist facing a tough schedule, the many problems of recruiting, looking for enough practice ice, developing this year's freshmen and the continued development of the sophomore and juniors and the problems that arise as the schedule gets tougher in the year's ahead, may force a smile on his and the hockey fans at UMass faces. As the realist has been quoted, "Make the best with what you have at the present". Hopefully, the present is a Division II play-off berth.

Leaman Feels UM Can Be "A Very Good Hoop Team"

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Between answering dozens of telephone calls in his office yesterday, head coach Jack Leaman of the UMass basketball team was able to find enough breathing room to answer several questions about the 1970-71 Redman hoopsters, who open defense of their New England championship tonight with a home game against St. Anselm's College at 8.

Leaman was a man in demand on the day before the big Cage opener. His phone spent most of its time off the hook, but when things calmed down a bit, the head coach was able to sit back a little and give some serious answers about this UMass team.

He was first asked how the squad shapes up right now, at the culmination of six hard weeks of practice in preparation for this season. "I don't think we're playing as well right now as I thought we would be playing," he answered.

He explained this view by pointing out that the Redmen had to go through all those practice sessions without the benefit of a scrimmage against another school, because of an N.C.A.A. rule that allows a team to play a maximum of 26 games over the span of pre-season and regular season. Since UMass added contests with George Washington and Syracuse, it boosted its regular load to 26 tilts.

Leaman feels that this lack of pre-season scrimmages has left the cagers a little flat, but he asserted his faith in the team when he said, "I do think we're a good basketball team...As soon as we get a little maturity, I feel we're going to be a very good basketball team."

Switching to another topic, the coach was asked if he and the team had set any goals for themselves as they embark on a new campaign. Leaman replied that there were no real specific goals, just a few general ones, shared by all the members of the team.

"We want to win more games than we did last year and we'd like to win a game in a national tournament," Leaman offered as one goal. He added that, of course, the squad would be shooting to defend its Yankee Conference championship; he slipped in a clincher to this, "And, most important to our kids, we're going to try to defend that New England championship."

Coach Leaman pointed out the advantages of the Redmen playing this season as defending champions of N.E. basketball, commenting, "It has to give us a great deal of confidence in our own ability...And this will allow us to play up to our potential."

He knows that every opponent UMass will play will be aiming to upset the Redmen, and he enjoys every bit of it. He quipped, "I think everybody will be trying to beat us. It's a tremendous feeling to sit back and have everyone aiming at you."

When considering the teams that would be mostly likely to knock UMass on its crown, Leaman picked out UConn, Rhode Island and New Hampshire from the YanCon crop his team must face and, among the out-of-league squads, he cited Holy Cross ("That Holy Cross is going to be an exceptional basketball team."), Boston College, Providence College ("Providence College has the potential....offensively the most explosive team in New England."), Syracuse ("Syracuse will be excellent.") and Fordham ("Fordham will be tough.").

Who will the Redmen be starting in an effort to assert dominance against their high-hoping opponents? The coach was decided on four positions, relating that Ken Mathias and Julius Erving would be two starting forwards, and that John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara would be the starting guards.

The third starter up front will be chosen sometime between now and gametime; and the candidates are Chris Coffin, Rich Vogeley, Tom Austin and Bill Kesgen. "All four seem to excel in one part of the game, but we're looking for a consistent performer, one who will give us the same game day in and day out," Leaman informed. Presently, both Coffin and Vogeley are being pestered by minor leg injuries.

Whomever should start, the abundance of fine performers in this area makes the forecourt a Redman strong point, one with talent and depth. Backing up the starting guards will be hard-working Bill Greeley. Should the situation call for a shooter after Greeley, Sam Provo or Chris Nichols will get the nod: Bob Dempsey will come in should the need exist for a good ballhandler.

Leaman took a few moments to talk about his star cager, Erving. In reference to what UMass fans should expect from No. 32 this year, the coach said, "I think you can expect an awful lot from Julious Erving."

Leaman cautioned that Erving may not match his statistics of last winter, but his overall play should be better. He elaborated, "I personally believe that he is a better basketball player than last year...but, I think, overall, that he will perform better for us this year."

The coach went a step further and commented, "I think he is going to be the best, the very best player in New England, bar none."

Leaman was then requested to compare Erving on a national level, up there with the best basketball players in the land, and Leaman was more than willing to answer, "I think he could play anywhere. There is no doubt in my mind that he is among the best five or ten players in the country."

In assessing Erving's tremendous knack at controlling a whole ballgame from any area on the floor, Leaman asserted, "I don't know if there are any players in the country who are better total players than Erving." That's Julius Erving, No. 32.

As far as team spirit on this Redman contingent, the head coach could remark, "I think it's been excellent." He made it clear that this group has had to muddle through six long weeks of practice without a scrimmage to break up the routine, but they have seen it through because they want very badly to repeat their feats of last winter. "They do realize what it takes to be a winner," Leaman said.

UMass should have its best running basketball team ever this year assures the coach. "I think we should run more or better than we ever have," he enthused, "There's a lot more freedom on offense than ever before."

After talking about his asperations for a running offense, the subject of defense, a Leaman favorite, was brought up and the coach was asked what role defense plays on a championship team. His answer: "Oh, I think its separates the good from the great. I don't think you can be a championship team in any sport without practicing defense."

Praising the healthy aspects of what defense can mean to a hard-working team brought the meeting with Coach Leaman to a significant close as he ended up by saying, "I think, if we can play good defense, it can pull us together. I think this is integral part in our championship."

ONE OF THE GUARDS—Mike Pagliara, shown above in action against Holy Cross, and who developed well toward the end of his sophomore year, will start in the backcourt tonight along with fellow-junior John Betancourt. Also in the starting lineup for the Redmen will be forwards Julius Erving and Ken Mathias. The third forward slot is presently a four-way toss-up, and won't be decided upon until gametime. Cage Doors

Curry Hicks Cage will be open to UMass students wishing to see tonight's basketball games at 5:30 p.m. The freshman game starts a half hour later at 6 p.m. and the varsity contest will get under way at 8 p.m. If enough students show a desire to enter the Cage in orderly fashion, then the doors will be opened at a slightly earlier time, between 5 and 5:15 p.m. Students will be admitted only if they have their UMass student identification cards with them. To facilitate matters, all are advised to have their ID's in their hands upon arriving at the doors so that the line can more easily flow into the building. Courtesy is at all times urged, especially as far as making room for someone else to have a seat by the moving of one's coat.

Although great teams must be made of great players, it is the working together of these players that eventually determines the success or failure of any team. Blessed with some tremendous individual talent, the success or failure of the 1970-71 Redman basketballers will depend upon how well they work together. That, truly, is the mark of any real super team. With that in mind, let us take a brief look at the individuals who make up the UMass basketball team.

JULIUS ERVING No. 32
Junior

After setting twelve new UMass records and being named New England's best college basketball player in his first varsity season, one wonders what is in store for the multitalented junior.

The 6'5 cocaptain averaged 25.7 points and 20.9 rebounds, second in the nation, in his unbelievable sophomore year. In his first varsity start, Erving pulled down 28 rebounds, a school record, as well as scoring 27 points against a powerful Providence College team.

Erving also pulled down 28 caroms against Maine as well as 27 against both Boston University and Northeastern. His biggest scoring nights were 37 against Fordham and New Hamshire and 34 against Boston University.

During the past summer, Erving led the Olympic Development team to a 103 record in Finland, Poland, Russia and Estonia and was chosen on several occasions as the game's top player. He was also named to the All-Tourney team in Estonia.

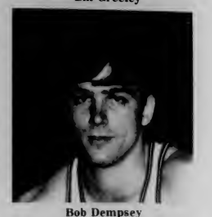
KEN MATHIAS No. 42
Senior
After a solid sophomore season in which he averaged 10.5 points and 8.9 rebounds a game, the senior cocaptain's statistics fell off a bit last season as he hit for 7.5 points and collected six rebounds. However, the drop in statistics is probably due to the fact that Mathias was called upon to play an unfamiliar center position. This season, he will be able to move back to a forward and both he and the team should benefit.



Mathias is an aggressive rebounder and defensive player and should team with Erving to provide the Redmen with one of the finest forecourts in New England. His biggest games in '69-70 were 16 points versus both URI and UConn and 15 against Penn and AIC.

JOHN BETANCOURT No. 10
Junior

Coach Leaman described Betancourt as "possibly the second best sophomore in New England" in '69-70 and few UMass fans are likely to disagree. After a fantastic freshman year in which he helped lead the frosh to a 15-0 mark, Betancourt stepped right into a starting berth on the varsity.

Although only 5'10, he possesses fine ball-handling ability and proved himself to be an exceptional clutch player last season. His biggest scoring nights came in two of UMass' toughest contests (25 vs. BC and 19 vs. Holy Cross). He was the team's third leading scorer last season, averaging 8.8 and will be counted upon to pick up some of the scoring slack left by the departure of Ray Ellerbrook. An excellent defensive player, his finest effort came against All-American Dean Meminger in the NIT against Marquette.

Bill Greeley

Bob Dempsey

MIKE PAGLIARA No. 14
Junior

Another member of the 15-0 frosh unit, Pagliara got a late start in '69-70 due to an injury but came on late in the year to prove that he is ready to move into a starting role this season.

Pagliara is an excellent shooter (47% in '69-70), especially from the charity stripe where he was second on the team last season with 74%. Like Betancourt, Pagliara is a fine ball-handler and the two team up to give UMass a well-balanced backcourt.

RICH VOGELEY No. 44
Junior

One of the team's best shooters, Vogeley is battling for the fifth starting spot. Although he saw action in only fourteen games, Vogeley led the team in both field goal percentage (57%) and free throw accuracy (86%).

With a year of experience behind him, Vogeley may be ready, and if can continue his accurate shooting, he could prove to be the key to UMass' success.

BOB DEMPSEY No. 22
Senior

One of the squad's best ball-handlers, Dempsey will prove a valuable relief man for the starting backcourt. He has acquired a good deal of experience over the last two years, playing in 18 games in '69-70, and this should come in handy in clutch situations.

In his sophomore year, he was called into action due to an injury to Joe Disarcina and responded beautifully by leading the Redmen to six straight wins.

BILL GREELEY No. 20
Senior
Like Dempsey, Greeley has had two years experience and will serve also as a backup guard. Although only 5'9, he runs the team exceptionally well and is regarded as a fine defensive player.

CHRIS COFFIN No. 24
Junior

Also fighting for a starting berth up front, Coffin's forte is defense. He is exceptionally quick and mobile and will probably play much the same role as Jack Gallagher did in '69-70 by guarding the opponent's leading scorer.

SAM PROVO No. 34
Junior

Possibly the team's best shooting guard, Provo could see action if the backcourt is having problems scoring. He also is fighting for the third guard spot and if shooting is necessary, Provo will likely get the call.

TOM AUSTIN No. 30

Austin was red-shirted last year and seems ready this season to help fill up the hole in the middle. He played center on the 15-0 frosh team and is very quick for his size. Although a good defensive player, Austin is also a talented shooter for a big man and could help take some pressure off of Mathias and Erving up front.

BILL KESGEN No. 50
Junior

Adding depth up front, Kesgen uses his size well underneath the boards. He could prove to be a valuable reserve and should add rebounding strength to an already strong forecourt.

CHRIS NICHOLS No. 12
Junior

Another player battling for the third guard spot, Nichols is probably the most aggressive of the bunch. He was the third guard on the 15-0 frosh team and is returning to UMass basketball after a year's layoff.

TOM MC LAUGHLIN No. 40
Junior

A transfer from Tennessee where he was the top performer on the Vols frosh team, McLaughlin should prove a valuable asset to the Redmen. Although ineligible until second semester, he can play both guard and forward and his size could make him a key man in the Redmen's somewhat short backcourt.

CHARLIE PETERS No. 54
Sophomore

One of only two sophomores on the club, Peters will add depth to the somewhat weak pivot position. He proved to be an excellent rebounder late in his freshman season and if he can improve his offense a bit, he should see a lot of action this season.

CHUCK OLSEN No. 52
Sophomore

Though not even a starter at the outset of his freshman season, Olsen has proved himself through hard work and determination. He will provide more depth to an already strong UMass forecourt.

UMass Pucksters Could Be Best Yet

Possibly the finest hockey aggregation in UMass history has been assembled by Coach Jack Canniff and the Redman pucksters are taking dead aim on the elusive Division II playoff berth. Below are the principles from what could be a banner UMass hockey season.

GOALIES

PAT FLAHERTY, No. 1

A junior who is proven under fire, Flaherty had a 3.7 goals against average a year ago in 13 games, and averaged 28 saves a game. Flaherty is capable of spectacular performances as against Colby and Vermont to name a couple from a year ago. A top high school product from hockey conscious Boston Tech, Flaherty will be a key for any success this year.

PETER ERICKSON, No. 1

The top freshman goalie a year ago, Erickson had to beat out some stiff competition in Bruce Crawford and John Kiah to win the second goalie slot. From Quincy, the soph should provide good depth at goalie. And if either Flaherty or Erickson falter, junior Crawford and soph Kiah are capable of taking over.

CENTERS

PAT KEENAN, No. 4

A potential super scorer, the lightening quick sophomore will be centering for Jack Edwards and Dan Reidy. He made his varsity debut last week, and poured in an incredible seven goals. He won't do that every game, but the Ontario native is sure to provide a big scoring punch and stick handling addition.

DENNIS GRABOWSKI, No. 21

A scorer of six goals and eight assists a year ago, Grabowski teams up with old line mate Mike Waldron and soph Lonnie Avery. A junior, Grabowski was fifth leading redman scorer a year ago, and plays an excellent two way game. Grabowski is a Chelsea native.

DON RILEY, No. 9

An outstanding freshman a year ago, Riley will be centering Bob Shea and Eric Scrafield. A product of Canniff's old stomping grounds at Gloucester High, Riley is a potentially high scorer.

WINGS

JACK EDWARDS, No. 19

The junior from Archbishop Williams popped in 15 goals and added 12 assists a year ago to lead all Redman scorers. A scoring threat anytime he touches the puck, the smooth-skating Edwards will be counted on for a repeat of his fine sophomore season.

CHARLIE DONOVAN, No. 22

Another junior, Donovan was third leading UMass scorer last season with six goals and 11 assists. One of the fastest skaters on the team, he is a versatile and valuable performer. Donovan hails from Newton.

DAN REIDY, No. 18

A converted center, the rough and tumble Reidy is being looked to for a lot of muscle in the corners besides his steady scoring. A high school teammate of linemate Edwards, Reidy is an excellent forechecker and hard skater.

LONNIE AVERY, No. 3

The tall and swift sophomore will be looked to for a lot of scoring and fine defensive work. Avery is from Massena, N.Y.

MIKE WALDRON, No. 5

Waldron had five goals and six assists a year ago as a sophomore and proved to be an opportunistic scorer around the net. He is a quick skater that seems to come up with the loose puck often. The junior hails from Auburn.

ERIC SCRAFIELD, No. 15

A hard checker and fine defensive player, the Ontario product added five goals and three assists last year as a sophomore. Scrafield is a converted center with fine hockey sense.

BOB SHEA, No. 8

A hard skating sophomore, Shea had the hat trick in his varsity debut a week ago. He should be a steady performer this season. Shea comes from Arlington.

FRAN MULCAHY, No. 14

Mulcahy, one of the few seniors on the squad, had one goal and three assists in limited action a year ago. Mulcahy is from Arlington.

PAUL RILEY, No. 7

Another senior, Riley is a fine penalty killer in addition to scoring one goal and four assists last year. Riley, a three year veteran, is from Gloucester.

DEFENSE

BRIAN SULLIVAN, No. 17

Switched from wing to defense last year, Sullivan proved to be a versatile and valuable performer. He scored four goals and seven assists and was probably the best skater among the defensemen.

The Hudson junior should be one of the team's best defensemen.

AL NICKERSON, No. 12

A steady and strong defenseman, the junior will have to miss part of the first half of the season with a dislocated knee. Nickerson had two goals and four assists last year while playing in every game. He hails from Falmouth.

BOB BARTHOLOMEW, No. 11

A rugged and steady performer, the Arlington junior is rarely out of position. Bartholomew had three goals and eight assists last year, while playing the best defense on the team.

DON LOWE, No. 2

A fine sophomore from Magnolia, Lowe will be welcome addition to the backline roster. He is being counted on to develop quickly to help fill the void left by Nickerson's injury.

BOB SHILALIE, No. 6

Another sophomore defensive star who will be a valuable defender for the Redmen. He comes from Hudson.

Puckmen Recorded Fine '69-70 Season, 10-8 Mark

(Editor's Note: The following review story of the 1969-70 UMass hockey season is a reprint from the Daily Collegian of Wednesday, April 1, 1970. It is written by former sports staffer Steve Shambar.)

Take 12 sophomores, add seven or eight seniors and juniors for savvy and experience and what do you do? "You hope for a winning season", says UMass hockey mentor Jack Canniff.

"You think 'win' and let the rest take care of itself." And, 'the rest' took care of itself in '69-'70 to the tune of the best season in the annals of Redman hockey.

A 10-8 record, on the surface, is really nothing to rave about but, closer inspection reveals that the Redmen did indeed, achieve several notable accomplishments.

Their 10-5 Division II record placed them just one half game behind fourth-seeded playoff entry. Middlebury, which finished at 11-5. This in itself, is quite an achievement for a team that was an unknown quantity in pre-season college hockey circles.

But there's more: an impressive 4-2 victory over Colby in the home opener before the first of several packed houses, heart-stopping wins over Hamilton, 8-7, Merrimac, 4-3, and Vermont, 2-1, these last three coming in the last 90 seconds of regulation play or during sudden death overtime.

Vermont, a team which topped the Redmen 3-2, in sudden death, earlier at Burlington, went on to defeat Bowdoin decisively for the Division II crown.

Other UMass victories were over Lowell Tech, UConn, Williams, Holy Cross and Amherst, twice.

The eight losses came at the hands of Vermont, Middlebury, Norwich, Penn, Bowdoin, AIC, Brown and New Hampshire.

A loss is a loss, but even in defeat some semblance of a silver lining could be found.

The 2-0 loss to Bowdoin, which had to be the finest Division II club to grace the clammy confines of Orr Rink, was a well played, close-to-the-vest type of game. The Polar Bears finished 18-2 for the year.

In the 5-2 loss to Division I playoff entry Brown, the Redmen were clearly outclassed but were by no means run out of the rink.

Last but not least, was the heart-breaking 4-3 loss to New Hampshire, also a Division I playoff entry, in sudden death on Terry Blewett's fluke foal from a face-off. In this one, the Redmen played the Wildcats, who had beaten powerful Boston University just days earlier, on an equal basis. The game could have gone either way and as Canniff said, "It was a tough one to lose."

UMass hockey came a long way this past season. "We made great strides and I'm happy with the progress," notes Canniff, "but, we can still be better." Of course. Hockey is a game of discipline. Players must be in the right places at the right times or confusion reigns paramount. On a predominantly sophomore team, such confusion can be commonplace.

"We're young and we made our share of lapses throughout the year and this, coupled with an occasional lack of offensive fire power, hurt. "I'd like to see a stronger defense up front," says Canniff. "No defense is as strong as its forwards. They can't afford to relax. This is where the discipline comes in." Amen.

But, the mistakes were few enough to give the Redmen a chance for the playoffs, an occurrance that would have been inconceivable in November. UMass defeated several formidable opponents and found itself consciously striving for a berth.

"After the Merrimac win (February 7, leaving UMass at 6-4 in Division II), I started thinking about the playoffs. We couldn't look by anything, but nothing seemed insurmountable."

At that point, UConn, AIC, Amherst, Holy Cross and Williams remained on the schedule. Five wins would have enabled UMass to finish at 11-4 and, as things turned out, make the playoffs ahead of Middlebury.

The Redmen, however, could win only four of them. AIC beat them, 4-2. It was the first ime in many moons that a UMass hockey loss could be termed an upset. It was, as they say in Morocco, the straw that broke the camel's back.

"AIC stunned us for three goals", Canniff was to say later, "and then we overpressed." UMass had 54 shots but could score only twice. "It was a lesson. We learned a lot."

Those lessons will be applied next year when Division Iopponents Providence and Northeastern make their debuts on the schedule. With several fine frosh on the way up who should bolster the squad, the future is bright indeed.

Rising expectations are an indication of this. This past year, Canniff hoped for a winning record. He got it. Next year, he says, he'll point for the playoffs. "There's no question in my mind, we've got a definite chance." Who is to doubt him?

Score!

NETTING ANOTHER-UMass' Jack Edwards (center--19) records another goal in action from last season, a year that saw the Redman pucksters establish a very fine 10-8 record, and that saw Edwards lead all UMass scorers with 15 goals and 12 assists for a total of 27 points. (MDC photo by Ken Emery)

CULMINATION OF A SEASON-The 1969-70 UMass college basketball season was capped off right here, in New York City's Madison Square Garden, in the first round of the National Invitation Tourney, with the Redmen playing the NIT favorite and eventual champion, Marquette University, and scrapping with that team to lose by only seven points, 62-55. In the action for UMass in this photo are Julius Erving (32), Ken Mathias (42) and Mike Pagliara (14), all of whom are back this year, and Ray Ellerbrook (12), who was playing his last game for the Redmen. The NIT Story

Take the hope that was everywhere prevalent after the 18th basketball victory (over New Hampshire) that the UMass basketball team was tourney material, take five frustrating days waiting for the bid to come from the National Invitation Tournament, take the exciting six days that led up to the NIT game itself, take the remarkable contest between top-seeded Marquette and the Redmen, and add to these the following: 14 basketball players, one coach and 5,000 insane fans, and one has the ingredients that went into the making of .....THE NIT STORY.

The story can best be told here in day-to-day chronological order. Why not make the story a colorful saga? Well, there are over 5,000 colorful sagas that are tributaries to the overall story and one can get an earful of them most any day, just listening to those who were at Madison Square Garden on March 14. Here is the outline of events:

TUESDAY, MARCH 3: The NIT accepts 16 teams into its fold and, of this date, ten teams had been selected. They were Marquette, Louisiana State, St. John's, Georgia Tech, Army, Duquesne, Manhattan, Utah, Georgetown and Miami of Ohio.

Reliable sources indicated that, of the remaining six spots, four would be filled up by two teams each of the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Missouri Valley Conference. At this time, word had it that three teams would be screened for the last two spots, UMass, Texas Tech and Creighton.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4: Texas Tech lost its tenth game the night before this day, which seemed to spruce up everyone's tourney outlook. Word had it, as it had a way of doing during these days, that the NIT selection committee would have a final meeting in two days, on Friday, in order to determine the last six squads that would round out the tourney field. Head UMass coach Jack Leaman said today, "We're going to have to sit by our telephones and wait for that bid."

THURSDAY, MARCH 5: The night before this date, Creighton followed in the steps of Texas Tech and dropped its tenth tilt. Today the NIT picked two more teams, Louisville and Cinncinati, both units from the Missouri Valley Conference.

Tomorrow looked like the big day, with the numbers of positions to be filled now down to four. It still looked good that two teams would be drawn from the Atlantic Coast Conference, but with Texas Tech and Creighton riding ten losses, rumors had UMass and a quintet from the west coast as the likely recipients of the last two spots.

FRIDAY, MARCH 6: What a depressing day this turned out to be! Everyone was so sure that this was the sink-or-swim day for the Redmen and, when Friday evening arrived with no word from New York about the Redmen, gloom stepped in and all hope vanished.

Rumors, rumors, rumors. Unbased rumors disrupted a season that was not yet over. One thing had happened today, just one little thing; the NIT committee had met, had sent out a bid to only one school, Oklahoma, and had scheduled another meeting for Saturday. That was all! It was a day for misdirected expectation that resulted in unexpected frustration.

SATURDAY, MARCH 7: A new day! The selection committee met and chose two more teams. Its first pick was North Carolina of the Atlantic Coast Conference, its second choice was UMass. The NIT bid had sneaked in the old back door. Coach Leaman wasn't even in his office when it arrived. He also had gotten caught up in the Friday fantasy and had left his office in dismay to look at some high school players in New Jersey.

A Basketball Review. 1969-70 . . .

Last Year's Cagers Best Ever At UMass

Last winter saw UMass produce its finest basketball team of all time. That team had an 18-7 record, compiling that mark after getting off to a slow 5-5 start in its first ten games. Those 18 wins are the most ever recorded by a Redman hoop squad.

The hoopsters also tied for first place in the Yankee Conference with the University of Connecticut; both units had 8-2 league marks.

Because of its victory surge in the second half of the season, which included wins over New England notables such as Holy Cross, UConn, Rhode Island, Boston University and Northeastern, UMass was voted the number one team in the six-state area.

GAME 1 - PROVIDENCE: UMass won this opener at home against a very talented Friar club, 90-85. Top performers for the Redmen were Erving (28 rebounds- a new UM record) and Ellerbrook (25 big points).

GAME 3 - RHODE ISLAND: The Redmen were shocked in this one in overtime, 77-73, by a highly-gifted Ram squad. A third straight Cage crowd of plus-4200 witnessed its favorites lose their first. John Fultz was outstanding for Rhody (26 points).

GAME 4 - NEW HAMPSHIRE: UMass won its third, 76-56. Erving had a big night (33 points, 26 rebounds) and Chapman contributed much to the Redmen return to victory.

GAME 6 - AT AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL: UMass was nipped in the late stages against AIC, 73-72. The Redman record was .500,3-3.

GAME 7 - AT THE GEM CITY TOURNEY VS. CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY: An easy win for UMass in the first round of the two-round tournament, over Catholic U., 70-51.

GAME 8 - AT THE GEM CITY TOURNEY VS. GANNON: The Redmen overtook the Golden Knights, 72-63, to win the tiny tourney. A big factor in UMass' title victory was the defensive play of Gallagher and Erving; the latter was selected as the most valuable player in the four-team affair.

GAME 9 - AT PENNSYLVANIA: UMass lost to Penn, 75-65, but showed definite signs of a unit to be reckoned with the rest of the way. The Quakers were the 12th-ranked team in the nation when the Redmen faced them in Philadelphia's famed Palestra, but UMass made Penn scrap for everything it got.

GAME 10 - AT FORDHAM: Another last-second loss for the traveling Redmen, 62-61. Erving was great in this loss (37 points, 20 rebounds). UMass' record stood at 5-5.

GAME 11 - AT IONA: A key victory for the Redmen, 86-82. The visitors tallied 51 points in the second half to overcome a Gael lead. Ellerbrook and Erving were hot shooters in that half to spur UMass on to its sixth. More were to come.

GAME 12- BOSTON UNIVERSITY: A homecoming tilt for the Redmen, it marked the beginning of the UMass second semester, and the home team got everything off on a good foot, routing the Terriers, 103-68. UMass' lead at the half was 61-28. Four big names: Erving, Ellerbrook, Gallagher and Samuelson.

GAME 13 - NORTHEASTERN: The Redmen surged past a good N.U. team, 90-62. Erving glittered (30 points, 27 rebounds).

GAME 14 - AT BOSTON COLLEGE: UMass fell to the Eagles in Boston, 83-76. A loss to B.C., always a disheartening defeat.

GAME 15 - RIDER: The Redmen were flat in this home contest but had enough of something to take it, 82-67.

GAME 16 - AT VERMONT: The hard defeat to B.C. behind it, and the practice game with Rider all over, UMass retained an aura of seriousness it would not abandon for the remainder of the season as it whipped Vermont, 93-59. Ellerbrook broke out of a cold-shooting streak against the Catamounts and connected on ten of 11 field attempts and two of three foul shots for 22 points.

GAME 17 - HOLY CROSS: This game was probably the Redmen's biggest of the year, for Holy Cross entered the Cage as the top-rated quintet in New England. Before the television cameras of Channel 27 and before a packed home crowd of about 4500, UMass defeated the Crusaders, 83-66. A big team effort by the Redmen decided this one.

GAME 18 - AT CONNECTICUT: UMass continued its winning streak and erased the bad memories of the earlier loss to UConn by bettering the Huskies, 71-65. Betancourt shined on defense in this tilt, harassing UConn's hot-shooter, Bob Boyd, into missing 22 of 29 shots for an off-night of 17 points.

GAME 19 - AT RHODE ISLAND: For any claim to greatness, it was necessary for the Redmen to finish first in the YanCon. Early season losses to league-mates UConn and URI were atoned for when UMass clipped the Rams, 83-74, thus completing a two-game sweep of these toughies. As it stood then, the Redmen needed a win in each of their three remaining Conference games for at least a tie for the league title.

GAME 22 - AT ST. ANSELM'S: To emerge victorious in this game, 94-63, the Redmen had to master a boasting college division power in St. A's and its highly-partisan home crowd. They did.

GAME 23 - MAINE: UMass celebrated the last home game for seniors Ellerbrook, Chapman, Gallagher and Samuelson by gliding past the Black Bears, 103-71. With the victories piling up the idea of the Redmen getting invited to a post-season tourney became more than just a distant hope. A sign among the Cage gathering at this game read, "To the NIT with Julius 'E' ".

GAME 24 - AT NEW HAMPSHIRE: This was the last game of the regular season for the Redmen and they made it, winning 92-75, for a final record of 18-6. With this victory came the tie with UConn for the Conference championship.

At this time and for the next five days the atmosphere on this campus was one of concern about UMass' chances of receiving a bid to the NIT. That bid did come, sneaking in the back door of Saturday, March 7.

What led up to this big day and the full story on the crazy week that followed can be found on this page. For the few days it lasted, the events that surrounded the Redmen basketball team and its experiences involving the NIT produced one of the greatest legends in the annals of UMass sports history.

A Cavalcade Of Coaches For The Frosty Season

All Stories By MARK VOGLER, Staff Reporter

Jack Leaman . . . Basketball

In just four years at the helm head coach Jack Leaman has brought basketball to its best on the UMass hardwood. The climax came last season when the Redmen registered a club record-breaking high of 18-7, smashing the previous peak set a campaign earlier. On top of that the Yankee Conference titleists roared to a top-seeded ranking in New England and later attained their premiere entry to the NIT.

His overall career credentials of 60-38 (32-8 in Yan Con tilts) is indicative of Leaman's well-tutored teams which have landed three consecutive conference crowns.

UMass has put together some solid squads over the past two decades, but basketball is definitely in its prime now and Leaman credits it to the coaching staff's approach.

"Our biggest alteration has been a change to a positive attitude. We no longer think negative. We think in terms of what can be done rather than he impossible. And it certainly has been reflected in our success.

"I think that any time you find success you find a great deal of effort put into it. Coach Broaca has put long and lonely hours in on the road recruiting student athletes to UMass. Once they're here we spend lengthy hours teaching them that winning is all right, that they can win, and that the Massachusetts' way is the way to play.

"The coaching staff spends a while studying opponents and preparing game plans that will best suit our club to play and to win the game. Coaching! is a continuous occupation, not a 9-5 job. Many of the decisions are made after midnight as tchowor why we play a team a particular way."

A graduate of Cambridge Latin High School, Leaman later went on to star for Boston University in basketball, captaining the Terrier team (1958-59) which got as far as the Eastern N.C.A.A. Regional finals, only to bow to Jerry West and West Virginia, 86-82.

Upon graduation he coached the Terrier Freshman unit and piloted Mills High School to one of it finer finishes the following winter. In 1961 Leaman entered the UMass basketball picture tending to the frosh dive. And during that four-year tenure he relished reasonable success, racking up 43 victories against 14 setbacks. His link from freshman coaching to the big time was sandwiched around a year of scouting and recruiting for the varsity.

With the resignation of head UMass coach Johnny Orr in 1966, Leaman became a sound shoe-in for the vacancy and has done an admirable job since his entrance.

"Too many people put the image of a coach at the win-at-all-costs level," stated Leaman, adding, "I think it's a bum rap. In most cases performance is what we look for. But we want each one of our kids to think like a winner, accept winning graciously, and defeat not as a loss but as setback-as something we build on towards success."

Ray Wilson . . . Basketball

Julius Erving was certainly a boom to the basketball club last year, but he wasn't the only fringe benefit that UMass has received from Roosevelt High (N.Y.) in the past. Erving's former coach, Ray Wilson, joined the varsity coaching ranks in 1969 as an assistant. He supplimented Peter Broaca's scouting and recruiting work nicely, proving to be a valuable boost to the Redmen on the road to their first NIT berth.

"Basically my philosophy is to simulate coaches Leaman and Broaca," states Wilson, "If it wasn't we'd have difficulty in operating."

Wilson, like Leaman and Broaca, is a graduate of Boston University and also lettered in basketball just as his coaching mates did.

In seven years at Roosevelt (Long Island, N.Y.) High, Wilson's teams sported an enviable 86-37 mark. Having coached schoolboy ball for a sizeable duration, and presently getting a taste of the varsity brand, Wilson elaborates on some slight adjustments he had to make:

"As a coach the big difference is being able to deal with the type of athlete which will fit into your system. In high school you have to work with the best 15 players who come out for the team, whereas in college you recruit your material from a highly-talented selection.

"A common situation that I've dealt with in high school is that basketball for many of them is a means to get into college. And it becomes necessary for them to acquire the proper exposure.

"In college you go three or four times a week and each tilt is a big one. On the high school level things aren't quite the same. You normally play twice a week and the team can usually anticipate its rough encounters ahead of time.

"Probably one thing that I've overlooked in terms of the high school situation is that the majority of players that we recruited this year haven't played in front of 4,000 screaming students. I think that this is a big adjustment in itself and I as the coach must be prepared to cope with the problem."

Peter Broaca . . . BBall

Now that the soccer season is over and done with, coach Peter Broaca finds more time on his hands. But as one of the busiest members of the UMass athletic department, the freshman basketball mentor must set his energy afresh to the upcoming season.

This past fall the Redman soccer skipper piloted his booters to a dandy 7-2-2 finish and the school's first Yankee Conference championship in the sport. But even with the soccer season is full swing, Broaca awaited the quick transition to basketball and was equally prepared to prime his hoopsters for a lengthy winter campaign.

Broaca originated his coaching career in 1960 at Castleton (Vt.) College while serving a stint as head baseball coach and basketball assistant. Switching his sights to the schoolboy scene from 1962-65, he was an assistant skipper in baseball, basketball and soccer for Northern Valley Regional High School in Demarest, New Jersey.

In one year as head mentor for the Pascack Hills High hoopsters (Montvale, N.J.), the native from Hyannis tempered a 12-11 mark and a state tournament berth out of a club which salvaged just one game out of 20 a season before.

Broaca is approaching his fifth year as freshman basketball coach at UMass. In a four year span, his teams have amassed a record of 39-29, including a perfect 15-0 slate in 1968-69.

In 1968 he took over the soccer helm on an interm basis with the club compiling a 4-6-1 log. But last year the Redmen rolled up an impressive 6-4 mark to secure runnerup honors in the conference.

"My job as freshman basketball coach," asserts Broaca, "is to get the newcomers ready to play college varsity ball and hopefully as sophomores they'll bet set to go. I generally strive to prepare a sophomore to step into a starting role."

Coach Jack Leaman regards Wilson highly and had this to say: "Ray joined us last year and is presently working with Coach Broaca in recruiting students, scouting opponents and preparation of game plans. Before it was just Peter and myself. Ray has been a valuable asset to both of us."

Jack Canniff . . Hockey

Since his initial campaign as puck master, Jack Canniff has pulled the hockey squad by its boot straps and molded a winner here at UMass for the first time since 1960-61.

From a feeble 5-15 mark in his rookie season, to a 9-12 record the following winter, he gradually worked up to a respectable 10-8 log last year. Canniff has developed a very progressive program which has shown traces of improvement annually and there's no telling what heights the Redmen will hit in the not-too-distant future.

Canniff enjoyed a long and successful stint at Gloucester High where the North Shore school boasted a classy 104-30-20 slate and secured nine state tourney berths in 11 campaigns.

From there he stepped into the UMass command post in April of 1967. Asked why he decided to take a stab at collegiate hockey, the Boston College alumnus replied: "When you're in any field there's always some other goal that you would like to attain. After being in high school coaching for so long I sought a change of pace. Wanting to continue I thought I might try out the collegiate level."

Canniff feels that hockey is the type of sport where you must have the personnel in order to go places. As he puts it:

"The basis of success here is the individuals and the talent that you have to work with. It depends on the players and how much desire they have to win and are willing to sacrifice. These are certain elements that if you don't have them, you're not going to be successful. It takes an all-out effort.

"The role of the coach is definitely to instill an interest and a desire to win and to develop a certain cohesiveness in the unit you're using. Otherwise it won't function properly. You try to develope and maintain their poise no matter what the situation, because once you lose that poise, you're susceptible to anything."

Caniff figures the newly added assistance of Russell Kidd to be a binomial plus and says it should help streamline hockey's headway.

"Being an alumnus of UMass, Coach Kidd has an excellent hockey background. I feel he can aid in upgrading this program and should help our recruiting situation tremendously.

"Previously I had to do all the recruiting myself. With nobody to fill in for me during practices, doing an adequate job in covering the area was tough. But since Russ' contacts and associations are now the same as mine, naturally it should help broaden our recruiting program."

Russ Kidd . . . Hockey

Former UMass hockey great Russ Kidd returns to the rink for the Redmen after about a 15-year absence, and this time as a coach. A 1956 graduate of UMass, Kidd set all kinds of school records on the ice and hopes that he can be of assistance on the other side of the fence with his new position.

Sizing up his expectations optimistically, he refers to the recruiting area just as Canniff did:

"Well this is the first time that they have made a freshman hockey and lacrosse coach a fulltime chore. I feel that not only will I be a big help in developing what talent we have on campus, but my presence will also enable us to cover much more recruiting ground and scouting area. Jack is busy and can't always place enough emphasis on recruiting. But between the two of us we should be able to get out and sell the university a lot stronger than has been done in the past."

Prior to his appointment to the Redman coaching staff, Kidd had been employed at Canton High School under a triple assignment: hockey coach, assistant football mentor and a phys. ed. instructor. His coaching experience also includes brief service at Deerfield Academy, Portland (Maine) High School, and Scituate High.

A standout schoolboy athlete at Melrose, Kidd went on to earn his B.S. and M.S. degrees from UMass. As a three-letter man for the Redmen he competed in football, lacrosse and hockey, captaining the later. For his exclusive ability and dedication as a senior athlete he was feted with the Samuel Crossman trophy.

Being familiar with the crisis in younger years, he sites the Redmen not having their own rink as a major hindrance.

"Our biggest problem, of course, is not having our own rink. When you interest a boy in UMass hockey, he'd like to know where he's gonna skate. And you would like something to show that would appeal to him. This has been a problem since I went to school. Almost every school has their own facility and we hope that we'll have ours before long."

As far as his own coaching philosophy goes, Kidd is a firm believer in the works of Otto Unruh, revealed on a strip of paper which is displayed on his desk top: "Remember that you are a teacher on the practice field, a general during the game, a humble hero in victory, and a father to the boys in defeat." These words of wisdom may be found in How to Coach Winning Football.

Ray Ellerbrook . . . Basketball

A mighty fine high school athlete and a phenomenal success on the collegiate scene, Ray Ellerbrook likes trying his hand in the coaching circle this time around as an assistant to freshman coach Peter Broaca.

In his senior year at Hawthorne High (New Jersey), the unforseen college prospect put on some nifty performances for his school's basketball and baseball teams which established mediocre showings of 5-17 and 7-11 respectively.

He gunned in 25 points per outing with the hoop squad and was immense on the diamond with a robust .400 average and a 3-1 pitching slate. Although these figures were impressive, in the shadow of defeat, attaining stature with a loser v as touch. It appeared that no big name colleges were interested in Ellerbrook.

Meanwhile Peter Broaca, who at the time was coaching Pascak Hills High, had a fondness in this guy's talent. And upon his appointment as freshman basketball coach in 1966, he approached Ellerbrook and attempted to interest him in UMass. The star-to-be was sot on attending Bridgeport (Conn.) at the time. But a visit and frequent chats with the athletic staff made such an impression on Ellerbrook that he reconsidered his choice.

In a breath of confidence head hoop coach Jack Leaman complimented the newest addition to the basketballer's brain trust: "Ray was one of the finest basketball players that ever played at Massachusetts. Due to a change in major in his junior year he has an extra semester. We're happy to have him in our program to pass on to the incoming freshmen some of the ideas of our program and philosophy. It's effective to have the freshmen see someone who has been successful and know an idea of what success is."

WHY NOT?-Using the campus pond for home hockey games is not that bad an idea when one considers that UMass has no home hockey facility and has to borrow Amherst College's Orr Rink for these affairs. (Cartoon by Fred Rosenthal)

UMass basketball players and their fans will have a chance to return to this scene when the Redmen play George Washington University right here on Feb. 27, 1971.

THE NOW-EXTINCT DUNK SHOT—Bill Tindall, a former UMass hoop star, is shown in his sophomore year recording one of the last stuff shots seen during game action at the Cage. Since that time dunk-shooting during action has been disallowed and this year even the pre-game warm-ups will have to be run without the aid of the crowd-pleasing "jam." A related story about this new ruling appears "In This Corner" on page 19. (MDC photo by John Kelly)

sponsored by
National Peace Action Coalition

The massive opposition to further continuation of U.S. involvement in the Indochina War has reached a new high point. The American people are war-weary and are less and less disposed to tolerate the hardships which the war imposes on their lives. The door is now open to achieve the long sought goal: the complete and total withdrawal of all U.S. Forces from Southeast Asia.

Dec. 4-6, 1970
Chicago, Ill.
Packinghouse
Labor Center

Millions of Americans are prepared to work in a united and organized way to end the war. They support the demand for immediate withdrawal from Southeast Asia. They will act to end the draft which expires in June, 1971. The antiwar movement must provide the necessary leadership.

On December 4-6, 1970, a national convention of the U.S. antiwar movement will be convened by the National Peace Action Coalition in Chicago. The convention will begin with keynote speakers, Friday, Dec. 4, and Plenary Sessions will open Saturday morning, December 5. The purpose of this convention is to plan massive antiwar activities for the spring. Everyone who opposes the war is invited to attend.

All who register for the convention will have voice and vote. The Chicago convention is expected to be the largest and most significant anti-war meeting yet held. The several thousand anti-war activists who attend will decide the future cause of the American anti-war movement.

Previewing Redman Hoop Opponents

GAME 1 - ST. ANSELM'S
(See page 20)
GAME 2, 17 - VERMONT: COACH ART LOCHE (6th year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 8-16
NICKNAME: CATAMOUNTS
PROSPECTS: There are only four veterans returning from last year's dismal season, and this coupled with the loss of Vermont's only consistent scorer, Frank Martiniuk, all point toward another long, cold winter in Burlington.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: Leading returnees include three starters. Among them are Captain Tom Clay, an eight-point scorer, strong rebounding forward Mark Miller, and junior guard Ray Ortiz, who averaged in double figures over the second half of last season. 6'7 John Deibert is also back to give some beef up front, along with veterans Rich Trela and Todd Schill. Leading sophomores include guards Larry Beck and Jim Ducey, forward Greg Ashford and center George Peredey. It is a young club with Clay being the only senior.
GAME 3, 21 - RHODE ISLAND: COACH TOM CARMODY (3rd year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 16-10.
NICKNAME: RAMS
PROSPECTS: Fine sophomores and three returning starters will make Rhody as usual pretty tough to beat. Lack of height and loss of stars John Fultz and Claude English will hurt though.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: The Rams rely on transfers usually to boost their hoop program and two such transfers are back to make the hoop picture bright. Guard Dwight Tolliver, an 11-point scorer, and Nate Adger, another 11-point scorer are back. In addition a non-transfer, Phil Hickson, a nine-point scorer will also return. Height is a problem with forwards Adger and Hickson only 6'4. Two top sophomores will probably crack the starting five, guard Jose Pari, a 20-point frosh scorer and 6'5 forward Steve Rowell, with a 25-point freshman average.
Rhody will go as far as its sharpshooters can carry it, and will be a
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 12-11.

Larranaga--P.C.

DiGregorio--P.C.

Taylor--UConn

NICKNAME: WILDCATS.
PROSPECTS: A conference darkhorse, with a bunch of veterans from a year ago that produced the first winning season in 18 years. Good sophs will also help.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: UNH were winners for the first time in almost two decades a year ago under new coach Gerry Friel, and they have the principle cast back. Leading them will be junior forward Dave Pemberton, a 17-point scorer and 10 rebound man, along with guard Dwight Peters, who averaged 13-points per game. Another veteran is 6'4 forward Tom Weir. The best of the newcomers will be 6'6 JC transfer Greg Jackson, sophomore Jack Fogerty, a 15-point scorer as a frosh, and 6'4 sophomore McKeen Kessel. Also back is 6'6 center Frank Davis who missed last year with a knee injury.
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 14-9.
NICKNAME: HUSKIES
PROSPECTS: A fine returning cast, momentum from a storybook finish a year ago, and a rabid basketball tradition make UConn a strong challenger for Yankee Conference honors.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: A bitter Redman rival in all sports, the basketball rivalry is no exception. The Huskies were voted the most improved New England team a year ago, and they have most of the talent back. Leading them will be guard Bob Boyd, a fine scorer and always a threat to steal, and so is sharpshooting Bob Staak, who may be moved to forward to help out a weak position. Guard Doug Melody is also back. A fine sophomore prospect at the backcourt spot is Lee Barbach. Up front, UConn will have 6'5 Ron Hrubala and 6'5 Robert Taylor returning, along with Phil Hoagland. Top sophomores are 6'9 Pat Devries and 6'7 Bob Parsons. UConn will probably go as far as its questionable frontcourt can carry it.
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 17-8.
NICKNAME: YELLOW JACKETS
PROSPECTS: Ineligibility, administrative problems, a new coach, have made a potentially great team into one big question mark.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: A.I.C. looked excellent on paper a couple of months ago and seemingly assured of a fourth straight NCAA college division berth. But then, starters Curtis Mitchell, Al Carter, Ron Hill and Mike White became ineligible in addition to some top sophomores being questionable and it all makes the whole A.I.C. picture muddled. Some of the sidelined stars may be back midway through the season, and if so, A.I.C. can still be tough.
PROSPECTS: A tough schedule, may be balanced by a lot of experience and make Hofstra an above .500 team.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: The Dutchmen play a rough schedule that includes such powers as Manhattan, LaSalle, St. Joseph's and Temple, but Hofstra held its own a year ago, to place second in the eastern section of the Middle Atlantic Conference. Nine returning lettermen ease the situation. Among them is a 6'6 forward and high school teammate of Redman star Julius Erving, junior Quinas Brown. He is joined up front by returnees 6'8 center Dave Bell, and 6'4 forward Richie Burke. Returning guards include Gary Doyle and Ray Ingram, along with Jim Pugh and Tom Kelliher. A top sophomore prospect is 6'5 guard Larry Perry. Hofstra will be playing in a brand new 3200 seat center this year and they should christen it with a good season.
GAME 8 - FAIRFIELD (In Springfield Hall of Fame tourney) GAMES 9, 10 also in tourney.
COACH: FRED BARAKAT (1st year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 13-13.
NICKNAME: STAGS
PROSPECTS: A tough year may be in store for Fairfield who lost two stars and have little to replace them with.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: Mel Brown, a 6'5 transfer and 6'2 soph George Groom who averaged 25 as a frosh, will be the top guns, along with guard Bob Kelly, in a bleak outlook.
OTHER FIRST ROUND TOURNEY PAIRINGS:
ST. MICHAELS vs SPRINGFIELD COLLEGE AIC vs COLGATE
VALPARISO vs LONG ISLAND U.
GAME 11 - BOSTON UNIVERSITY: COACH CHARLIE LUCE (5th year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 14-10.
NICKNAME: TERRIERS
PROSPECTS: Loss of big stars Jim Hayes and Marty Schoepfer make a .500 season a tough goal.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: B.U. will have no returnee who scored in double figures a year ago, and the gaps left by Hayes and Schoepfer may be too much to fill. Among the best is sophomore James Garvin, who averaged 20 points as a freshman and is a fine rebounder. Also co-captain Richie Taylor and soph guards Vic Gathers and Mike Sheehan will help.
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 14-11.
NICKNAME: FRIARS
PROSPECTS: It's been a couple of years in the making, but pass the word, the Friars are back. They will score a lot but questionable rebound strength and a brutal schedule may temper things a bit.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: Providence has everyone back from its high-scoring unit of a year ago, and the presence of such veteran talent as Jim Larranaga, Ray Johnson, Vic Collucci, Don Lewis, and Gary Wilkins alone would make the Friars look good. But a wealth of some of the best sophomores in the east could make PC great. Leading the newcomers will be guard Ernie Digregorio, a ball-handling magician and 28 per game scorer as a frosh. A lot is expected from Massachusetts All-Scholastic star Fran Costello, a 6'7 forward and a prep school teammate of DiGregario's, 6'4 Nehru King. 6'5 soph forward Charlie Crawford will see a lot of action. A schedule that includes participation in the Volunteer Classic, and the Holiday Festival in New York, plus perennials like Niagara, St. John's, Duquesne, Villanova, St. Bonaventure's, Creighton, in addition to Holy Cross, B.C. and UMass, is probably the toughest in New England.
GAME 13 - FORDHAM: COACH DICK PHELPS (1st year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 10-15.
NICKNAME: RAMS
PROSPECTS: A tough team to figure, what with seven lettermen returning, but little height, some sophomores and a new coach. A rugged slate of games, may make the always tough Rams hard-pressed to better the .500 mark.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: The Rams have their two top scorers of a year ago returning, 15-point scorer Charlie Yelverton, and 14-point man Bill Mainor. Also back are guards John Burik, Steve Cain and Peter Carlesimo. Fordham however has only one man over 6'5 and he is sophomore Paul Griswold, a 6'8 center. Also top newcomers will be 6'2 guard Ken Charles and 6'5 forward Bart Woytowicz. The Rams face such teams as Marquette, Temple, Notre Dame, and Army, in addition to all New York city schools, so it won't be an easy year.
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 14-8.
NICKNAME: HUSKIES
PROSPECTS: (No information available at press time).
GAME 15 - HOLY CROSS: COACH JACK DONOHUE (6th year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 16-9.
NICKNAME: CRUSADERS
PROSPECTS: Could be one of the best teams in the east. Has everything; size, speed, shooting, experience and depth. An excellent basketball team, probably the team to beat in New England.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: Holy Cross will have its best team in six years.
All returning starters are back and so is last year's sixth man. And if not enough, then there are the fine sophomores. Leading the returnees are Bob Kissane, a 6'8 forward with a 22-point scoring average, 6'8 Don Sasso, a 10-point, 11 rebound man, 6'4 forwardStan Grayson, another tough rebounder, guards Jack Adams, a 12-point scorer and Buddy Venne, a long range bombadier who averaged 17.
Jim Schnurr, a 6'6 soph who averaged 24 points a year ago, and 6'8 Gene Doyle, a 19-point scorer as a frosh will add a lot of frontcourt depth, while Kevin Stacom will add backcourt depth. This is a team that is capable of handling its always rugged schedule.
GAME 16 - IONA: COACH JIM McDERMOTT (24th year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 12-12.
NICKNAME: GAELS
PROSPECTS: (No information available at press time).
GAME 18 - BOSTON COLLEGE: COACH CHUCK DALY
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 11-13.
NICKNAME: EAGLES
PROSPECTS: A good blend of veterans, transfers, sophomores and a potentially explosive backcourt make the Eagles a sure bet to improve over last year.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: Brilliant guard Jim O'Brien, a 16-point scorer and eye-catching ballhandler will lead the Eagles. He'll be joined in the backcourt by transfer Rick Bolus who averaged over 30 ppg. as a VMI freshman. In addition soph Bob Smith will help the backcourt. Up front the loss of center Tom Verroneau will hurt but the return of forwards Frank Fitzgerald, a 14-point scorer and Vin Costello, who averaged 11 will help. Sophomores, Dave Freitag and Tom Anstett will be a big asset in the frontcourt, as will 6'7 Peter Schmid, who has recovered from mono which plagued him a year ago.
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 17-8.
NICKNAME: CHIEFS
PROSPECTS: (No information available at press time)
GAME 22, 26 - MAINE: COACH GIB PHILBRICK (3rd year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 7-17.
NICKNAME: BLACK BEARS
PROSPECTS: A young but experienced team with seven lettermen, and talent from an undefeated freshman team make Maine improved. Lack of backcourt skill will hurt.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: Maine's two top scorers return, center Nick Susi, a 6'5 junior and 6'4 Craig Randall, both 12-point scorers. Returning guard Paul Bessey, will lead the backcourt, veterans John Sterling and Bruce Stinson will help up front. Top sophomore will be 6'6 forward Peter Gavett, who averaged 20 points and 13 rebounds as a frosh, along with 6'4 guard Jimmy Jones and Steve Lane. The loss of Marshall Todd will hurt.
GAME 23 - SYRACUSE: COACH ROY DANFORTH (3rd year)
LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 12-12.
NICKNAME: ORANGEMEN
PROSPECTS: Star center Bill Smith is still a question mark, due to disciplinary problems, and Syracuse hopes for a winning season will rise and fall with him.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: Bill Smith, a 6'11 center who averaged 20 points a game was suspended a year ago for an altercation, and his case is still being reviewed. With him there, along with returnee 6'7 Bob McDaniel, a 17-point scorer, Syracuse was the 14th best offensive team in the country.
GAME 24 - GEORGE WASHINGTON (Game at Madison Square Garden) COACH CARL STONE (1st year) LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 12-15. NICKNAME: COLONIALS
PROSPECTS: A host of returning vets and some fine sophomore potential make the always tough Colonials even tougher. A key could be the status of star Mike Tallent who has questionable knees.
CAPSULE PREVIEW: GW will have to bank on a healthy year from sharpshooting Mike Tallent, who averaged 21 points a game, but is hampered by ailing knees, to have a really fine year. Also returning is another high scorer, Walt Szczerbiak who averaged 17 a year ago. Junior guard, Ronnie Nunn, a high school All-American who disappointed a year ago is being looked at for improvement.

Frosh Try To Offset Lack of Size With Shooting

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Tonight at 6 p.m. the UMass freshmen basketball team begins the 1970-71 campaign and rebounding will be foremost in its minds. The lack of height on this year's squad could present many problems, but the team's shooting ability and quickness look to adequately balance this deficiency.

In his fifth year at the helm, Coach Peter Broaca is looking forward to a running ballclub. This running squad will have a front line of 6'5 center John Olson (Somerville, Mass.), 6'5 forward Art Levine (Hillside, New Jersey), and 6'2 1/2 forward Al Skinner (Malverne, New York). In the backcourt the frosh will feature 6'3 Peter Trow (Old Rochester H.S., Mass.) and Rich Pitino, (St. Dominic's, New York) a 5'll guard.

With the tallest man at 6'5, the boards will no doubt be a problem. Said Coach Broaca, "In comparison with the rest of New England we definitely have a small team. But we have shown some excellent shooting ability and a good deal of quickness. We just have to look for more consistent shooting."

This year Broaca will be carrying only ten men, a sharp decline from the 15 boys he had on last year's freshman team. The five player decrease has to do with player's playing time, and with this year's running club the five substitutes are sure to see a good deal of action.

Backing up the starting five are two more 6'5 players, namely Craig Boyles, a center-forward, and Mike Brown, a forward. Peter McMahon, at 6'2 1/2 is also a front line man and Larry Heron, 6'1 and Dennis McHugh, 6'2, will be the backup backcourt men. Whereas just two of the starting five are home-staters, the freshmen bench will be all Massachusetts boys.

Adjusting is a big part of freshman ball, and Broaca had this to say, "All of these boys were THE players at their high schools. They did it all, they were the super star. What is important when they start playing college ball is the realization that everyone else is just as good."

The question next turns to "how good" this freshmen team is. Said Broaca, "I don't like to compare anybody to anybody, especially before they have proven themselves. I think we have a fine ballclub, and I have worked my players hard. I am quite staisfied. But I would not like to prejudge their abilities. Our schedule is a tough one and I think that this squad will have a good chance to prove itself as the season progresses."

The tough schedule that Broaca mentioned includes Boston College, Boston University, Holy Cross, St. Thomas More and UConn, with the Little Redmen facing UConn both home and away. St. Thomas More, a new addition to the freshman's 19-game schedule, will be just one of 13 home games that the frosh will play.

Defensively the Little Redmen will be working on a straight man to man setup. But man to man presses, as well as zone presses, will also be a part of their style, as the running and gambling types of defense will be called upon from time to time.

Offensively there should be a good deal of fast breaking, which makes the reduction of turnovers that much more of an important factor. But the key at both ends will be rebounding. If the freshmen can hold their own in that department they should be in for a fine season. Otherwise who knows. By 8 p.m. tonight, after the St. Anselm's game, we should have a good idea about this freshman team's capabilities. Commented Coach Broaca, "We'll just wait and see, and as we play we'll see exactly what we have."

Solid Fr. Hockey Team Will Open Against BC

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Freshman hockey coach Russell Kidd was cautiously optimistic when asked to assess his team's chances for this season which starts Saturday night at 6:15 at Orr Rink against Boston College.

"We've got a good club. We have overall size and depth, and we're in good shape in every position with three solid lines, five good defensemen, and three fine goalies, each of whom I wouldn't hesitate to start. However, we do have a real challenging schedule – as tough as any freshman schedule around."

Kidd mentioned BC, Yale, Harvard and Dartmouth as the teams he expects to give the Little Redmen the most trouble.

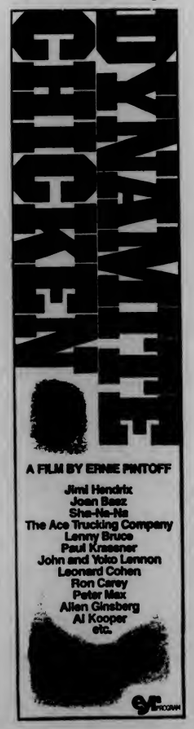
Pat Egan-Mahtomedi, Minn. and Peter Hanifan-Malden make up one defensive pairing, and Tom Casey-Dorchester and Chuck Londraville-Chicopee are the other pairing. Bill Vachon-Easthampton is the alternate defenseman.



Chick Rheault-So.Boston, the all E-Mass Tournament goalie in 1968 will start in the nets for the frosh. His back-ups are Charlie Sheridan-Stoneham and John Binkoski-Arlington.

Kidd feels the frosh will have to come up with a good team effort to beat a "loaded" B.C. team.

Summing up his team's prospects, Kidd said, "They looked good in a scrimmage against Mt. St. Charles, beating them 10-3. They've also skated fairly well with the varsity. I wish we had a little more speed, and our defensemen are a little small, but we've got a lot of depth, a good goalie and guys that can score – so no one is going to push us around."

passing attack was considerably sharper, as it dominated play in the Lowell zone for 17 minutes of the 20-minute period.

Sophomore Lonnie Avery scored at the 0:21 mark when Don Lowe sent Mike Waldron in on Girard. Waldron's shot was blocked, but Avery gathered in the rebound and banged it home. Sophomore Riley scored his second goal of the night when he scored on Shea's rebound at 7'19. Two minutes later Keenan scored again when he took Edward's pass in the left corner, went towards the side of the net, faked the defenseman towards the corner, then drilled a shot to the right side beating Girard.

At 10:13, Keenan scored his second goal of the period when he took a rebound shot from a pile-up in front, circled behind the net and came out to the right of Girard, who stood up and watched Keenan beat him to the corner of the goal. Keenan completed his hat trick during the second period and his fifth of the game, when Reidy made a good play, digging the puck out of the corner and centering to Keenan who was breaking towards the front of the net.

Last year's leading varsity scorer, Edwards, hit his first goal of the year when he took Keenan's face-off pass and beat Girard at the 19':55 mark giving the Redmen a 9-0 lead after two periods.

Keenan scored number six when he took a pass from Fran Mulcahy and beat Craycroft to the left side of the net. Forty-six seconds later Edwards scored his second goal of the night when Keenan sent Rick Anerson in on the left. Anderson's shot rebounded off of Craycroft's pads and Edwards blasted the rebound home.

The most unusual goal of the night occurred at 9:19 when Shilalie took a long shot from the point. The shot hit the post but instead of rebounding out, it dropped down in front of the net. While Craycroft couldn't locate the shot, Keenan circled the net and tipped it in.

Lowe scored his first varsity goal at 11:32, assists going to Sullivan and Riley. UMass scored numbers 15 and 16 ten seconds apart when Shea scored his second goal with Scrafield getting his third assist of the night, at 18:44. At 18:54, Mike Waldron tipped in Anderson's shot from the point for the sixteenth and final UMass tally.

ICE CHIPS—The Redmen won the game with their aggressive play in the corners and effective forechecking. Erickson had a big save in the third period when he stopped Mike McElligott's breakaway attempt.

UMass has a big weekend series with Division I RIVAL Pennsylvania here Friday afternoon at 4 p.m. and Saturday night the Redmen take on Division II powerhouse Vermont, led by ECAC Division II goalie Dave Reese, also at home. Face-off is 8:30 p.m.

We think it's a remarkable innovation. But an electric car it's not.

As a garden tractor for home use, Elec-Trak[1] can take advantage of characteristics that would be distinct disadvantages in an electric car.

The availability of fuel is no problem for Elec-Trak. It's designed for limited use near electrified structures, making overnight recharging possible.

The heavy weight of the battery, which would slow down a car, means greater applied traction for Elec-Trak.

Because Elec-Trak must travel at slow speeds to do its jobs, there are no aerodynamic energy losses to take into consideration.

Still, one might expect Elec-Trak to be the forerunner of a pollution-free automobile. Perhaps it is. But there are many crucial problems left to be solved.

The most important one, of course, is the development of a substantially better electric battery. Any car built today would be severely limited in range and performance, and probably prohibitively expensive.

We've experimented with zinc-air batteries. Sodium-sulfur batteries. Silver-zinc batteries. Lithium-halogen batteries. And others. There are problems with all of them. Problems of life-span, cost, practicality.

Despite the problems, General Electric scientists and engineers are working for the breakthrough that will make electric cars possible.

Maybe the breakthrough is closer than we think. But we'll continue to work and leave the predictions to someone else.

Why are we running this ad?

We're running this ad, and others like it, to tell you the things General Electric is doing to solve the problems of man and his environment today.

The problems concern us because they concern you. We're a business and you are potential customers and employees.

But there's another, more important reason. These problems will affect the future of this country and this planet. We have a stake in that future. As businessmen. And, simply, as people.

We invite your comments. Please write to General Electric, 570 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Gametimes Detailed For Basketball And Hockey

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

The following are a few loose notes that are pertinent to this issue and that are best printed in a group. . . . thusly:

HOOP 'N' HOCKEY HOME COOKING-Most home varsity basketball games, including tonight's, will be served at 8 p.m. at Curry Hicks Cage, which for those who don't know, is that dingy, pyramid-shaped building just to the south of Bartlett Hall.

Out of this year's 13 home tilts, there are five exceptions to the 8 p.m. tap-off time and those are the games against New Hampshire (Dec. 12), Northeastern (Jan. 30), Vermont (Feb. 6), Connecticut (Feb. 13) and Maine (Feb. 20), which will all start at 7:30 p.m. instead.

At all home basketball contests a freshman game will be played two hours prior.

Varsity hockey games at home begin at differing times. All of them are played at Orr Rink, which is located on the Amherst College campus. Excluding last week's home opener against Lowell Tech, five of the remaining home games will start at 8 p.m., two at 8:30 p.m., two at 2 p.m. and one at 4 p.m.

Frosh hockey games get under way at three different times. Four home affairs will begin at 6:15 p.m., two at 3 p.m. and one at 4 p.m. All frosh home games will also be at Orr Rinks.

Only two times all winter do the varsity basketball and hockey teams play home contests on the same dates. On Dec. 18, the Redman hoopsters will host American International at 8 p.m., and the UMass pucksters will welcome Norwich to Orr, also at 8 p.m. The other date clash is Feb. 20, which has hoop vs. Maine at 7:30 p.m. and hockey vs. Boston State a few hours prior, at 2 p.m.

NEW CAGE FLOOR- The Cage will sport its almost brand new floor at tonight's game. This floor is almost 60 percent new wood, having been refurbished for the upcoming season, when the 100 percent old one was found to be wharped.

BASKETBALL PROGRAMS-A new and improved, 24-page program, sponsored by the UMass Varsity M Club, will be sold for 25 cents at all home basketball games this winter. This fine booklet will contain full rosters of the freshman and varsity teams playing, a full page of up-to-date Redman statistics, information on UMass' game opponent, Varsity M Club notes, the usual "Smoke Signals," a new cover for each game and a feature story by one of several guest writers. In all, nine pages will change from game to game. The proceeds gathered from the sale of these programs will go to the general support of Redman athletics.

VARSITY M WINTER LUNCHEONS-Weekly Varsity M Club Luncheons will be held throughout the winter on Wednesdays at the Newman Center. There will be 12 of these dinners; anyone willing to pay $1.50 is welcome to attend any one of these affairs. Here is a schedule by dates and speakers of the upcoming luncheons:

HOOP ON THE AIR-Two radio stations will be covering UMass basketball games this year. One is campus radio station WMUA, 91.1 FM. Ken Horseman will handle the play-by-play for these broadcasts and Dave Melvin will chip in with the color. Also covering Redman basketball will be WHMP, AM and FM of Northampton. Play-by-play announcer for this station will be Joseph Fennessey.

N. E. HOOP ON THE RISE-This winter should witness one of the greatest years of college basketball ever in New England. Along with UMass, the defending champion of the six-state region, there are two very strong and potentially great teams at Providence College and at Holy Cross, a couple of sleeping giants at Harvard and at Dartmouth, a solid team at Boston College and some Yankee Conference perennial toughies at Connecticut and at Rhode Island.

Coach Leaman has this to say about N. E. hoop for this campaign, "This will be the best year since I can remember. There are more outstanding teams than ever before." Adding one more name, New Hampshire, to the teams mentioned in the above paragraph Leaman comments, "I think there are eight basketball teams that could be New England champions."

A few years aback the big names in N. E. hoop belonged to Providence and BC. It may appear that both of these teams have slipped a bit in the past couple of years but Leaman firmly disagrees. He judges PC and BC to be as good as ever, clarifying, "The other programs have grown to catch them."

NO DUNKING-Once again, let it be pointed out that there can be no dunking by either basketball team in the pregame warmups tonight as referees will be on hand 30 minutes before the tilt itself starts in order to slap any violater with a technical foul should he break the rule that's been in existence now for four full years, but which has never been strictly enforced until the present time.

The NIT Story

SUNDAY, MARCH 8: By this time the 16th tourney team had been chosen and it was the second ACC squad, Duke. Marquette was conceited as the top seed in this NIT field, as it was the number eighth ranked team in the land and had turned down a chance to go to the bigger N.C.A.A. tournament, hoping to rack up on New York City's prestigious NIT. Pairings were announced this fine day. UMass was matched up against Marquette for Saturday night, the second day of the first round.

MONDAY, MARCH 9: 1750 student tickets arrived from New York late today and went on sale at 6:30 p.m. UMass students were quick to get the word and crowded the Boyden ticket office, gobbling up 1700 of the ducats. More would come and more would be sold.

TUESDAY, MARCH 10: More tickets came today and they were sold.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11: Another ticket-buying day. The Redmen were holding spirited practices.

THURSDAY, MARCH 12: UMass held its last Cage-practice in preparation for the NIT today. Leaman had some words to offer to those who thought the Redmen didn't stand a chance against Marquette, "If I thought we were going down there to get annihilated, I wouldn't have accepted the NIT bid."

FRIDAY, MARCH 13: The Redmen departed from outside the Cage on this day, arrived in N.Y.C. and took in some of the Friday night games of the first round.

SATURDAY, MARCH 14: A final preparation, a warm-up drill to give the players a feel of Madison Square Garden, was completed in the morning, and the way was paved for Ray Ellerbrook, Julius Erving, Jack Gallagher, Dick Samuelson, John Betancourt, Ken Mathias, Dennis Chapman, Mike Pagliara, Bob Dempsey, Bill Greeley, Rick Vogeley, Bill Kesgen, Sam Provo and Chris Coffin, coach Jack Leaman and 5,000 kids from UMass to write the concluding chapter to . . . . THE NIT STORY.

The game was scheduled for 9 p.m. Close to two hours before gametime, the UMass players and coach arrived at the Garden the took seats along courtside to watch the first half of the tilt that would precede their own. Close to the full measure of 5,000 Redman fans were there and, catching sight of their favorites in tneir maroon blazers, gave them a standing ovation, chanting "Let's go Redmen!" A spine-tingling thing for one to observe or take part in.

As tap-off time neared, Marquette was first to take the floor, giving the aggregate a gasping look at its spectacular pre-contest dunking drill. On another night the Warriors would have outshone the Redmen with this display but, backed by all those crazy people in the stands, UMass took the floor and warmed up amidst the roar of the crowd. Marquette?

The player-introduction ceremony was indeed a ceremony for UMass, as each one of the five starting Redmen received his plaudits in great measure. The game itself was super exciting. Erving played a solid board game, Ellerbrook came back after having a couple of shots soundly blocked to hit some key Redman hoops, and the two sophomore guards, Betancourt and Pagliara, took turns covering Marquette's All-American, Dean Meminger. He had to earn each of his 11 points.

The affair was tied at halftime, 27-27. It remained that tight until the final half of the final minute when the Warriors were out of the woods, 62-55. Over the last 60 seconds of action, the 5,000 on hand let the world know how they felt, repeatedly asserting, "We'll be back!".

Pregame No-Dunking Questioned

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Once again, the doors of the Cage open Tuesday night as another UMass varsity basketball season gets underway. And a lot of things will be the same as they were last season as the Redmen marched through a triumphant year to become kings of New England college basketball.

People will queue up hours before gametime in hopes of crowding into the outmoded Cage to get some view of their beloved Redmen. The P.A. announcer will make frequent requests that the fans push together so that a few more hardy people can squeeze into one of those plush bleacher seats. Everyone will leap to their feet at the first sign of the Redmen and cheer wildly as the ball players run through their lay-up drills to the tune of "Sweet Georgia Brown" played by the pep band.

But one thing will be different this year. For this season, the fans will not get to see Julius Erving jam the ball through the strings on one of his patented stuff shots. That's right. No longer can the tremendous junior bring the crowd to its feet with one of his double pump reverse dunks.

The reason for this change in procedure is simple. If any player stuffs the ball before the beginning of a game, his team will be assessed a technical foul.

Actually, the rule has existed for a while. Most basketball fans can remember a few years back when a rule prohibiting dunking was put in in an obvious move to hurt Lew Alcindor when Alcindor was leading UCLA to three straight N.C.A.A. crowns. However, few people realize that at the same time, dunking was actually prohibited in pregame warmups as well. The enforcement of this rule was left to the disgression of the individual coaches and it was felt that pregame dunking was implied by the spirit of the no dunk rule.

Since that time, most college teams have ignored the pregame dunking ban. As far as UMass is concerned, Coach Jack Leaman has always followed the rule that his team would not dunk until the opposition had done so. But for in the 1970-71 season, some changes have been made.

From now on, officials will be on the floor thirty minutes before gametime and will be watching for any dunking violations. The reason for this change in policy is that too many teams were violating the rule and that players were getting hurt as well as damaging equipment.

Coach Leaman is one of the outspoken opponents of the no dunk rule. "It's a stupid rule," exclaims the hoop mentor, "the dunk shot is to basketball what the home run is to baseball. It's what the fans come to see."

Leaman feels that the justification for the dunking edict is faulty and believes that it should be eliminated altogether.

"Injuries and damages only occur in a minute percentage of dunks and it is always these instances that get publicized. Coaches must put basketball above themselves and we must see what we can do to make it a better game."

Leaman also thinks that the rule is unfair and takes away from the game itself.

"99% of the time, if the defensive man has proper position no one can dunk the ball."

The ironic thing about the whole situation is that most coaches agree with Leaman's point of view. In fact, the coaches always vote to bring back the dunk. Leaman describes a time a few weeks ago when he was attending a coaches convention in New Hampshire.

"There were about 90 coaches there and I asked how many of them thought the rule should be abolished. About 70 coaches raised their hands. Then I asked how many favored the rule and no one raised his hand."

Why, then, does the rule still exist if even the coaches feel it is a needless prohibition? The only apparent answer is that the members of the rules committee are stubborn and are so above the game itself that they don't see that they are seriously hurting basketball. "If they want to take some of the advantage away from the big men," Leaman feels, "they should rule the basket higher instead of banning the dunk."

Eventually, the rules committee will likely come around and change the rule. However, this might not occur for two or three years or more. In the interim, many thousands of college basketball games will be played before millions of fans who will miss the excitement and thrill of the dunk shot.

From a selfish point of view, I feel bad because no longer will I get to see the fantastic feats of Julius Erving which were sometimes better than the games themselves.

But more than that, I feel bad for the freshmen and those who come after them who will never get to see what Julius Erving and other Julius Ervings to come can actually do.

In the end, however, I feel bad for the game of basketball. For it will suffer most.

UMass Basketball Bounces Back As Redmen Host St. A's Tonight

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

A very loyal UMass basketball fan best summed up tonight's home and season-opening tilt against St. Anselm's College, slated to begin at 8 p.m. at the Cage, when he commented, "I've been waiting for this game ever since the end of the NIT game against Marquette last year."

That's a long time – eight months, and now the big opening game is just hours away. A capacity crowd of 4200 is expected to be on hand tonight as the defending New England and Yankee Conference champions, the Redmen, embark on another campaign against a team they defeated last February, 94-63.

Except for one major entity, this will be the same Hawk squad that UMass won its 16th contest against last winter. That major entity is Dave Sturma, a 6'7 star center departed via graduation.

Sturma holds many St. Anselm's hoop records and was in the top ten of the nation's shooters in field goal percentage. He won a selection to the all-New England College Division team last season as he led the Hawks in scoring and rebounding.

Tough shoes to fill, and the call has gone out to Miles Gerrish, a 6'9 sophomore who has neither high school nor college freshman basketball experience. However, he is highly rated, especially by St. A's head coach Al Grenert, who has said, "He's going to surprise a lot of people."

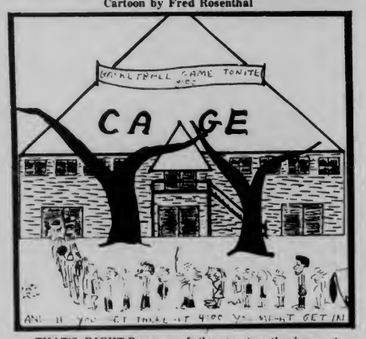
Gerrish's basketball experience comes solely from playing hoop in C.Y.O. and Y.M.C.A. leagues. In his favor he has determination, a will to learn, good coordination, good size and weight and good instincts for the game.

Outside of the center post, Grenert's 22nd Hawk contingent is in very good shape with five lettermen returning, four of whom started in '69-'70.

The guard positions will be shared by two seniors and one junior. One of the seniors is Tom Gentile, a real hustler at 5'11. He averaged 17.1 points per game last year. The other senior is Ray Moore, who plays more of a reserve role. He is a six-footer and his scoring average a year ago was 7.1. The probable starter alongside Gentile will be Gerry Ryle, the junior, who popped 'em in at a 9.0 rate last season. At six feet, he will handle the play-making duties of this club.

In the forward slots, one appears taken while the other is up for grabs. Captain John Lukas, a 6'3 senior, has earned a starting assignment, but the other post is being contested for not by lettermen, but by two sophomores in the persons of Jeff Grenert, 6'4, and Steve Pope, 6'3.

That fifth letterman is senior Mike Mulligan, who will be a jack-of-all-trades this year, filling in as a backup center, and a backup forward, where he may also get an occasional starting nod. Mulligan is 6'5 and his point average was 8.7 last year.



Up from the St. A's freshman team to provide needed depth are a couple of sophs, Vincent Colapietro, a 5'10 guard, and Bill Walsh, a 6'2 guard.

Overall the Hawks are looking for improved rebounding and solid reserve play as keys to a successful campaign. Gerrish will be counted upon to develop quickly. St. Anselm's notched a berth in the N.C.A.A. College Division basketball tourney a year ago and would like to do the same this time around. It would like nothing better than to start fitting the pieces together against UMass tonight.

HOOP NOTES - UMass head coach Jack Leaman had a couple of things to say about St. A's, "They have a veteran ballclub. I think we'll be in for a good ballgame."...In comparing the Hawks to other teams the Redmen must play this season, Leaman was less plauditory of them, cautioning, "If we can't beat a team the caliber of St. Anselm's, it's going to be a long year."...After that long wait between the end of the Marquette-NIT game and tonight's contest, it's hopeful that UMass will get a quick jump on what really doesn't shape up to be a long year.

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

Last Tuesday evening before an SRO crowd at Orr Rink, sophomore Pat Keenan broke two UMass single-game scoring records as he netted seven goals and two assists in leading the Redmen to a 16-0 victory over Lowell Tech.

Keenan, last year's fresman scoring leader, broke the record for most goals (seven) and most points (nine) scored in a single game. It was his varsity debut.

But the Toronto sensation wasn't the entire UMass show in the Redman home opener. Coach Jack Canniff unveiled a young (nine juniors and seven sophomores make up the three forward lines, the first five defensemen and the two goalies) but obviously talented team, one that is hopeful of making the E.C.A.C. Division II play offs for the first time in UMass hockey history.

The Redmen weren't a polished unit against the hapless Engineers as their passing was off, and they had trouble bringing the puck out of their own end, at times holding the puck too long and allowing Lowell to disrupt the UMass attack.

On the plus side the Redmen exhibited an aggressive forechecking game, enabling them to keep the puck in the Engineers' zone for minutes at a time, and peppering Lowell goaltenders with 53 shots.

From the opening face-off UMass forced the play in the Engineers' zone, but just couldn't score. Dennis Grabowski's tip-in attempt of Brian Sullivan's long shot from the point was wide at the 54-second mark.

The Redmen, digging in the corners and forechecking aggressively, scored again, at the 4:18 mark, when Keenan scored his first goal as he tipped in Dan Reidy's shot.

Sloppy passing continued to hound UMass as it missed numerous scoring opportunities in front of the net. To the Redmen's credit they didn't quit, as they kept forechecking and forcing play in the Engineers' zone.

UMass continued its aggressive play, but at 15:31, Gary Bishop of Lowell caught the Redman defensemen up ice and broke in alone on goalie P.J. Flaherty. Flaherty came out and blocked Bishop's shot. For all purposes this finished the Engineers; the Redmen continued exerting pressure on Girard and scored their fourth goal, at 19:33, when defenseman Bob Shilalie, filling in for the injured Al Nickerson, passed to Eric Scrafield, who sent a centering pass to Shea, who scored his first varsity UMass goal.

In the second period the Redman

Cheers for All

As today's sports special so aptly shows, the UMass winter sports season has begun, and it brings up two pretty sore points, namely, the lack of an ice rink and the presence of the Cage.

It is a foregone conclusion that the Cage will be jammed hours before gametime for home games to watch the New England champions defend their title. And Orr Rink will be overflowing for the home games of potentially the finest hockey team in school history. It all means that a lot of students, faculty, administrators, and sports fans will be unable to see UMass home games in person this year because there is no room for them.

How about this for an idea then? For the bigger and more important hockey and basketball home contests, how about a closed circuit hook up in the Boyden gym or any other large auditorium on campus. The equipment is available on campus, and so is the interest.

The games are going to be easy sell outs for most of the season so nothing will be lost. And a big group of students who paid their athletic fee will be able to see games that may not be able to if things remain as they are.

Talk Show Trouble

WASHINGTON - The United States is suffering from its worst shortage of radio and TV talk show guests in 20 years. The reason for this is that while talk shows have been multiplying by the thousands, the people who have been appearing on them have become worn out. In 1960, there were 250 guests available for each talk show. Ten years later, there are 250 talk shows fighting over the same guests.

Things have gotten so bad that a professor who wrote a book about the mating habits of woodworms was recently kidnapped in front of the Today Show in New York and flown out to California where he was forced to go on a radio-telephone talk show instead.

Two famous late-night show hosts got into a fist fight in a Sixth Avenue delicatessen last month over a waiter who could make a white napkin look like a rabbit.

And only three weeks ago, two female talk-show hostesses had a hair-pulling contest in a beauty shop over the TV rights to an author of the definitive book on false eyelashes.

In order to avoid an all-out war between the talk-show commentators, a secret conference was called at Johnny Carson's hideaway farm in the Adirondacks. Black limousines with their shades drawn kept arriving at 2-minute intervals and out stepped such big guns in the talk business as David Frost, Dick Cavett, Mike Douglas, Hugh Downs, Barbara Walters, Virginia Graham, Irv Kup and David Susskind. Every major TV host and hostess was there.

Everyone brought his own producer and talent coordinator for protection, but Carson's people made everybody leave their teleprompters at the door.

Ed McMahon opened the meeting by saying, "And heeerrrre's Johnny."

Carson got down to business right away. "We all know why we're here," he said. "There's a crisis in the talk-show business and unless we find an answer to it we'll all be doing commercials for Maxwell House coffee."

"Right," said Mike Douglas, "Now, my boys in Philadelphia say that unless some equal way is figured out to share the few available guests left, we're going to take them off the metroliner before they reach New York."

"Is that so?" said Virginia Graham. "Well, we on the West Coast are getting sick and tired of your Eastern talk shows coming out here and grabbing all our guests."

"That's right, Ginny," said Merv Griffin. "If you muscle in on our territory, we'll muscle in on yours."

David Frost spoke up, "We're not getting anywhere with threats. As I see it, no matter what we do, we've used up every singer, comedian, author and politician for the next two years. A new crop should be coming up by then, but none of us can wait. What I suggest is that we each volunteer to go on each other's shows to fill the vacuum. After all, we are nore interesting than the people we interview."

"I agree with David," Dick Cavett said, "but it seems to me the public would become very suspicious if we kept turning up on each other's shows without a reason."

"Why don't we each write a book? Then we would have a legitimate reason for going on each other's show," David Susskind said.

Carson replied, "You know we don't have time to write books."

"But suppose," said Frost, "we put together transcripts of our interviews with our former talk-show guests. Wouldn't that constitute a book?"

"Of course," said Barbara Walters. "Then no one could criticize us for going on each other's show."

And so it was decided that each talk-show host would put together the best talks he or she has had. This would mean 345 books, which would take up the talk lack for the next two years.

As the long black limousines pulled out of Carson's farm, the state police, who were tipped off to the meeting, showed up. But, unfortunately, almost everyone got away.

Freedoms for Diversity

Historically, academic freedom and curricular diversity have been the traditional targets of those moralists who got uptight with the fact that academia didn't enthusiastically reinforce their particular code of morality. Such moralism, if institutionalized, sets the stage for the type of purges that freak out the advocates of academix freedom. Remember the fate of Galileo and other scientific "heretics" whose revelations contradicted the moral code of the Pope? Or how about those who question the validity of Leninist dogma in Soviet universities? Who could forget the days when professors invoked the fifth amendment in front of Joe McCarthy? And of course the infamous Nazi bookburning orgies which purified German education.

In a letter in last Tuesday's Collegian, a Mr. B, quite a moralist in his own right, expresses his displeasure with the type of curriculum which other individuals heretically choose to participate in. Others who have the audacity to refuse to conform to Mr. B's code of morality, are, in his own words, "unthinking simpletons"(!). The fact that "the university is as uncritical of American capitalist activity as the local Kiwanis" gets Mr. B. very angry (Mr. B. obviously doesn't know of merciless tirades delivered against Capitalism at the Trotskyist Labor Forum by Sid Finehursh and Co. By the way, this ain't a plug). Mr. B. desires to make UMass curriculum conform to his anti-capitalistic morality, not by scholarly persuasion, but by intimidation, grant you, since he believes that "a meaningful demonstration is possible only when it threatens terrorism" (Jeepers Creepers!)

Mr. B. must be reminded that he doesn't have a monopoly on morality, nor do his standards constitute eternal truths. Those who choose to join ROTC or pursue a career with DOW or any other industry most likely don't desire to oppress the "Third World" or exploit the "working class", and aren't 'unthinking simpletons' as Mr. B. so visciously refers to them. They have just as much right to prusue their type of education as anyone else, no matter how much they contradict Mr. B's ethical plateaus

The present UMass administration, however bureaucratic, still encourages enormous diversity. If in power, Mr. B. would probably not permit any such diversity for the "unthinking simpletons". If this University is to remain free, we must see that it becomes a marketplace of knowledge, with complete freedom of choice for the consumer-student in picking his career.

Campus Comment

Objective Coverage

To The Editor:

The editorial staff of the Collegian has continually demonstrated its support of positions on issues that cah be described as socialist. No single topic has received more coverage in the pages of the Collegian than the activities of the Young Socialist Alliance and its ideological confreres . The fact that the YSA is very active on campus and that the editors of the Collegian are sympathetic to its views is obvious. That it is the editors' prerogative to allot a high degree of coverage in the Collegian to publicize the YSA's views is not denied.

However, it not the editors' prerogative to misrepresent facts when reporting national events. A clear example of this misrepresentation is the headlines and their related newswire reports concerning the recent events in North Vietnam.

The front-page headline refers to a U.S. helicopter-lifted search and rescue mission to an area outside Hanoi as an "invasion". Neither the New York Times nor The Boston Globe editions of the same date (24 Nov. '70) refer to the raid as an "invasion", nor do the wire service reports themselves, for no other reason than it constitutes a perversion of correct English usage. To compound this factual error, the headline goes on to assert that this "invasion" prompted the Hanoi delegation to boycott the Paris peace talks when, in fact, the delegation has made no statement whatsoever concerning the raid. (Ref. NY Times, 24 Nov. 70). They boycotted the talks because of the bombi..g raids, not the rescue mission. (Ref. NY Times & Boston Globe, 24 Nov. 70) It can be assumed that Hanoi is not pleased by the raid, but to connect, by means of a headline, the boycott of the talks with the raid, when Hanoi itslelf has not made the connection, is misrepresentation of the facts. That this misrepresentation could be useful to Mr. Sid Finehurst of YSA and Mobe is, I think, not entirely coincidental. To note that Mr. Finehursh holds a rally protesting an "invasion", just after the Collegian has established, by headline, the feeling that there was indeed an "invasion", is to become alarmed at the misuse of freedom of the press as exemplified by the Collegian. To further aid Mr. Finehursh by implying that somehow this "invasion" has incurred the wrath of large numbers of people is irresponsible in the extreme. I refer, of course, to your headline on page four - "Helicopter Raid Stirs Anger World-Wide." This headline is above a newswire report which in no way justifies the headline. In the report, no reference whatsoever is made to any anger, much less "world-wide" anger.

Those who wish to restrict their sources of information on current events to the ideological rantings of the YSA and MOBE, should attend Mr. Finehursh's rallies and meetings. Those who wish to receive objective reports of current events, from which they can draw their own conclusions, should be able to read a Collegian that has not been carefully "adjusted" by means of idiologized headlines, to support a particular group's politics.

by SYDNEY OMARR

The Aries youngster is headstrong, an original, not likely to follow precedent. Parents of the Aries boy or girl should provide plenty of encouragement and an abundance of affection. This child is impulsive and extremely sensitive to environment. Being with a child of this zodiacal sign is refreshing, at times exasperating, educational and can even be delightful.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Being too insistent could alienate business partner or mate. Allow others freedom of choice. Your own ambitions will be better served by live-and-let-live policy.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Some one may be trying to get message across to you. Communication lines may be distorted. Withhold final judgment until facts are appraised. Avoid jumping to conclusions.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Harmonize family relationships. One who is extremely sensitive needs encouragement. Accent on how you express yourself. Member of opposite sex is involved.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Stick to practical issues. Don't veer too far from familiar ground. Surprises are due. You should prepare yourself by having alternatives at hand. Avoid self-deception.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Conservative course is best; avoid long-range financial commitments. Relatives may offer well-meaning advice, but key is to be aware of your own needs. Postpone trip if possible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Impulsive gesture could be costly. Know this and take proper precautons. A child who makes unreasonable demands should be dealt with in mature manner.

LIBRA (Sept 23 - Oct. 22): New starts in new directions are indicated. Events occur with dramatic suddenness. Aquarius individual could play important role. Stress independence and self-esteem.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Your intuitive intellect serves as reliable guide. Tendency is for associates now to act in eccentric manner. Don't compound error. Do what you feel must be done.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Leave details to others. Welcome invitation which promises change of pace. Social activity increases. Sense of humor becomes great ally. Realize this — and respond accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Investment potential is subject to change. Move with the times. Don't feel you are stuck with one method of procedure. There is red tape. But it ultimately works in your behalf.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Obtain hint from Leo message. Don't become involved in wild-goose chase. Take course which leads toward goal. Short cuts now do not appear satisfactory.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Money is involved in minor dispute with one who is forceful, insistent. Hold your ground. You get backing from surprise source. Accent confidence and willingness to negotiate.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY area of confusion is transformed to solid accomplishment. Determination will play large role. You have some sparkling ideas which will be turned into profit. Personal life settles to a more even, productive pace.

Latest Census Shows Calif. Most Populous

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau Monday set the nation's population at 204.7 million in a final official count which gives California five new House seats and the title of the most populous state.

For the first time, the census included 1.5 million Americans living overseas as servicemen or federal employes, and their dependents. They were apportioned among the state to help figure representation in the U.S. House of Representatives. Americans living overseas as employes of private companies were not counted.

French Novel-Film Course To Be Offered

The French Department has announced a new course for the spring semester, French 390b. Entitled Repliques en 16 millimetres, the course will focus on the novel in France and its adaptation to the screen. Enrollment is open to anyone able to follow class lectures and screen dialogue in French, and non-French majors are encouraged to attend. Majors may take the course for major credit. The instructor will be Professor O'Connell.

The course will be divided into seven 2-week sections, with a novel and the film based on it being examined during each two-week period. The opening film will be Les Liaisons dangereuses, based on the 18th century Laclos novel, which is one of the major works in the form of epistolary fiction. The film, directed by Roger Vadim, who gave the world Brigitte Bardot, is shot in the Alps at a ski resort and in it Vadim has transferred the action from the letter form of the 1780 novel to modern forms of expression: using jazz, the telephone and the tape recorder. Featuring his new wife of the moment, Annette Stroyberg, of whom he makes the customary nude shots, Vadim also employed rather important stars in this movie – Jeanne Moreau and Gerard Philippe. A controversial movie even to this day and a solid commercial success from the very beginning, Vadim's treatment of the Laclos novel opens up new perspectives on the book. It is also an excellent introduction to Vadim's work, now more widely known in this country since his marriage to Jane Fonda.

MDC CLOSE-UP

Those Gallant PP Men And Their Snowplows

When the winter winds roar in, bringing with them that curse of the commuter, the bane of the dorm-liver, and the liberator of school-children; when the campus is covered from F lot to M lot and the tunnel is clogged with ice; there are a gallant few who brave the cold, put on their coats and boots, start the machines, and shovel that snow, the men of Physical Plant.

They're a hardy lot, and they have to be. Their trucks are the targets for snowballs, and people would rather slide down Orchard Hill than walk down it. Irate faculty have been known to call in the middle of the night and complain that 2 lot isn't clear or that they can't get into the back door of Machmer. But, the men of the multi-colored plows take it all in stride. Their number is small, 18 to 20 men including reliefs, and they man about 12 pieces of equipment. They have, stored in the fenced-in yard next to the Physical Plant building, plows for roads, plows for lots, plows for sidewalks, and an occasional snow-blower, capable, it is rumored, of eating three VW's lined up in a row.

When the snow falls and clogs the roads and lots, these staunch souls venture forth in the dead of night, toiling and laboring in the cabs of their trucks, nipping once in a while at something to keep them warm, clearing the commuter lots and the faculty lots.

First on the list to be desecrated by the roaring, fire-breathing, smoke-belching plows is the Infirmary lot. Then they steam up Orchard Hill, chewing up the snow and the road as they go. Quick, like drunken elephants, they swing down and push all the white stuff off at the police station, and then, precisely then, very early in the morning, they begin to clear around the dorms, trying their hardest not to wake anyone up.

They are tough men, descended from Payl Bunyan and his blue ox, Babe. And they work hard. They have to. Who in his right mind would expect students to walk through snow on their way to classes? Not these men.

Their worst moment came three years ago when the Amherst DPW couldn't keep up with the snowfall as it fell and was very late in clearing the town roads. Last year, on the other hand, was an easy year for the men of the PP. Despite predictions by the Farmer's Almanac that snow would fall in November, Mother Nature has held back for a while, giving these valiant men a little respite before the deluge.

Documentation Key To Successful Medical Deferments

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

Last week, before everyone went home to get their annual dose of indigestion, I discussed some of the criteria for medical deferments. Assuming that you've recovered enough to pay attention, I'll give you some idea of how to go use your ailments properly; i.e., to be sure that you succeed in convincing the AFEES (Armed Forces Entrance & Examining Station) personnel that you should be found unfit to kill people in order to preserve your nation's honor.

The key to the game is called documentation. The doctors, aides, and other official types at AFEES are harried, hassled, and, frequently, hostile. These three h's are important because they frequently cause your examiners to miss fairly obvious deferable conditions. Therefore, it is to your definite advantage to have a letter from your doctor stating that your leg was amputated three years ago, and that the chances that it will grow back are minimal. He should also state that in his expert medical opinion he believes that your one-legged condition might possibly interfere with your performance of duty. Do not count on AFEES to either notice your condition or draw any conclusions themselves.

This is said only partly in jest. I know of one case where a young man who had one leg three inches shorter than the other and who was required to wear a brace passed his physical, was inducted into the Army, put through basic, sent for a year to Vietnam, and was finally given an honorable discharge. He did not want to go, but he had no idea of his rights to appeal AFEES findings. Simply, incredible things can and do happen, so it is best to take nothing for granted.

Okay. You're convinced that it's a good idea to have some documentation with you. Now, what form should it take?

The most obvious is a letter from your doctor -- or doctors, if more than one has treated you. The letter should state your condition in both medical and lay terminology. This is so you don't insult the rare educated AFEES dcotors and don't go over the heads of the rest. The letter should also give the prognosis, state the treatment prescribed, and go on to the most important part. If there is any chance at all, no matter how remote, that the condition could either be aggravated by or interfere with basic training or the performance of duty, the doctor should so declare. The Army does not want people who are going to be on the sick rosters or who will have to be given a medical discharge, so it will try to turn you down if they have any indication that you might be one of these types.

You have your doctor's letters. The next step is to get additional documentation. Were x-rays taken to disgnose or confirm your condition? Get copies. Were you sent to a specialist? Get a letter from him. Were you hospitalized? Get a copy of the hospital report. Did you go to a clinic, an allergist, a shrink? Get letters.

If your condition is borderline, additional substantiation from people who know you might help. Do you sleepwalk, for instance? Your doctor probably won't be able to tell the AFEES anything about it, but your girlfriend, wife, roommate, or mother (or all of the above) might. Get a letter.

KEEP COPIES OF EVERYTHING! Keep one copy on file at home. Mail one copy to your board for inclusion in your file. Send it Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested. When the receipt comes back, staple it to your copy. This is proof that the board received the documentation.

When you go for your physical, take two copies of everything with you. Give them one copy at the beginning when they request doctors' letters; save the other set in case they misplace, eat, or otherwise lose the original.

Your letters serve the simple purpose of shouting in their ears, "Hey! Wait a minute. This guy might have something wrong with him....Take a closer look." As AFEES personnel seem, traditionally to be somewhat hard-of-hearing, they will not hear you if you try to tell them yourself. You must have the letters.

Remind your doctor, if he seems unwilling to write a letter, that it is his patriotic duty to help save the Army thousands of dollars in outfitting and training someone who will not meet up to their standards. By pointing out your condition to the army before they have inducted you, he is saving the American taxpayer money. He should get a medal from his local VFW.

Peace brothers!

CAS Sponsors Counseling Week Program

By LINDA A. BAHCKI
Staff Reporter

If you need help in deciding what courses to take next semester or want advice in selecting a major, this is the week to get it. Counseling Week, a student oriented help program sponsored by the College of Arts and Sciences, will continue on until December 8 to provide students with the opportunities to get the attention and advice which they need or want.

According to Robert Livingston, Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the program is designed to give the student a source of knowledgeable information about the requirements and opportunities in any program which the student might be interested. In this way it hopes to eliminate many of the problems which the uninformed student may encounter as he pursues his program of studies at the University.

It is for this reason that the College of Arts and Sciences Counseling Center located in Machmer E-22 will be staffed this week by chief advisors and other counselors from each of the major departments in the College of Arts and Sciences. They will be there to talk to students who have already chosen their field of specialty as their major as well as those students who have a suggested but indefinite interest in majoring in that area. These counselors will seek to answer the many questions which students have about their courses of study by calling upon their expert knowledge and contact with the various departments.

In addition the counselors will also be prepared to answer questions about courses outside of their specialty so as to allow the student full opportunity to plan their complete course of study. They will also serve as advisors in the determination of the proper persons to see in the event that a student's proposed major is one outside of the College of Arts and Sciences.

A further service which they will be extending is that of advising those students who have suggested but indefinite majors or who have no idea at all as to what they wish to major in. As a part of this function the advisor will assist the student in planning a course of study based on University Core Requirements which will allow him opportunities to sample many areas to gain some ideas and then pursue an area of apparent interest with one or more advanced courses before he makes the final decision on a major. In this way the student will also be made aware of any sequential courses he must take as requirements of a major and will satisfy University Core Requirements while determining their major.

Dr. Livingston explained that the counseling period has been extended this year from last year's one day program in order to allow a larger number of students the opportunity to take advantage of the valuable and oftentimes necessary services which are being provided to help them. He expressed great satisfaction with the fact that the course schedule and pre-registration forms have been distributed to the students in advance of the start of Counseling Week. He felt that this would be of immense help in assisting counselors and students to prepare their programs satisfactorily before the end of the pre-registration period. He also expressed the hope that students would use the services which are now being provided for them so that they will be able to plan a course of study which is both satisfactory to their own needs and which also will guarantee them the opportunity to take full advantage of the educational resources which the University can provide.

Course Guide Out Soon

The 1971 Spring Course Description Catalogue should be out by the middle or the end of the week. Three dedicated members of the MDC staff are hard at work on the paste-up right now. The guide, expected to reach a record-breaking hundred pages, includes descriptions of all the courses listed in the recent Course Schedule, and it might be a good idea to wait off on pre-registration until this new and exciting Guide hits the Dining Commons.

Can A Student Get A Decent Meal On Campus . . . . . You Bet Your Noodle He Can

By IMELDA ROJAK
Staff Reporter

Yesterday we had the opportunity to eat at the Noodle, the "student-run, almost non-profit, vegetarian, macrobiotic restaurant." About a dozen people sat around several low tables in the small, candle-lit room. We stopped to ask some University students how they liked the food. "I really like it. I have a meal ticket but I come to eat here once in a while," said one campus-dweller. "You can't buy rice in the Hatch." "It's healthy food and it's cheap," volunteered one girl, a commuter. The diners recommended "the millet and broccolli, and the bread. The Mu tea is good, too."

We looked around the room for someone who seemed to be connected with the serving of food. A girl was giving a boy a backrub in the middle of the room. "This is gorgeous food," said the backrubber. "It's the only place I've eaten squash and liked it."

Someone invited us to sit down, take off our shoes, and sample some stuff in a ricebowl. "This is really good food," we said. "That's what the Noodle is all about." he answered.

We ordered squash soup with noodles and were served very promptly. Someone showed us how to use chopsticks. The atmosphere of the place is that of peace and restfulness and closeness and friendliness. We ate slowly, enjoying the food and the people.

The man who had advised us to sit down and eat turned out to be one of the originators of the restaurant, Demian. He told us the history behind the Noodle. "I spent two years burning food; then I learned to make gourmet food for myself. One year later, though I was eating the "basic food groups". I still didn't feel good."

I learned about macrobiotic cooking from a neighbor", he explained. "I tried eating this food and it works. I've eliminated sugar. When I stopped eating sugar, my desire for red meat disappeared."

"The restaurant was more or less of a whim. I saw a need for something better than the dining commons food.

"The Program council put up some money for the project. We've had cooperation from the food service in terms of using the kitchen."

"The problems that we now face are due to success. We have a large clientel and need four people to work full time. Most people who work here are student volunteers, and they're all in need of economic support. I've requested salaries, he said, and explained there is a lot of red tape and don't know exactly where to go to straighten out their problems. "If we can't get salaries, we'll be forced to stop running the restaurant.

We also need the use of a dish-washing machine. If customers would speak to Betty Pugh of the S.U.G. Board, Cindy Davis of the Program Council, Jim Riley of the R.S.O., Mike Egan of the Food Service, or their representatives or senators, maybe we'll be able to stay together."

If you want to enjoy some unusual, inexpensive food, the Noodle is open from noon until eight in the Suffolk room of the Student Union, that is as long as it stays open. Also, they could use some help, if you would like to stop in.

By PAT KING
Staff Reporter

Transfer shock, the adjustment of changing from one campus to another, can be grueling experience for a junior transfer student. This year, the School of Education has taken a step to help ease the shock and relieve the feeling of helplessness that can result from trying to find an office in Whitmore or from figuring out the core requirements.

There was a meeting yesterday on the ninth floor of the Campus Center for all transfer students to the School of Ed. Various administrators gave warnings and helpful hints on different aspects of the teaching profession, such as how to find jobs and when to include practice teaching in a schedule.

Most of the 45 people there were attracted to the UMass School of Ed by its reputation as a dynamic and exciting experience. One of their more progressive projects is a program for internship (a full semester of practice teaching) in states all over the country.

There are now such programs in California, Florida, and Colorado. A student can also gain experience by teaching in inner-city schools in New York and Philadelphia.

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP) - Lt. William Calley Jr. fired his automatic rifle into a ditch full of unarmed Vietnamese civilians during the My Lai assault, one of his former platoon members testified Tuesday at the lieutenant's court-martial.

"Did you have any conversation with Lt. Calley?" the witness, former machine gunner Robert E. Maples, 22, of Freehold, N.J. was asked at Calley's trial on premeditated murder charges.

"All I can remember," Maples replied, "is him asking for me to use my machinegun."

Q. Where was this?
A. At the ditch.
Q. What did you do?
A. I refused.

Calley, 27, is on trial for his life, accused of the premeditated murder of 102 unresisting Vietnamese civilians, 70 of them at the ditch during a March 16, 1968 assault on My Lai.

Maples said he and others worked their way through the village and came upon the ditch where he said he saw Calley and Paul Meadle, 23, a member of their 1st Platoon. Meadle has admitted publicly that he killed 35 to 40 civilian men, women and children that day.

"Him and Meadle was firing into the hole," Maples testified. "Meadle was crying."

Q. How do you know Meadle was crying?
A. I saw him.

Asked if he knew where the pair was shooting, Maples replied: "Their weapons were pointed into the ditch."

Maples was preceded to the witness stand by two other former members of Calley's platoon. Of more than a score of government witnesses, the three were the first to testify they saw Calley in the village that day, with prisoners entrusted to his care and with a weapon in his hand.

One of the prior witnesses, Rennard Doines, 23, of Fort Worth, Texas said a batch of 10 to 15 Vietnamese civilian prisoners were delivered to the defendant at My Lai. Later, the witness said, he saw a bunch of dead bodies in the same area.

"Did you ever see any American soldier kill anybody there?" Doines was asked on cross examination.

"No, I didn't replied the witness.

Another platoon mate, Sidney Kye, 24, of Kansas City, Kan., testified he saw the lieutenant on one occasion shooting his M16 rifle in the village during the My Lai assault. Besides the victims in the ditch, Calley is accused of engineering the execution of at least 30 Vietnamese on a village trail.

Thefts May Hike New SU Tax Rate

By TONY SANTAGATI
Staff Reporter

The large number of thefts from the Campus Center may force a $3.00 a year increase in the Student Union Fee, assistant building manager Paul Bigelow disclosed last night.

The present S.U. fee, which is paid by students in their semester bills, stands at $24. a semester.

Since the beginning of the semester, approximately $7,000.00 worth of articles has been taken from the Center's physical facilities and approximately $1,000.00 in malicious damage has occured according to Bigelow.

Approximately $20,000.00 in goods has been taken from the University Store, he added. Since the profit of the store is used to help run the Campus Center, the total loss to the Center so far this semester is $28,000.00, by his figures.

If this stealing continues at its present rate, the total loss for this academic year is projected by C.C. officials as about $57,000.00 This figure represents about $3.00 in added SU fee to each student each year.

Another effect of these thefts is that they demand the attention of the Campus Center Staff whose time could be put to the benefit of the student body rather than trying to keep the Center in one piece, Bigelow explained. Presently, the staff is being aided by the Campus Center Governing Board Security Task Force, a group of students who patrol the building, guarding against thefts and who have put up the signs found on Campus Center couches where cushions have been taken.

This group, with the cooperation of local media, has been trying to make the student body aware that people stealing from the Center are actually stealing from the students, Bigelow explained.

Through their efforts, he said, a few of the stolen articles have been returned. Campus Center officials have said that anyone returning a stolen article need not fear prosecution of any sort.

A person caught stealing from the Center is subject to dismissal from the University and court action for petty larceny, Bigelow explained. Petty larceny is punishable by not more than one year imprisonment or $300.00 fine.

If someone were caught taking 2 or more cushions (valued at $50.00 each) from the Center's couches, he could be prosecuted for grand larceny which is punishable by up to 5 years imprisonment or up to $600.00 fine and 2 years imprisonment.

The following is a list of items stolen from the Campus Center (not including the University Store) from Sept. 13 to Nov 7, as released by Bigelow:

96 cushions
1 175 lb. granite table top
1 tape deck
5 microphones
15 fire hose nozzles
7 CO2 fire extinguishers
5 exit signs
3 graphic directional signs
3 leather chairs
1 TV set
1 TV set broken in an attempted robbery
1 Speaker from men's room ceiling
200 ashtrays (worth 33¢ each)
Indefinite number of forks, knives, spoons, dishes, trays, salt and pepper shakers, etc.
1 18 foot rug
10 stools
1 electric typewriter

MOUNTING THEFTS—Example of the rash of vandalism which has swept the Campus Center this semester is the absence of partitions between urinals in the CC mens room. Building personnel claim that a S.U. tax increase may be in order if the thefts continue. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Dubois' Widow Talks Tomorrow On West, Africa And Mid East

Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois, widow of the late Dr. W.E.B. DuBois, will speak in the Student Center Auditorium tomorrow at 8:00 P.M. The topic of her talk will be "The West, Africa, and the Middle East." Mrs. Dubois has been in the vanguard of the international black struggle.

After a great deal of controversy, Mrs. DuBois finally was granted entry into the U.S. earlier this year. The Justice Department denied her request to enter the country until Black spokesmen from all across the country assailed them and until in Mrs. DuBois' own words, "they realized I wasn't coming here to overthrow the government." The gentle gray haired 63 year old lady dismisses the Justice Department's protests as reasons "never made clear."

Mrs. DuBois was educated at Oberlin College and did her graduate study at Yale University and the Sorbonne. A noted writer, she is the author of works on Phyllis Wheatley, Benjamin Banneker, Paul Robeson, and Booker T. Washington. All of these are aimed at the education of young Black people to the roles that Black men and women have played in the development of the U.S. and in the struggle for Black liberation.

She was also a founder and first editor of Freedom Ways, the journal of the Afro-American liberation struggle. Mrs. DuBois has a volume forthcoming on the life of her late husband entitled His Day Goes Marching On, A Memoir of W.E.B. DuBois.

She says her husband was responsible for "lifting the word Black to its present prominence," through his work and books. In her recently completed book she hopes to straighten out the record of her husbands Communist Party membership.

DuBois, she explained, "had believed in socialism the greater part of his life" and saw communism as "the best way for people to develop." His inspiration to join the party was based "not on the dogmatism, but the ideals." Dr. DuBois' exodus to Africa was to begin the Encyclopedia Africana, "A comprehensive series of books dealing with all aspects of African culture." which, since the overthrow of Nkrumah have been confiscated by the present government of Ghana.

Responding to questions about her thoughts on the U.S., Mrs. DuBois replied, "people get the government they deserve." And on the Black Panthers, they are struggling "to create a better America."

She feels the Panthers "have a right to defend themselves - and they have only been defending themselves, not attacking people." Having been in the forefront for so long, Mrs. DuBois is encouraged by changing attitudes and believes that "all over the world, we are living in an era of liberation."

"College Life" Slated

The relevance of Jesus of Nazareth to today's world is the topic under consideration at College Life - an open meeting held on alternate Wednesdays from 8 to 9 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the old Student Union.

This week Dick Sandquist will be speaking on "Why Don't You?" Mr. Sandquist is a graduate of Seattle Pacific College and North Park seminary. Singing by UMass junior Bob Martin, a door prize, and student sharing of their own experience with will round out the program, a reshments will be provided for those who want to stay and rap afterward.

Protestants Picket Pope At Australian High Mass

SYDNEY, Australia (AP)-Pope Paul VI, honored Tuesday by 200,000 Australians who attended an outdoor High Mass, faced a demonstration Wednesday night by militant Protestants. And Wednesday morning, a pregnant woman waved a sign at him reading: "When can we use the pill?"

A man standing in the crowd beside the woman, who said she was an American married to an Australian, draped his coat over the sign and chided her: "Be a good Aussie."

There was no indication the Pope saw the sign. He has consistently opposed pills and other artificial means of birth control.

The pontiff visited St. Joseph's Convent in North Sydney on Wednesday morning and shook the hand of a 100 year old nun, Sister Bernadine Carberry. She was in a wheelchair.

The convent is the headquarters of the Sisters of St. Joseph of the Sacred Heart, founded in 1873 by Mother Mary MacKillop, who may become Australia's first saint. Sister Bernadine worked with the order's founder 14 years.

Crowds lined the route wherever Pope Paul drove Wednesday. At times people got up to his open car and some touched him. A woman ran in front of a car in the first motorcade in the day and was knocked down, but she was not badly hurt and the Pope did not notice the incident.

In The Nation And The World

Miller Sees Good In SST

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Republican senator who usually supports President Nixon's policies defected from GOP ranks Tuesday and said he sees no justification for continuing federal aid to the supersonic transport.

The decision by Sen. Jack Miller, (R) Iowa, put in further doubt the fate of a pending $290 million appropriation to continue work on SST prototypes.

Miller said he will vote against the appropriation when it comes to the Senate floor Thursday or Friday.

Miller's action followed two days of activity in which SST supporters, conceding they face "an extremely tight vote," moved to blunt the attack of opponents. They in turn hurled a new barrage of criticism at the project SST supporters call the transportation of the future.

Miller said the real needs of the future lie not in carrying vacationers through the sound barrier but in what he said are the pressing human and economic demands of the nation.

He told the Senate he believes the administration has not answered some hard questions about the problems of noise, of economic feasibility, of environmental impact and national priorities.

He said the SST money could be put to better use at a time of inflation and in which a $14 billion deficit in the federal budget "is requiring reductions in areas of greater concern and immediate need."

Two of the Senate's most persistent SST foes-Sens. Edmund Muskie, D Maine, and William Proxmire, D Wis., demanded the Department of Transportation supply the Senate with reports on the potential environmental impact of the SST before the vote.

Nets For Runways?

WASHINGTON (AP) - A sort of super strong, giant volleyball net and energy absorber that could prevent end of runway airliner disasters like last week's Anchorage, Alaska, crash is undergoing final tests this week.

If no new bugs develop during the proving at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., the device could be available to airports in a year, one of its developers said in an interview.

The aircraft arresting system has been developed over the past four years by an American firm and a French company with the cooperation of both nations' governments.

In that accident last Friday, a Vietnam bound DC8 jetliner ran off the end of the runway, exploded and burned, killing 47. Cause has not been determined.

With the arresting system, a barrier net linked to the energy absorbers would have risen in front of the plane's nose and wings from a recess in the runway, trapping it before it could crash off the runway's end.

The net was developed by Aerazur Constructions Aeronautique of Paris. The energy absorbers were developed by All American Engineering Co., Wilmington, Del.

NASA Finds Traces Of Nonearthly Life

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration said the discovery of amino acids-principal building blocks of living cells in an Australian meteorite suggests the possible existence elsewhere in the universe of life resulting from chemical evolution.

"The find is probably the first conclusive proof of extraterrestrial chemical evolution, the chemical processes which precede the origin of life.....

"It may provide a new time sequence for the origin of life on earth and elsewhere in the inverse."

The NASA studies were conducted on material taken from a meteorite that fell near Murchison, Victoria, Australia, Sept. 28, 1969.

The meteorite has been identified as a "Class II carbonaceous chondrite." Meteorites of this type are believed to have originated in the asteroid belt 4.5 billion years ago, at the time that the earth and other planets of the solar system were formed from an interstellar gas cloud.

"Finding of amino acids and other complex organic molecules in the Murchison meteorite strongly suggests that these complex life materials have been present from the time of formation of the earth," NASA said in a news release.

Laird Vows "Further Efforts"

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said Tuesday the United States "will make further efforts to free our prisoners" in North Vietnam, and this includes possible military action.

"I would not rule out any action," Laird said. "We are going to make every kind of effort to free our prisoners of war." The Pentagon chief made this statement when reporters asked if there might be another commando type raid like the dramatic but fruitless descent on Son Tay ten days ago.

The Nixon administration is concerned about the POW issue, Laird said, and he intends to take it up at a meeting of North Atlantic Treaty Organization defense ministers in Brussels.

Laird talked to newsmen at Andrews Air Force Base before taking off for the three day NATO meeting.

His words were echoed in Paris by Ambassador David K. E. Bruce, chief U.S. envoy to the Vietnam peace talks there. Bruce told a news conference the United States will continue to seek the early release of American prisoners in Vietnam "by all means available to us."

"Hanoi and the Viet Cong must understand, in unmistakable terms," Bruce said, "that their past and existing attitude on the prisoner of war question is intolerable. We will continue to pursue the twin objectives of humane treatment and early release of our men by all means available to us."

Bruce said the Communists' reaction to President Nixon's Oct. 7 proposal for immediate and unconditional release of all POWs on both sides "has been totally negative."

"They show no concern for their own men and flout our concern for ours," he said.

North Vietnam's Premier Pham Van Dong, in an interview published in the French newspaper Le Monde, said the prisoner issue could be resolved only after Washington decides to withdraw all of its troops from South Vietnam.

Allies Aim To Decrease US Lead

BRUSSELS (AP) - Ten European allies agreed Tuesday night to aim at nearly $1 billion in additional spending for defense to ease the military lead of the United States.

-An international program of defense improvement in Europe over the next five years estimated to cost $420 million. Its fulfillment will depend on the participation of Britain which, so far, has refused to pitch in with anything aside from military contributions.

-A program of additional national effort in Europe over the next five years estimated to cost $450 million to $500 million in operational and capital expenses.

In addition West Germany pledged to pay the $79 million cost of 16 new transport planes to beef up Turkey's defense.

This agreement emerged after some plain talking between the British and West Germans who are the chief contributors to the over all program for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Depts Open Doors For Counseling Week

By LINDA BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Counseling Week may be regarded by some students and faculty, as one of the most important weeks of the school year. It is during this week that students make many decisions which may effect their entire future as well as their program of studies while they are here at UMass.

Because they realize the importance of the decisions being made at this time, many of the major schools and departments within the University are conducting special counseling programs in order to assist their majors in making their decisions. Others are continuing the permanent counseling system set up within the department and accentuating it with special appointments.

The School of Agriculture, for instance is placing more emphasis this week on its counseling system which sees each undergraduate major assigned to an advisor within his area of specialization within the school.

In addition, new majors, either transfers from other departments or incoming freshman begin a counseling procedure which determines the area in which the student is most interested in and results in his assignment to an advisor the most closely connected with his field of interest.

The School of Agriculture also maintains a system which allows the student and his advisor to become personally acquainted through conferences, both formal and informal, which take place throughout the year and not just at pre-registration or counseling periods.

The School of Nursing is highlighting its regular counseling program with additional conferences set up through the use of timetables posted outside Room 245 of the Public Health Building. The department is also making a special effort to contact its freshman majors so that they may be informed of the proper selection of courses needed before they enter their major sequences of courses next year. Freshman are encouraged to sign up for appointments this week or to go to the Public Health Building to meet with advisors Wednesday afternoon.

The School of Education meanwhile is conducting special counseling sessions in the School of Ed library where students may meet with representatives from each of the major areas of specialization within the department. In addition, counselors are conducting a series of group counseling sessions in various dorms on campus to provide further opportunities for their undergrads.

While the School of Home Economics does not have any other program other than their regular advisor-advisee conferences, it is constantly making the attempt to provide attention to all of its students, whether they desire an appointment or need only quick advice on pre-registration procedures or courses selection.

AMA Urges Abortion Reform

BOSTON (AP) — A committee of the American Medical Association Tuesday reaffirmed support for the AMA's liberalized policy on abortions, approved originally in June.

The committee, meeting in connection with the AMA's annual clinical convention, rejected pleas by a number of physicians who asked the committee Monday to return to a more conservative position on terminating pregnancies.

The old stance, formulated in 1967, approved only therapeutic abortions needed to protect the health or life of the mother or to prevent the birth of a severely crippled, deformed or abnormal infant.

The committee's resolution will be submitted to the AMA's House of Delegates later this week, along with a series of guidelines for implementation of the more liberal policy.

The guidelines say it is the duty of the physician performing the abortion to inform the patient and her family.

Administration Slams New Hikes In Gas Price, Rail Wage Boosts

WASHINGTON (AP) -The Nixon administration hit hard Tuesday at new gasoline price boosts, at the proposed rail wage increase, and at the new auto wage price pattern-which, it said, will cost consumers $2.5 billion a year.

Taking a new tone in its second inflation alert, the White House resorted to "jawboning" -the pressure by publicity technique it has avoided heretofore.

The President's Council of Economic Advisers explained that while it appears prices are rising less rapidly, "nevertheless, the rate of inflation remains higher than expected."

At almost the same moment, Chrysler Corp. announced a $15 average increase in its suggested retail price for most 1971 models. It was Chrysler's second increase this year and came one week after a second round boost of $24 by General Motors.

The shift to easier money and lower interest rates got a nudge, meantime, when the interest rate on government insured home mortgages was cut from 8 1/2 per cent to 8 per cent by the Federal Housing Administration and the Veteran Administration.

The inflation alert notified industry and unions that government policy now will "aim more vigorously at expansion," and warned that this policy would be hampered by a continuing, spiraling race between management and labor for higher profits and pay.

"If everyone in his turn gets as big a wage or price increase as the biggest obtained by others during the height of the inflation, the inflation will go on endlessly," the White House advisers warned.

The Council spotlighted the oil and transit industries, two price system of the copper industry, and wage boosts by the airlines which, it said, have damaged the profitability of that industry.

By implication, the Council criticized the states of Texas and Louisiana for following oil production policies which hold down supplies and support the recent price increase.

Gasoline prices shot up nearly 16 per cent in the week ended Nov. 17, following a wave of crude oil price boosts, the Council said.

But the Council, which has opposed any form of voluntary or direct federal intervention in price wage decisions, emphasized that it was not passing judgment on whether any specific wage or price increases were justified.

The Council said the three year General Motors wage settlement, which ended a 67 day strike by the United Auto Workers, "if generalized throughout the economy" would force costs and prices upward.

Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Auto Workers, said the Council's criticism of the new pact is not well founded, and he claimed it is not inflationary.

The initial price boosts on 1971 cars were about 6 percent, the report noted, and GM's additional increases to cover the new wage costs has added 0.7 per cent.

The Council went on: "An increase of 6 to 7 per cent in the price of passenger automobiles would add about $2 billion to the total cost to dealers and possibly $2.5 billion to the cost to consumers.

".....This year's large price increases inevitably expose the domestic industry and its employes to increased competition from cars made overseas."

The inflation alert offered no judgment on the three year rail road wage package recommended by a presidentially appointed board, providing a yearly increase averaging more than 9 per cent. But it criticized sharply the emergency board's explanation that the pay boosts were designed to cover an assumed 6 per cent annual increase in the cost of living.

"If an assumption about inflation that represents no improvement is explicitly embedded into a contract for future years, we thereby guarantee that these costs and prices will continue rising at an unchanged rate," the council declared.

The report suggested that construction workers are pricing themselves out of jobs. Some 504,000 workers benefited from the "huge increase" in wages 22 per cent in this year's settlement-but the unemployment rate in construction was 11.9 per cent in October.

"Unquestionably the extremely large wage increases obtained this year and last year have contributed to this slack in the construction industry," the alert said.

The Council said wage increases now are the foremost problem in curbing inflation. The average rate of hourly pay has risen about 7 per cent in the past year, it said although out put per worker has increased markedly in recent quarters, thereby reducing the rise in labor costs per unit, the report noted:

"The chief concern is the failure of the average rate of increase of wages to slow down in response to the slack in the economy..."

The report avoided offering any guidepost for non inflationary wage settlements, but noted "the general price level tends to rise by the excess of wage increases over productivity increases."

And since productivity cannot be counted on for long to rise more than about 3 per cent a year, the Council said, a continuing 7 per cent annual increase in hourly pay "would commit the economy to a continuing inflation rate of about 4 per cent."

Weaving Time In A Tapestry

It was raining. People in raincoats, probably connected in some way with University Officialdom, were directing traffic, a difficult task since there were hundreds of cars and none of them knew where they were going. We asked for James House and were directed to Thoreau.

My father, my sister and I carried all my stuff from Thoreau to James in a driving rain, some people I had never seen before greeted me as a long lost wallet. They sold me a beanie, membership in good standing in James House, and gave me a key to room 415.

Soon enough I went to a cattle auction in Boyden and I was a college student, a UMass student.

I went to my classes practically all the time, studying every night. Someone told me when I was little that high school was going to be really hard, and college a thirty hour a day proposition. Well, high school hadn't been that hard, but I was still trembling before the college myth, so every night I hit the books for three or four hours.

The University had just approved a visitation policy that would allow guys into girls' rooms and vice-versa. It was a radical step at the time.

SDS was generally considered to be well away from the mainstream of the campus, and was at the same time the only visible radical organization. One day SDS announced that they planned to napalm a dog in protest to American use of napalm in Vietnam. Suddenly the campus came alive. Letter after letter was written to the MDC protesting SDS' announcement. People who hadn't said one word against the use of napalm were outraged a little, innocent, dog. Finally they announced that they had never intended to napalm the dog; they merely wished to point out to people that the use of napalm against people was at least as bad as it was against dogs.

That was about the extent of political activity on the campus that semester, although there was some controversy over ROTC.

Project 10 was new then, and the rest of the campus tended to shake their heads at the weirdos down in Moore and Pierpont. Rumor had it they were smoking dope and carrying on. (At the time there was one person on my corridor smoking, out of thirty-two people.) The Maroon Keys went down to Moore the first week of school, to scold the people there for their bad attitude. They were collecting money for Biafra instead of buying beanies. That didn't go over well with the Maroon Keys.

Three screaming idiots were running for President of the United States at the time. One was named Wallace, the others Humphrey and Nixon. The latter was elected. Although there was a growing feeling on campus that it didn't make much difference who won, there was an amazing amount of discussion, among the armchair quarterbacks, about the relative merits of Humphrey and Nixon. Somehow, in 1968, there seemed to be a difference between the two. The Gene McCarthy people spent their weekends on Long Island, compaigning for Allard Lowenstein. He won, and among his campaign workers, there was a sense of real accomplishment.

Students were not part of a national identity then. For the average student, the idea that "we are all outlaws in the eyes of America" would not have rung true. No one had been shot in Berkeley for wanting a park. No one had been shot at Kent for walking across campus during a demonstration. A lot of students who regularly break drug laws now did not break them then, and many even respected these laws. The classes of '69 and '70 were still undergraduates, and were far more conservative than today's students. To be called "Bums" by the President of the United States was an experience for which we would have to wait, as was his message that he would not pay any attention to our support of the cause of peace.

No, that was before we were where we are today, in a time when we were all allowed to be young, almost carefree less inclined to cynicism.

I feel a lot older than I did then. Measured by any tangible means, it hasn't been exceptionally long. It's only in subtle ways that I feel the time.

Somewhere, lost among the days that have passed since then, lies the shattered corpse of my innocence. I miss it. Peace.

TA Nun Doesn't Like Habit

And before you let your thoughts run wild, be informed that the story concerns one Sister Louise who functions as a teaching assistant in the History department. The "habit" she doesn't dig any more is the traditionally long, black dressed the Roman Catholic nuns were required to wear.

Got that?

When they moved from one side of the street to the other, recently, THE DAILY CALIFORNIAN recorded the event with a four-column picture captioned: "The naked truth of the matter is...."

The SOBs did their thing in the all-together. Must have been a traffic-stopper, even though they were all males.

Ya hear, Women's Lib?

CAMPUS PRESS COUNCIL at Louisiana State University is working on a Code of Responsibility for the campus publications, according to a report in THE DAILY REVEILLE. This is a switch, since most journalistic organizations are concerned more with censorship codes.

But then LSU is unique. It is the only campus this writer knows about which has adopted the British system of community press councils to permit the layman a channel of communication for his gripes against the press.

Basis for the Code is the Canons of Journalism of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

APATHY IS MURDER at Washington University. And its victim may be the STUDENT LIFE newspaper there, the editors warn.

In a recent editorial, titled "Help Wanted", the newspaper issued a "call on concerned students to step forward, make a commitment to this community, and help save the life of STUDENT LIFE."

They began their plea with, "The continued existence of STUDENT LIFE as a viable student publication on this campus is once again in doubt. On some Tuesday or Friday, sometime soon, the STUDENT LIFE newsstand will be empty. Where will the blame lie?

"Not with the administrators, who realize the consequences of any attempt to censor the newspaper; nor with the Trustees, though the thought has crossed their collective mind too often for our comfort; nor with the advertisers whose capitalistic motivations overcome most qualms about the opinions expressed in this newspaper.

"The blame lies, rather, with the Washington University student body, whose indifference and refusal to participate in the production of this paper has brought STUDENT LIFE to the brink of a major crisis..."

Take heed, all ye who read.

ADVERTISING IN THE CAMPUS PRESS is becoming more suggestive, as indicated by this one-liner used to draw attention to the wares of a habadasher called "The Joint":

When was the last time you got

We saw it in the Illinois State VIDETTE.

SPEAKING OF WHICH brings to mind the story in the Central Michigan LIFE which reported a mock trial in a Law of the Press class "so students may get the idea of what a real libel case would be like."

The "case" they argued involved one Janice Jumprope, a high school student who was named "Miss Cheerleader" of her local town. In the story, the reporter refers to her as a "local pom-pom girl."

Libel, anyone?

"Sundance" is an Irish Setter Puppy who lost an eye to a German Shepherd in Sproul Plaza at UCal, when he playfully nudged the bigger beast during a jug band bash.

It took the vet four days to try and save the eye. But $133 and one eye later, Sundance was committed to seeing only half his world.

And his owner may have a drop out of school after paying the vet's bill, even though the Sproul "freaks" hastily took up a collection.

FREE? FOR WHAT? ... While many college papers are plumping for financial independence, these days, THE VANGUARD of Portland (Ore) State University is sitting on the sidelines, wishing and wavering.

"Such a move would be disastrous," sayd Editor-in-Chief Don McManman.

But that's the way it is, in the "real" world.

Against Oppression? SMC Responds

It is rather disturbing that with an academic community, at least part of which purports to be sincerely concerned about human suffering, some of the most vicious acts of brutality and human degradation in Africa go unprotested and indeed even unnoticed by a large segment of the "concerned" community. We are writing this letter with particular reference to the recent invasion of Guinea by foreign forces.

Once again Portugal has extended its tentacles of aggression and inhuman atrocities to Africa, this time not only to its colonies but to the sovereign nation of Guinea.

Portugal is shamelessly denying the specific charges of its involvement in the invasion. What it cannot deny is the barbaric acts of human degradation and genocide it continues to commit against Africans in the Portugese colonies. In 1961 alone, between 50,000 and 100,000 Africans were murdered by the Portugese forces in Angola. Many thousands have died since then in both Angola and Mozambique.

Portugal is only a part of a general system of exploitation and oppression of the African people. Given the state of Portugal's poverty, it is inconceivable not to believe that it could only maintain these acts of armed aggression with external support and help. Evidence here are its ten heavily armed ships which have been in the waters of Guinea. It is also significant to note that Portugal is a member of NATO. It is not by accident that many of the Western governments support the apartheid regimes in South Africa, Angola, Mozambique, Rhodesia, and other parts of Africa in one way or another. It should not even have been suprising that the British government decided to resume arms sales to apartheid South Africa.

It is outrageous enough that we allow colonization to exist in the world, but when expansion of this system is carried out by armed aggression, it is time for us to open our eyes and actively protest these acts of genocide and work to eradicate them.

We hope that in its work against oppression, the concerned section of this community would henceforth make itself aware of and address itself to the oppression in Africa, and elsewhere.

To The Editor:

Last Tuesday the UMass chapter of SDS distributed the latest edition of their national newspaper New Left Notes which refered to "SMC's 'Elect a liberal' politics." This reference to the political position of the Student Mobilization Committee (SMC) is complete distortion and a product solely of the imagination of the editors of New Left Notes. SMC from its inception has been committed to "Mass actions independent of all parties and institutions of the government." This commitment to independent mass action has been upheld in practice by SMC's use of the tactic of peaceful, legal demonstrations to organize everyone who supports the demand of immediate withdrawal from S.E. Asia and SMC's absolute refusal to support the election bid of any of the so called "dove" politicians.

On this campus SMC has always supported the principle of independent political action and has worked actively to oppose the co-option of the Anti-War Movement by Liberal electoral politics. During the May Strike SMC issued two leaflets arguing against supporting the election bid of, liberal politicians trying to use the Movement for their own political ends. One of these leaflets entitled Why Don't We Learn from Our Mistakes? pointed out that the Anti-War Movement gained nothing from the support it gave Lyndon Johnson, who was the "peace" candidate in 1964, and Eugene McCarthy who "dropped out" after he lost his election bid. The leaflet then pointed out that the best tactic for the Anti-War Movement was its continued independence.

When I made a local spokesman for SDS aware of the fabricated nature of the New Left Notes charge, he continued to assert the falacious charge. However he was unable to give a single instance of SMC working in the election campaign of any liberal politician. He said that when SMC allows liberal politicians to speak at Anti-War demonstrations that it was supporting their election. The absurdity of this contention is obvious to anyone except those with the lurid, sectarian imagination of SDS. SMC is building an Anti-War Movement to include anyone and everyone who supports the demand to bring all the troops home now.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19–Saul D. Alinsky, who has spent a lifetime preaching and practicing radicalism, today called the "New Far Left" a "horribly sick cult," which, if unchecked, would inevitably make a police state of America.

"Any real revolutionary party would execute them as dangerous counterrevolutionaries," he said in a speech at a Smithsonian Institutions symposium on protest and change.

He also assailed what he described as the "masochism" of white liberals who, he said, overlook even the most outrageous behavior by blacks instead of treating them as fallible human beings.

Unless whites "overcome their own hangups so that they can both listen and speak to blacks in the same way that they would be listening and speaking to whites and vice versa," he said, "we are faced with a combination of black charlatans and white neurotics." The combination, he said, would sow "bitterness" and provide a comforting rationale for all racial bigots, black and white.

Mr. Alinsky, who has devoted 30 years to organizing the poor and politically outcast–he has been called a "Jewish Robin Hood" and calls himself a "professional radical"–equated the "madness" and "rhetoric of hate" of the Weathermen and Black Panthers to the speeches of Vice President Agnew.

He attributed some of the "sterility" of the current Far Left revolutionary movement to the late Senator Joseph R. McCarthy. His "political inquisition of the early 1950's," Mr. Alinsky said, wiped out many 1930's radicals, and others who survived clung to obsolete theories, "mouthing the pre-technological society's now-irrelevant revolutionary formulas."

"Thus," he told the symposium, "the present radical generation was aborted into the world without radical parents or guides. Is it any wonder that they cooped themselves into a chronological cage, rejecting anything over 30 years of age, from persons to history?"

Of extremists, he said: "The bombing, sniping of police, the Marin County (Calif.) courtroom shootout, the glorification of the assassination of the late Senator Robert Kennedy as revolutionary acts are typical of this horribly sick cult.

"Their actions torpedo that reformation of large masses so essential as the prelude to revolutionary change. Part of what is happening is just straight criminal action in search of a political rationale, such as the absurdity that 'all black prisoners in every penitentiary are political prisoners.'"

The real "masses" in this country are the middle class, he said, representing 80 per cent of the population. "Here the poor are the minority. Here, most of the people are dieting while the have-nots are dying."

"The power lies in the vast middle-class mass," the speaker declared. "It is here where the die will be cast."

He cited how minority groups such as California's migrant farm workers had turned to the middle class with their grape boycott. "The beauty of this generation," he said, "is that the big majority of our activists are very rapidly becoming politically educated and starting to get into organization–to build power and recognizing that there is no short-cut."

"They have accepted what is the hardest lesson for youth: that you can't have instant change and that you must begin from where you are." (reprinted from the New York Times)

The Only Way!

Do you know where you are going? Well it is not straight ahead of you. You are going in all directions which takes you no where except to the inferno of "insanity". Now I can see it, the tool that took all of you and myself away from the once possible road to the heavenly happiness: "reality". If you don't realize what the tool is, which is pulling you apart, then you are floating around in space, in a bubble of frustration and of course, of unhappiness. If you do realize what the tool is, then you will know that you have gone too far, and it will probably be too late to do anything about it.

If you have realized what the tool is, you have the choice of two doors: the first, if you are considered to have a good mind, is the door of higher education which will show you what infinity is and which might even make you infinite. (By the way, the abstract is also the infinite. Think about it!) Once you have taken that door, don't lie to yourself anymore, accept that you are dying. You have no horizons no goals left; you have just a big ocean of ideas, of nothingness around you and you will be alone forever. But if you know that you have a better mind than just a good mind, then you will choose the door of progress which is opposite the door of education, but the chances are that you don't have the qualifications to pass through that golden gate. The qualifications are very simple; you have to be beautiful, in other words, your mind has to be the mirror reflecting pure reality, NATURE.

Now, let me show you what your chances are of becoming beautiful since you are so ugly because you have had at least twelve years of corruption; they are absolutely nil if you remain in society; you will be condemned. If you retract your body at once from society and place it in heaven, NATURE, and if you make your almost infinite mind start to respect and admire and use and love that beautiful force, then will the door of progress burst open for you and then will happiness be your goal which you will taste the beginning of it at once.

YANN MILCENDEAU

Terrorism

To The Editor:

John Brentlinger's letter (Nov. 24) is a marvelous compilation of confused thinking. "People," he tells us, "no longer believe that this society and university can be changed in any basic way without terrorism." Really? All the evidence I have seen indicates that the vast majority of people believe in peaceful change. Furthermore, it is simply not true that "Everyone knows that the normal channels all work for the status quo and see no alternative except in violent, terroristic acts." Everyone does not believe this; can the author be quite serious?

Stranger yet is the assertion that, on the one hand, "rationality, discussion, debate are clogged by people who are either intimidated or paid off or blocked by the structural limitations of authoritarian institutions," and on the other hand, "meaningful demonstration is possible only if it threatens terrorism." What is terrorism if not intimidation? What is more authoritarian than the use of force?

The unkindest cut, doubtless, is the assertion that "the university is as uncritical of American capitalist activity as the Kiwanis in Main Street." I don't know what the Kiwanis are doing these days, but I do know that the university sustains – as indeed it should – many vociferous critics of the American capitalist system, including Professor Brentlinger himself.

Finally, the closing salutation, "Fight for Peace and Freedom," is a bit much. I've been told that that's precisely what we're doing in Vietnam. Peace and freedom are worthy goals; they deserve better than to be made another excuse for violence.

Women's Lib Teach-In

The University of Massachusetts' Women's Liberation Teach-In will be one of the few relevant events happening on campus this year. All women participating will have a chance to shed roles and defenses, and deal with women as women. We will discuss the crisis of being a 53% underdog, and how the political reality of this affects our personal lives; how through gaining our identities minus the constant and disgusting reference to genitalia, we can function as a strong group of revolutionary peoples; how by demanding free 24 hr. day care centers, equal pay for equal work, free abortion on demand and access to birth control is demanding civil rights needed to survive.

The teach-in begins at 1 p.m. on Saturday, December 12th., in the Student Union Ballroom, with an introductory panel on Myth Destroying. It will be womaned by members leading the workshops (which follow immediately on the 8th floor of the Campus Center).

The workshops include many facets of the Women's Movement. The neuroses of unconfronted male egos which try to paralyze half of the population by games of "weaker sex" and "hormonal differences" will be discussed. The fierce oppression faced by the members of Gay Liberation and the idea that the movement is comprised of "ugly rejects who couldn't get a man" are other topics to be voiced. There will be a workshop on the Third World Woman, her complex oppression, and on what basis Third World and white women can further coalesce. The function of the nuclear family as solely an economic unit, and opportunities for alternative lifestyles will be discussed. We have scheduled a karate demonstration to emphasize the woman's need to defend her body. Films, music, poetry and other expressions of women's repressed creativity will be part of the teach-in. A health food breakfast will be offered early Sunday morning.

The concept of the teach-in being "closed" to men must be discussed. It is important that every woman gets a chance to feel sisterhood; get a chance to release herself, even if for 24 hrs., from the binding roles and assignments imposed upon her. The atmosphere is relaxed and beautiful. Mother, lover and slave become women learning through and about other women. The activities for men will be listed.

If there remains any question about the activities for the night of December 13th., please contact 253-9357.

International House Moves Toward Reality

By WAYNE SOINI
Staff Reporter

For several years now administrators and students have been working to form an International House on campus despite continual disappointments. The Faculty Senate at last has in its hands a clear and practical conception destined to become the international baby on campus either next Fall or Fall, 1972.

At a meeting in Prince House yesterday afternoon, the Faculty Senate Committee on Foreign Student Affairs, chaired by Doctor Anwar Syed of the government department read a four-page draft proposal for an International House was submitted by President Keh "Baba" Tung of the International Students' Club.

Although the proposal was not accepted as written, its ideas were the basis of discussion and direction of action.

The proposal as written designated Arnold House as the International Center location. Although the location of an International Center in Arnold House was not absolutely ruled out, testimony by some of the twenty people present, including the Assistant Co-ordinator for Northeast Area, Robert Campbell, indicated that the Arnold House location would be less than ideal because there is competition for the office space presently available on the lower two of the five floors of the dorm, and because the dorm was an old dorm.

Since one of the critical needs of foreign students is for kitchenette areas, Campbell said, "Those of you who have been on campus for a while will remember the Abigail Adams House, the same type of wooden-frame building as Arnold House, which burnt down very quickly." Tung said that he had yet to see Doctor Gage with regard to the health danger, or fire or safety danger, but that he knew that there were on the drawing-boards plans for kitchenettes on every floor of Thatcher House.

At meeting's end some of the parties present agreed to meet to investigate for the committee the possibility of non-conflicting or shared usage of Arnold House facilities.

"No one wants a dormitory composed solely of foreign students," Mrs. Silva, secretary of the meeting, said in paraphrasing the proposal. The dormitory population is to be selected from applicants.

It is to be primarily undergraduate and, possibly, the majority of students living in the International House would be Americans. Stressing the meaning of the International House, chairman Syed said after the meeting, "An International House would be of more advantage to American students than to foreigners."

He mentioned his experiences with International Houses and International Centers at the University of Chicago and University of Pennsylvania, saying that facilities were more frequently used and activities attended largely by Americans.

The establishment of an International Center on campus, he felt, would add to "the depth and extent of social interaction between foreigners and natives."

Assistant Master for SW Residential College, Walter Silva suggested a "take-over by assimilation" of another dormitory. Rather than taking advantage of the Arnold House offices as they are vacated by the Math Department, he felt that a "better dorm might be obtained by gradual use of rooms as they become available through normal turn-over.

The idea met a favorable reaction as being a possible alternative. Barbara Burn, Director of International Programs at the University, mentioned that such a take-over of Knowlton House had been quite possible last year, but that the possibility of using Prince House as an International House had attracted primary efforts last year and the Knowlton idea was left in mid-flight.

Baba Tung agreed, saying, "There is no problem in finding space. We can always find somewhere to meet. But we need a place to be identified as a student group."

A subcommittee will now draw up a draft "for sale" to administration and student-body. Hope is strong than an International House, including living and cooking areas for students, as well as an International Center, for social activities of a recreational and cultural nature, will be established by next Fall.

Additionally, language corridors and even academic activities may be embraced in the final draft proposal. Students interested in helping the project along may contact Baba Tung in Arnold House or Barbara Burn in Whitmore.

Faculty Workshops Slated For CC Tonight To Discuss Environment In Academic Courses

An Environment Counseling Workshop will be held tonight in Room 174-6 of the Campus Center starting at 7:30 p.m.

A group of 15 faculty members from various departments have volunteered to participate as counselors since there is no environmental department where students can go for advice in scheduling environment-oriented courses for next semester.

A limited number of updated course listings of all environment courses offered at the university will be available at the workshop.

The workshop is open to all university students.

Activities at the meeting will be as follows:

Introduction: Quint Dawson–CEQ
Identification of Faculty "Counselors"–J. Larson

A description of the faculty efforts to assemble a catalog of courses on environmental quality along with the introduction of the faculty volunteers and their area of interest.

Open Discussion–30 minutes of questions from the floor–answered by appropriate faculty.

Two Groups Aid Victims Of Flood

Two UMass student groups are conducting fund drives to aid victims of the tidal wave in East Pakistan.

Both the Pakistani Students' Association and the ROTC's special Pakistan Relief Fund are collecting for the victims.

Donations to the Pakistani Students' Association may be sent to the group's secretary Muhammed Ashraf, the Office of International Programs, Whitmore. Checks may be made out to East Pakistan Cyclone Fund and will be sent directly to the Pakistani Embassy.

Contributions to the Pakistan Relief Fund drive which is sponsored by ROTC faculty and students may be marked "Pakistan Relief Fund" and sent to the UMass Cashier's Office. This drive will continue on campus with solicitation at student residences, according to John C. Murphy, Holyoke student who is drive spokesman.

Record Review

"Goin' Around The Wheelhouse Twice"

By LANCE REIDY
Fine Arts Staff

"JAIME BROCKET # 2", Capitol Records

This is a recording of sad-eyed optimism, recorded through hazy smoke. It is generally unsuitable for sunny days, unless you're in a similar place to Jaime, in which case it should be played with breakfast coffee, to set a mood for the day's insignificant but necessary hassling.

FINE ARTS

He is probably not for intellectuals, nor for that matter, immature people of whatever age, or for people who serve duty, or honor, or country, above God (however you care to describe him). He is, frankly, for people who are aware of the flowers inside the self, and are also aware of the difficulty in germinating within today's soil.

The opening piece, Hoyt Axton's "Saturday's Child", features an exceptionally effective Slide guitar, played by Brockett, which promotes the intensity of feeling inherent in an up-tempo blues ballad, and can certainly be appreciated by anyone who has had a volatile family background.

"Down River", by David Ackles, flows very nicely from Saturday's Child", as an exposition of a Saturday child grown up bad (to society) but damn good inside. An electric guitarist new to me, Yaj Sleig, weaves a wringing emotional lead line graphically punctuating the fact that "Time sure goes slow down river, when you're locked away," (and your tru-blue lady finds a new groin to grasp while you're (up) the river.). Comes off.

The third song, "Taurian Canticle (winter ocean) For People And Dulcimer", an instrumental written by Brockett, featuring him on a solo dulcimer, is one of the most aptly-titled songs I've ever experienced. Canticle....bright gray; bittersweet, dull-red leaves, and brown, rock-bound waves, reflective bloodshot eyes, peacoat seashore. If you'll let it, this song will take you places.

The standout song on the album, to this audial eye, follows "Canticle". "If the Game Were Played with Pennies", by Judy Marymor and Brian Bowers features Brockett soloing on autoharp and vocal. This is, bar none, the most haunting song I have ever heard. Club sandwiches stuffed with velvet pain, and spread over with awareness that Hellman's could not conceive of. If the game were played with pennies, your coin is consciousness, your coin is pain. Let me be your Saturday (Saturday) but not your sometime lover. A reprise of "Canticle" unfolds at the end of "Game", and I swear, I have listened to the album three times before I realized it was a reprise, and not the final part of "Game". It flows together that well. A Taurian Canticle, it seems, can also bring you back, if you let it.

Side Two is more expository and less cohesive than the linear college which is more or less the form of side one. The first cut is "First and Utter Hours (of Dawn)" by N. Clark Schell. This piece flashed me back to recollections of the Jack Kerouac behind his words, and thoughts of the countless others, the sensitive souls who know what the road is all about.

Steve Martin's "Black Beauty" is a hokey-funky-funny song about them thar marry-jew-wanna cigarettes, and various other nutrient pleasantries for the head. Definitely not top-forty material. Brockett with a comic mask on.

The last cut on the album has Brockett doing reasonable justice to Dylan's "Just Like Tom Thumb's Blues". Not an easy task, by any means. It comes off.

Jaime Brockett's voice is no thing of beauty, but it's communicative, much as Neil Young's is, only more raspy.

Underground Films Set For Saturday

The University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council will sponsor its first film festival Saturday, Dec. 5, with the general theme: "An Experience in Revolutionary Aesthetics–the American Underground Film."

The group of outstanding films has been procured for this occasion and plans call for two one-hour showings separated by an informal coffee hour in the nearby University Art Gallery. The showings will take place at 7:30 p.m. and 8 p.m. in Herter Hall 227 and 231, and due to the limited capacity, only 300 tickets will be available. General admission tickets to the evening of films will be $1 to University undergraduates and $1.50 to others and may be obtained at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall.

Films include "Physical Fitness," "Penny Bright and Jimmy Weatherspoon," "X Film," "Cosmic Ray," "Eaux D'Artifice," "Adabar," and "Hold Me While I'm Naked." Also, "Blue Moses," "Mothlight," "Schwechater," "Horse Over Tea Kettle," "Phenomenon" and "Dance of the Looney Spoons." In addition, two films by resident film-makers Demian and Frank Ward may be shown.

Recognizing that its broad program in the arts for this campus was incomplete without involvement in film, the University's Fire Arts Council seeks to establish a film society which would undertake future film festivals. Those interested in forming such a group are invited to leave their names with the Council office. Charles Eidsvik of the University's English department faculty will serve as advisor to the group.

Chamber Music Tonight

The University of Massachusetts Collegium, under the direction of Alan Harler, will present a concert Wednesday, Dec. 2, at 8 p.m. in Herter 227 at the University.

The Collegium is a group of UMass music majors formed to study and perform ancient and seldom performed music. The group includes instrumentalists and vocalists. The co-directors are Alan Harler and Charles Lehrer.

The program includes four ballades by Guillaume de Machaut, Sonata No. 13 and Canzona No. 2 by Giovanni Gabrielli, the Kyrie and the Gloria from the Messe de Minuit pour Noel by Marc-Antoine Charpentier, four songs by William Billings, and a scherzo for instruments and two madrigals for chorus and instruments by Claudio Monteverdi.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Sox Gamble, Get Aparicio Trade Andrews, Alvarado

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The Boston Red Sox, shooting for the American League pennant, and the Baltimore Orioles, trying to defend it, both dipped into the increasingly active trade market at baseball's winter meetings Tuesday.

The Red Sox swapped two players to Chicago for veteran shortstop Luis Aparicio and the Orioles sent four men to San Diego for pitchers Pat Dobson and Tom Dukes.

The biggest trade of the day was Boston's acquisition of Aparicio, the 36 year old short stop who enjoyed his finest season in 1970, batting .313 for the White Sox.

The Red Sox sent second baseman Mike Andrews and short stop Luis Alvarado to Chicago in the swap.

"We think we can win the pennant with Aparicio," said Eddie Kasko, manager of the Red Sox. "No, I'm not concerned about his age, not if we win next year."

Kasko said Aparacio would play shortstop and Rico Petrocelli would move to third for the Red Sox next year. George Scott shifts to first and Carl Yastrzemski returns to the outfield in other defensive shifts resulting from the trade.

Rookie Doug Griffin, acquired from California in the Tony Conniglairo trade last month, inherits Andrews' second base job. Andrews, a Boston regular for the past four years, will move right into Chicago's lineup under new manager Chuck Tanner.

"He's going to be my leader in the infield," said Tanner. "He'll take charge."

Tanner said Alvarado, only 21, would get a full shot at Chicago's shortstop job. "Reports from our scouts compare Alvarado to a young Luis Aparicio," Tanner said.

Andrews batted .253 with 17 homers and 65 runs batted in for the Red Sox in 1970. Alvarado split the season between Boston and Louisville, batting .224 in 59 games for the Red Sox.

Aparicio, a four time All Star and fourth leading hitter in the American League last season, is a 15 year veteran. He recently twisted a knee sliding into third base in a winter league game and his leg was placed in protective cast but he is expected to be ready for spring training.

Moving to San Diego with Phoebus, who was 5 5 for the world champion Orioles last season, are Enzo Hernandez, a highly touted shortstop, and pitchers Fred Beene and Al Severinsen.

Dobson, who moved to the Padres from Detroit in an interleague trade at the winter meetings a year ago, was 14 15 with 3.76 earned run average. Dukes was 1 6 with a 4.04 ERA in 53 appearances, all of them in relief.

Phoebus, who pitched a no hitter for the Orioles against Boston in 1968, had a 3.08 ERA in 21 starts for the Orioles.

Hernandez batted .266 for Rochester, while Beene was 9 3 and Severinsen, a reliever, was 4 6.

Herbel, who came to the Mets from San Diego last September 1, was 9 7 in 76 games for the Padres and Mets last season with a 4.57 ERA. Aspromonte batted 213 in 62 games for the Braves.

Since these meetings began Monday, nine transactions have been announced and several more, some of them reportedly involving big names, are close to completion.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Marlene Dietrich argues with lexicographers who term astrology a pseudoscience. The great actress declares, "What conceit to think that we human beings are immune to influences of which we have acknowledged the power. The fact that we cannot put our mental finger on the exact form these influences take cannot give us the audacity to deny them." That is Capricorn Marlene Dietrich's view of dictionaries which editorialize rather than define.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Accent on how to fulfill desires. Be willing to make changes. Welcome opportunity for travel, creative thinking. Friend you take for granted performs meaningful service.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Accent on accumulating required material for special project. Build support. Refuse to be lulled into attitude of carelessness. Press your advantage. Push ahead toward major goal.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Good lunar aspect stresses ability to perceive long-range possibilities. Be analytical. Don't accept surface indications. Face facts as they exist. Budget your time. Measure actions. Don't rush.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Your work, how you relate to associates — these areas are emphasized. Stick to practical issues. Leave theories to others. Find out where you want to go — and why.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Lie low. Let others do most of the talking. Not wise to commit yourself. Applies especially to legal matters. Finish rather than begin projects. Time is on your side.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Take stock of prospects. Streamline approach to various problems. Stress independence, originality. You make headway by display of confidence, knowledge and daring.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Good lunar aspect accents romance, creative endeavors. Your hunches prove accurate. Speculative ventures appeal. Younger persons look to you as example. You can live up to potential.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Property, basic security matters are emphasized. Heed voice of experience. Avoid tendency to be careless with details. You may be receiving a flurry of messages. Refuse to be distracted.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): You may be taking short journey. Check directions, instructions and reservations. Maze of red tape opens, providing opportunity for significant advance. Respond accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Accent on finances, possessions, how to add to income. Be alert to special opportunity. Gemini individual proves a valuable ally. Outline plans and execute them with precision.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Take initiative. Emphasize the new and original. Definite gain indicated. Cycle is high; push personal ambitions. Family member makes constructive suggestions — heed it.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): One who is confined to home, hospital needs encouragement. Provide it. Work in conjunction with special group, organization. Stress realistic approach.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, receptive to needs of others. Recent block to efforts due to be removed. Forward progress will make efforts if you are willing to change with the times. Keep open mind.

Hoopsters Open Up With 98-63 Win Over St. A's

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Breaking out of a 16-minute cold-shooting spell in the first half, the UMass basketball team built up a big lead early in the second half and coasted to a 98-63 victory over an out-classed but game St. Anselm's quintet before 4200 fans at the Cage home-opener last night.

The Redmen got their season off on a solid footing as Julius Erving's extra-superb play, the shooting and floor play of guards John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara, and a very strong performance by forward Chris Coffin made their record 1-0 in this season-opening contest.

Erving, UMass' super-exciting junior co-captain, tallied 32 points and nabbed 23 rebounds, but his contribution to this win went way beyond that. In his familiar fashion ot passing off, making fast breaks work, slowing the action down when necessary, and generally keeping the coolest head on the court, he more than led the Redmen to their final winning point spread of 35 points.

Betancourt and Pagliara were also great in this one. The former, filling in the scoring void left by the departure of high-pointman Ray Ellerbrook, tallied 22 big ones, connecting on 10 of 14 shots from the field and two of two from the foul line.

Pagliara, in his first varsity start ever for UMass, played the game like a veteran and came through with 16 points, hitting five of nine from the field and all six of his attempts from the line. Both Betancourt and Pagliara had six assists, best on the club.

Also starting his first tilt was junior Chris Coffin, and he did a fine job all around. He scored but six points, but he grabbed seven rebs and was a very important team player when he was out on the floor.

As far as that first half went, it was an entirely different ballgame as the score was frozen, 27-27, after 16 minutes and 15 seconds of action had elapsed. UMass' shooting was off, and St. Anselm's was staying close by virtue of playing a deliberate style of basketball.

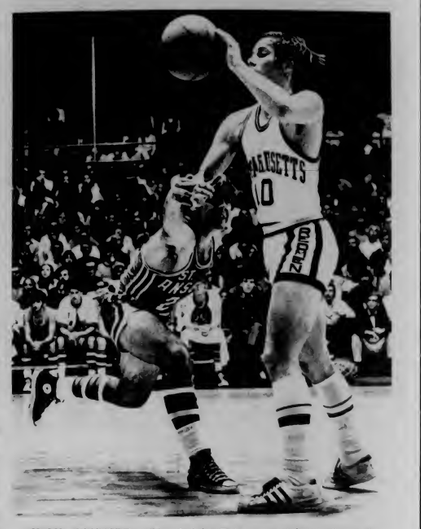
However, the Redmen rattled off six quick points in the next minute and 11 seconds as Betancourt banged a 20-footer, Pagliara dropped in a pair of foul hoops and senior co-captain Ken Mathias stipped in a turn-around baseline jumper, after a beautiful feed from Pagliara. That made the count 33-27.

An Erving goal-tending play on a Hawk shot gave the visitors their 29th point, but another Betancourt 20-footer, an Erving 18-footer and a Mathias tap-in of a Betancourt miss jetted UMass into a ten-point, 39-29, lead.

Tom Gentile of St. A's and Erving traded baskets in the last minute of first-half action, making the count at intermission, 41-31.

The Redmen were roaring on their return to the contest in the second half as they took the ten-point lead and stretched it into leads of 20, 31 and 39.

UMass tallied the first 14 points of the period, making it 55-31, in four minutes, and the junior trio of Pagliara, Coffin and Betancourt accounted for all of them. Pagliara made good on an 18-foot jumper at the outset of the half and added two foul shots for four points.



Coffin flipped in two running layups, one on a ball that he stole and raced three-quarters of the court with. He also sank one from the charity line for a total of five markers. Betancourt hit a couple of long-bombers, in addition to one from the line, also for five points.

Over the next three minutes, the Hawks came to life a little bit, scoring nine points, but were still behind the Redmen, 60-40, with 12:48 showing on the clock.

At this point, the UMass offense really started to click as the home team scored 26 points in the next eight minutes of action to only seven for St. Anselm's, thus making the advantage 86-47, with 5:03 left to go in the game.

Erving highlighted this scoring burst with nine points, followed by Betancourt and Pagliara, who had six a piece, Rich Vogeley, who had three, and Tom Austin, who had two.

The tilt was all over except for the shouting. And, boy, was there ever some shouting, as the excited gathering applauded when Redman starters were replaced by Redman reserves and cheered madly when the team crept closer to the 100-point mark in the closing stages of the game, only to miss by two points.

HOOP NOTES—With one minute and one second to go, Erving was taken out of the game, and received a standing ovation of about 40 seconds....Head UMass coach Jack Leaman summed up his feelings after the game in one word, "Great!".....UMass shot a fine 52 percent from the floor for the whole game, recording that mark after shooting only 44.7 in the first half...Vogeley was fourth highest scorer for the Redmen, with ten points in only 14 minutes of play....He was just a little off from playing a really great game as he picked up some quick fouls and missed a couple of hoops by only inches....Bill Kesgen, Tom Austin and Bill Greeley played well for UMass in reserve roles....The Redmen also shot well from the foul line--87 percent....Whichever referee called the traveling violations on Erving must have been watching the guy for the first time....Because of the way Erving can control the movements of his body, it is often easy to mistake one of his steps for three of another basketball player...How about those new uniforms!.....The reaction to these new spanking-white UMass shirts, shorts and warm-up clothing was very much in the affirmitive whomever one talked to.....They sure did brighten up the dull yellow-aura of the Cage.

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Led by the shooting Peter Trow, the rebounding of John Olson and the passing of Rick Pitino, the UMass freshman basketball team soundly defeated St. Anselm's frosh, 85-69.

Last night in their season opener the Little Redmen received a warm welcome by a capacity crowd. They responded with some sharp outside shooting, as they ran off streaks of 12 and 15 points. But opening game nervousness was evident, as the Little Redmen committed an abundance of fouls and turned the ball over numerous times on the fast break.

The game started impressively for the frosh as successive backward lay-ups by Skinner and Olson (the latter off of a beautiful Pitino pass) gave the freshmen the lead.

Two baskets later at 17:35 it was 4-4 when the home team started to move. With some slick passing by Pitino the Redmen ran off 12 straight points, and St. Anselm's was in deep trouble. But the Redmen cooled off as the Hawks settled down.

Although the frosh had built their lead to 33-15, fouls started to take their toll, as the 13-point halftime margin of 44-31 was the direct result of the 13 fouls committed by the Little Redmen.

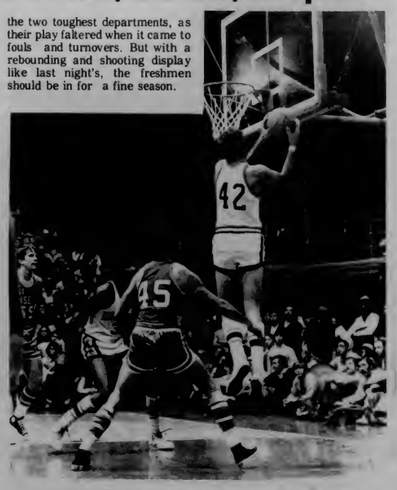
The first half of play saw Skinner pick up three personals, and Craig Boyles, his replacement, pick up four before the half was over. This foul situation, in addition to a sloppy brand of ball, were the key factors in the Hawk comeback, which was to peak in the early moments of that second half.

Just seconds into the final 20 minutes Skinner picked up his fourth and fifth fouls as Dennis McHugh entered the line-up. A rash of Redman fouls followed, and the Hawks were making their move. With a full head of steam the visitors cut the lead to seven, but the 51-44 score was the closest St. Anselm's was to come for the rest of the night.

With Trow and Pitino pumping in the points, and Levine and Olson concentrating on the boards, the Little Redmen scored 15 unanswered points. The 64-44 lead sewed it up for the frosh. Coasting to an 85-69 victory, the freshman bench for the call, as the Little Redmen took their home opener with little trouble.

The 17-point victory was quite satisfying, but said assistant Coach Ray Ellerbrook, "We definitely have played better ball. I think that there was a great deal of nervousness and eagerness on the part of the players in their first collegian game. Once we got warmed up though, we started to come around."

The early game nervousness was best reflected in the foul line statistics. In the first half the Little Redmen managed only four of nine free throws, whereas the second half saw them making nine of 11.



Although their floor play left something to be desired the Redman board work was extremely impressive. Outrebounding the Hawks 61-40, the freshmen came through brilliantly in a department that will be the key to future success.

Said Ellerbrook, "Trow played an excellent game. He was our highest scorer and he was among the high rebounders in the game. I think the team as a whole played a bit sloppy, but remember this was the first game."

Trow, UMass' highest scorer, was also the game's leading scorer as he collected 23 points, hitting on ten of 16 fieldgoal attempts and three of four foul shots. Trow also came up with 13 rebounds, second in the game only to Olson's 14. Pitino was second in the way of scoring with 20, but his ten assists were his key contribution of the evening.

As a team the Redmen handily outshot the Hawks, connecting on 36 of 77 field goal attbh ts to St. Anselm's 23 of 77. From the line the percentages were much closer as UMass hit on 13 of 20, compared with St. Anselm's 23 of 31.

The Little Redmen excelled in the two toughest departments, as their play faltered when it came to fouls and turnovers. But with a rebounding and shooting display like last night's, the freshmen should be in for a fine season.

Mrs. Dubois To Speak On 3rd World Struggle

Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois, Afro-American author, political activist and the widow of W.E.B. DuBois will be the guest of the Distinguished Visitor's Program and the Department of Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst on December 3rd. Mrs. DuBois will speak to a general audience at 8 p.m. in the Student Center Auditorium. The subject of her talk will be "THE WEST, AFRICA, AND THE MIDDLE EAST".

Mrs. DuBois was educated at Oberlin College and did graduate study at Yale University and the Sorbonne. She is the author of books of Phyllis Wheatley, Benjamin Banneker, DuSable-the founder of Chicago, Paul Robeson, Booker T. Washington and a forthcoming volume on the life of her late husband. Written for young adults, the biographical series was intended to educate black youth to roles that black men and women have played in the development of the United States and in the struggle for black liberation.

Among her many political and literary activities, Mrs. DuBois was a founder and first editor of Freedom Ways the journal of the Afro-American liberation struggle. Mrs. DuBois, while assisting and participating in the scholarly and political activities of her husband, maintained a career and public personality of her own. While Dr. DuBois was working on the Encyclopedia of Africa and African Peoples under the auspices of the Ghanian regime of the Osegeyfo Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, Mrs. DuBois served as first director of national television in Ghana.

During recent years Mrs. DuBois has resided in Cairo, Egypt and has travelled widely in the middle-east, Africa, and is one of the few westerners that has been allowed to travel extensively in the Peoples Republic of China. She currently writes and lectures on various aspects of the Third World struggle. She is particularly interested and authoritative on the liberation struggle in Africa.

The U.S. State Department at first refused Mrs. DuBois a visa to visit the country of her birth, however, after a public outcry from the black community, the visa was granted.

A spokesman for the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies said, "We are very honored to present Mrs. DuBois to the University Community. She embodies the very spirit of pan-african unity and represents, as did her late husband, a life of commitment to the struggle of black peoples everywhere."

Mrs. Dubois Extends Visit

Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois who will be giving the D.V.P. lecture this evening will be extending her visit to the university by a day. She will arrive on campus on Thursday morning and will leave the area on Saturday, Dec. 5th.

Following is Mrs. DuBois' schedule at present:

Thurs., Dec. 3rd

12:30 Lunch. Representatives of Black Student Groups. Campus Center
2:30 Meeting with students. Coffee Shop, Black Cultural Center
6:30 Dinner. Representatives Distinguished Visitors Program and Five-College Black Studies Committee
8:00 Lecture. "The West, Africa, and the Middle East". Auditorium, Campus Center

Senate Supports, Rescinds Return Of Firearms

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate managed to first pass a bill restoring firearms to campus for certain groups, then pass a bill saying it does not necessarily approve of any firearms on campus, and then voted to rescind both bills.

Senator Bill Abbott summed up the two hours thus spent with the vigorously applauded comment: "It's now twenty of ten and we haven't done anything!"

The only other business considered before this paper's deadline consisted of minor financial motions and a bill supporting a university system of open enrollment.

The crux of the firearms issue was whether or not the Senate should "request Chancellor Tippo to allow the Flying Redmen drill team to store their de-activated rifles in an appropriate place on campus and allow the University, Stockbridge, and visiting rifle teams to have their firearms on campus provided they are properly secured and used only in the rifle range area, as Senator Karen MacNutt's bill read.

Senator MacNutt argued that the campus has calmed down and returned to rationality since last semester when the firearms in question were removed, relieving the tense conditions which led to their removal. She said that these firearms have never caused any trouble or personal injury in their years on campus and further that they would be stored completely safely. Non-Senator Steve Kinner of the Stockbridge Rifle Team also spoke on what he called the harmlessness of the rifles and on the fact that there are no off-campus facilities which would allow the rifle teams to exist without guns on campus.

Treasurer Rick Verrochi led off debate against the bill. He spoke on how "volatile" the climate of society is, and on how the presence of any kind of gun is provocative of trouble. Senator Lee Sandwen of the Student Matters Committee, in which the bill had been studied, reported out unfavorably on the bill. The Committee considered guns to be provocative and wanted to work for a completely gunless campus, according to Sandwen.

Further negative debate by Senator Abbott was concerned with what he termed discrimination in the bill against any student on campus who wanted to practice target shooting but was not on the rifle teams.

At this time, the question was divided so that the Senate could vote to restore firearms to either the drill team or the rifle teams without restoring them to both.

After a few minutes of further debate, the Senate reconsidered the division and voted not to return the bill to its undivided state.

Senators in favor of the bill continued to debate that there is nothing physically or psychologically dangerous about these particular firearms. Opposed to the bill, President Glenn Elters continued the debate that guns are "antithetical to the university community" because they have a certain connotation of provocation. He felt that a pro-vote would upset the majority of students. In response to this, Senator Nick Apostola contended that the Senate cannot "legislate a feeling" for the whole University, no matter how strong the "pacifist" feeling may be.

Apostola called the question, which led to a roll call vote of 34-31 to carry the motion to restore the firearms. A move to reconsider was defeated by a 32-33-0 vote.

Next came a bill by Verrochi which he called an attempt to compromise. It stated that the Senate supports the Administration's banning all firearms from campus and resolving that the Senate recognizes, but does not necessarily approve of, the fact that the University Police and rifle teams still retain their firearms on campus. He intended this bill to show the mixed feelings toward firearms and to mean that the Senate is basically opposed to firearms but does not want to discriminate against teams affected. This bill was passed 33-22-9. A move to reconsider it was defeated.

"Because we have been bull-shitting ourselves into oblivion", Apostola then introduced a measure to rescind both of the bills that had just been passed. The measure passed and wiped out the past two hours of action.

Moving on to other business, the Senate passed several financial motions and then considered the one calling for open enrollment for the university system which it passed. Tomorrow's Collegian will contain details of this and the rest of the meeting which continued on after the Collegian's deadline.

SMC Announces Nat. Antiwar Conclave

About ten representatives from UMass will attend the National Convention of the U.S. Antiwar Movement December 4-6 at the Chicago Packinghouse Labor Center, Student Mobilization Committee (MOBE) chairwoman Claire Moriarty said yesterday.

The convention, sponsored by a number of organizations including the National Peace Action Coalition and the Student Mobilization Committee, will plan antiwar activities for the spring. These plans will be applied to second semester actions on the UMass campus, according to Miss Moriarty.

The convention will begin with a number of keynote speakers on Friday including representatives of the Amalgamated Meatcutters, Teamsters, and the West Coast SMC.

The convention is expected to be the largest and most significant antiwar meeting yet held, convention sponsors claim.

In other business at the MOBE meeting last night ways to combat the "large slump" in the antiwar movement were discussed.

It was decided to show the film depicting the actions at Kent State University last spring next semester.

The possibility of forming confrontations with on campus military recruiters was also discussed at the meeting.

The proceedings of this weekend's Chicago convention will be revealed by participants at the MOBE meeting to be held next Thursday at 8 p.m.

Amherst Selectmen Close Logs

By MAXINE FORWARD
Staff Reporter

The Amherst Town Selectmen, Tuesday, failed to renew the year old beer and wine licence of the popular Logs' Bar. James Mannes, partner of the absent proprietor RoyRosenblattrevealed that the refusal to renew the licence was a complete surprise to him.

Wilfred Toy, operator of the funeral home next to Logs, had started a petition to instigate the cancellation of the liquor licence. Toy stated that he represented some 160 persons in the feelings that the restaurant-bar was an eyesore, a public nuisance and a disgrace to the town.

In order to insure the closing down of Logs, Toy's petition also included the refusal of a common victualler's licence to Rosenblatt. By state law, a place selling beer and wine cannot operate without a restaurant licence. Because of this maneuver, Rosenblatt cannot appeal to the state Alcoholic Beverages Commission, as the ABC cannot veto the decision of the selectmen, since the food licence is also being revoked.

Toy described the place as being filled with dirty, bare footed and shirtless individuals. One young mother was seen nursing her child in the window. Such actions are offensive and badly influencing the town's children, he said.

A woman neighbor said that she was tired of having Rosenblatt's patrons us[illegible] he[illegible] backyard as a "comfort station." She also complained that her family could not sleep at night because of the loud music and the starting up of motorcycles at 1 and 1:30 in the morning.

James Mannes felt that the amount of noise described by the neighbors is highly over-rated and that the bar is not the "filthy mess"as inferred. The bar was completely renovated in August.

His general feeling was that the "attack" by his neighbors was nothing more than the old "anti-hippie backlash."

Mannes stated that Logs was one of the more colorful bars on the east coast and that it definitely helped the economy of Amherst. He expects that Logs will loose about $20,000 in the transition.

In closing, Mannes said of his patrons: "I wish to thank all the kids for their support over the last year. Sorry it didn't work out. You will be hearing from us in some other way, if possible. We are dedicated to the people. Love, from Jim and Log."

Here is a scene taken from Logs'. Although frequented by many students, the establishment is considered by some Amherst citizens to be an eyesore to the community. The loss of a renewal for the liquor and food license is expected by some to injure the Amherst economy.

Sibeko Speaks On Pan-Africanist Congress

By TONY SANTAGATI
Staff Reporter

"We regard the American system, as it stands today, as part of our enemy," said David Sibeko as he spoke last night on behalf of the Pan Africanist Congress (PAC) as part of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Speaking to a small group, Sibeko appealed to Americans not to allow American intervention against the PAC in their fight for the freedom of the people of Africa.

Citing major American interests in South Africa, including GM, Ford, Chrysler, the Chase Manhattan Bank, and the First National City Bank, Sibeko said that since the discovery of gold and other precious resources in South Africa, the people of South Africa have been oppressed by foreign imperialism.

PAC guerilla forces are now in action against the white governing forces using Chinese-made weapons, Sibeko stated adding that China is anti- imperialistic and therefore aids those fighting against imperialism.

"The Chinese are very peaceful people, but are willing to fight for their freedom," he said.

The PAC had organized a massive demonstration against the "passbook policy". The passbook was an identification book which Africans were required to carry with them to control most personal movements of the individuals. Due to the work of the PAC the "pass" laws were suspended, but not before incidents such as the shootings at Sharpeville, had occurred.

After the shootings at Sharpeville in 1960, David Sibeko decided, like thousands of young Azanians to join the Pan Africanist Congress , which had launched the campaign which led to the shootings.

By 1963, Mr. Sibeko, had been elected Regional Chairman of the Vaal, mother region of Sharpeville. In April he was arrested and spent seven months awaiting trial on charges under the Sabotage Act. But, because of lack of evidence, he was released. The police had wanted to place him under the 90-day detention law, but he slipped into the underground for four months before receiving instructions to leave the country to work in the External Mission of the P.A.C.

Companies Fined For Oil Spills

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Three major oil companies were fined more than half a million dollars in federal court Wednesday after pleading "no contest" to charges that they failed to have safety valves on some offshore oil wells in the Gulf of Mexico.

The three companies-Humble Oil Co., Union Oil Co., and Continental Oil Co.-each received the maximum fine of $2,000 for each count in the indictments.

A fourth company, Shell Oil Co., which is currently fighting a blazing offshore oil well fire, pleaded innocent and U.S. District Judge Fred J. Cassiery said he would set a trial date later.

The action came at an arraignment on indictments brought by the federal government in November.

Humble was fined $300,000 on 150 separate offenses involving 33 offshore wells; Union $24,000 on 12 counts involving eight wells; and Continental, $242,000 on 121 counts involving 24 wells.

No pollution was involved in any of the offenses. Firms were indicted after a grand jury investigation which stemmed from the massive Chevron Oil Co. offshore fire and oil spill last February. Chevron paid $1 million in fines after pleading no contest to 500 counts in that investigation.

The government has said all the companies are now complying with the law and emphasized that the offenses listed in the indictments were for past actions.

Since the Chevron spill, which went uncontrolled for a month, the federal Interior Department has doubled the Gulf Coast oil inspection force and further expansion in planned. The man who ordered the expansion, Walter J. Hickel, was fired from his post as U.S. Interior secretary last week by President Nixon.

Automakers Announce Another Price Increase

DETROIT (AP) - Citing increased material and labor costsChrysler Corp. followed Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. on Tuesday in announcing the second price increase this year.

Chrysler announced an average $15 hike in manufacturer's suggested retail prices for its 1971 cars would go into effect Wednesday.

The boost brings to $119, or 4.2 per cent, the average increase in Chrysler's new car prices over 1970 models, the automaker said. The previous announced price hike was made in September following introduction of 1971 models.

Chrysler said the additional boost was needed because of "increasing material costs and anticipated labor increases."

Not all Chrysler cars will be affected by the new hike, however. The price increases range from $21 for Dodge Challengers and Plymouth Barracuda specialty sports cars to $39 for Chrysler's top Imperial.

My Lai Witness Boyce Refuses To Testify

FT. BENNING, ga. (AP) - A My Lai veteran of Lt. William Calley Jr.'s Charlie Company platoon Wednesday became the first witness at his court martial to invoke the Fifth Amendment against self incrimination and refused to testify.

The witness, Allen Boyce, 22, of Bradley Beach, N.J., his blonde hair in a page boy cut, had been listed in published reports as present when Calley allegedly directed the execution of at least 30 Vietnamese civilians along trial inside My Lai March 16, 1968.

Boyce took the Fifth Amendment at the first question put to him relating to My Lai-whether he had ever served in Vietnam. Upon the insistence of the trial judge, Col. Reid Kennedy, he finally answered in the affirmative.

But from there on out Boyce took the Fifth Amendment eight times, each time defying Kennedy's order that he answer the question. Finally, the judge said:

"You don't want to testify to anything that occurred in the village of My Lai?"

"That's right," replied Boyce.

In his refusal to testify, Boyce was following a personal pattern he set last month at the Ft. Hood, Texas, court martial of one of Calley's squad leaders, DS. Sgt. David Mitchell.

Boyce was called there as a defense witness but refused to answer any questions. Mitchell was acquitted of charges of assault with intent to murder 30 of the alleged Vietnamese civilians victims who also figure in the Calley trial.

At the request of defense, Kennedy then ordered the court cleared of newsmen and spectators until the resumption Thursday of Calley's court martial. Lawyers remained to debate the question on what punishment Kennedy might adjudge against Boyce or, in the event the witness changed his mind, what areas of his testimony might legitimately be covered by his rights against self incrimination.

After less than an hour behind closed courtroom doors, lawyers emerged and told newsmen Kennedy had taken the entire matter under advisement with no ruling expected before Thursday.

Earlier, two former GIs from Calley's old platoon placed him in their testimony near the My Lai ditch where he was accused of engineering another mass execution of unarmed Vietnamese civilians. They said they heard automatic rifle fire but could not swear it was his.

Enlistees Admit Smoking Grass

WASHINGTON (AP)- More than 53 per cent of Army enlisted men polled in a survey admitted using marijuana at least once and one in six said they used it 200 or more times yearly, the Army said Wednesday.

Bill Passed Barring Civilian Sonic Booms

WASHINGTON (AP)-Supporters of the supersonic air transport won a preliminary bout in the Senate Wednesday with passage of a bill to bar all civilian flights producing sonic booms over the United States and order a reduction in SST noise levels.

The measure, sponsored by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D Wash., was passed 77 to 0 as the Senate neared a vote on the central issue-an administraton request for $290 million for further development of the SST.

Pope Paul Attends Austrailian Service

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) - Undisturbed by small demonstrations, Pope Paul VI prayed and sang Wednesday with Protestant churchmen at an ecumenical meeting. He told his listeners "there is no easy way" to Christian unity.

As Pope Paul entered the Town Hall with Anglican Bishop David Garnsey, about 30 Protestant militants flashed such signs as "The Pope is anti Christ, a man of sin," and "Christ saves, Rome enslaves."

John W. Campbell, 64, editor of an anti Catholic publication, rode a donkey outside the hall to protest the Pope's use of a limousine. He told the crowd: "I have bought this donkey along for him. It was good enough for Christ. It should be good enough for him."

Then three minutes after the ceremony began, the Rev. Frederick Channing, a New Zealand militant, stood up in the hall, shed his coat, and displayed a surplice bearing the words: "No priest but Thee, Jesus Christ."

Three policemen grabbed Channing and he said they threw him out of the hall.

While a quiet one, this was the first antipapal demonstration the pontiff had encountered on his 25,000 mile tour of Asia and Australia.

But to the 3,000 persons inside, the ecumenical meeting was a moving 40 minutes of music, speeches, scriptural reading and prayer.

The Pope joined others in singing a lively hymn, "Praise to the Holiest in the Highest." They were supported by a 200 member mixed choir, and drums, trombones, French horns and trumpets.

The Pope was applauded after his speech, in which referring to the church unity movement, he said: "History cannot be written off overnight and the honest hesitations of sensitive consciences always demand our respect and understanding. There is no easy way."

After 1½ Years Planning By Fac-Sen Committee

Unique Bachelor's Degree Becomes Reality

By ANNE STADWICKI
Staff Reporter

A unique Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration program is being offered at UMass this semester as a result of one and a half years of planning by an ad hoc committee of the Faculty Senate, said Professor Arthur F. Kinney of the English Department yesterday.

The inter-disciplinary two year concentration is the only one of its kind in the country, he claimed. It was designed to allow students to draw upon courses currently offered by more than one department, school or college of the University, he said.

Sixty students, including the 15 currently enrolled from the fall 1970 semester, can participate in choosing courses not otherwise available to them in place of the traditional major, he continued.

Each applicant must develop a course of study with 3 interrelated courses for each of the first two semesters, he explained. For each applicant, an inter-disciplinary faculty member must consent to sponsor and advise him in his area, and be interviewed with him at a procedural screening of the applicants, said Kinney.

Prof. W. Leigh Short, Chemical Engineering, and Prof. Anthony Borton, Veterinary and Animal Science, will process the interviews with Kinney. They also served on the Faculty Senate committee that initiated the program.

"What is most important to me is the philosophy of the program," said Kinney. "For many undergraduates the most realistic kind of education is the kind that unfolds."

He said that many students don't know what courses they will take ahead of time. They must constantly re-evaluate what courses are doing with each other and can't plan ahead in the structure of a defined major, he explained.

Individual Concentration allows for study not presently in a college, for example Women's Studies, Urban Studies, and Ecology, said Kinney. It is also important because the program serves as a testing ground for new ideas, he said. Whether there is student interest and proper facilities, and the meaning of the degree for the graduated student are the factors to study he explained. The program will also serve to suggest to departments potential new courses that could beoffered, Kinney added.

Success can be measured by the bulging and diminishing of the program, he suggested. When a department is formed to provide for a great demand in an area the number in individual concentration will decrease, he clarified.

SWAP suggested the new degree program in 1968, along with Bernard Fleischmann, former head of Comparative Literature, Kinney said. In December 1969 the Student Senate approved the proposal submitted by the ad hoc Faculty Senate Committee formed in response to the requests, he continued.

The Faculty Senate did not approve the proposal, however, because the Academic Matters Committee said that the degree should not be limited to Arts and Sciences but opened to all University programs.

After one and a half years and many amendments and debates, the Board of Trustees approved the experimental plan in May for a trial period of two years, Kinney said.

The University notified sophomores by letter of the opportunity, and a section was given to the program at fall registration, said Kinney.

Problems the program may face include graduate school acceptance and internal organization, he outlined. But he does not expect academic rejection of the program, he said.

Until a chairman can be found to head the program Kinney said that Professors Short, Borton, and himself will volunteer their services in free time. He hopes that advisors will be named Deans in their own right because, in effect, each will head a new and separate department.

Students interested in the Individual Concentration degree should make plans now, Kinney advised. Interviews, beginning next week, will be arranged after applications are submitted.

Navy Dumps Oil; Cause 760 Mi. Slick

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) - A massive oil slick covering 760 square miles was located Wednesday in the Atlantic Ocean 23 miles off north Florida. A spokesman for the state said the U.S. Navy deliberately dumped it.

The heavy black fuel oil posed a threat along 50 miles of sandy beaches from near the Georgia line to St. Augustine, the spokesman said.

The Navy at Jacksonville said it had dumped "a quantity of sludge from two barges into the ocean" Monday night but Capt. Don Dietz of Mayport Naval Station said this material is usually about 90 percent water. State Marine Patrol officials estimated the slick was 40 miles long and 19 miles wide.

It was reported unofficially more than half a million gallons of waste oil was dumped from two Navy barges.

The official Navy statement said Mayport Naval Station at the mouth of the St. Johns River "has used this procedure for the past two years, as required by the Oil Pollution Act of 1924. It is done about twice a quarter over 50 miles from land." This is similar to the traditional method of ships blowing their bilge at sea, the Navy said.

Peer Sex Ed-Starts In Southwest

Interested Southwest students are being sought to participate in a new Peer Sex Education (PSE) program. One student will be selected from each dorm to serve as the peer sex education counselor and must take a three credit course offered especially for this program through the Department of Public Health, to be held this spring. A requirement is that the student will be living in the dorm next year ('71-'72).

Specific responsibilities that the PSE counselor will assume are peer sex education, as well as providing a link in communication between health professionals and a living unit. He will utilize various informational and educational materials and techniques including sponsorship of house programs, provision of references and handout materials and perhaps even leadership of colloquium.

Ruck Ishaus Named To Head New Environmental Agency

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Environmental Protection Agency came into formal existence Wednesday while its first chief was receiving Senate committee endorsement. It marked completion of a year of restructuring of federal environment fuctions-with still more restructuring probably lying ahead.

The Senate Public Works Committee gave unanimous approval toWilliam D. Ruckelshaus as director of EPA. Early Senate confirmation is expected for Ruchelshaus, an Indianan who now is an assistant attorney general.

The administration is known to be considering further changes-particularly in the management of federal land and of energy resources.

And it recognizes, at least in theory, that some environment problems may eventually require the devlopment of entirely new kinds of political institution.

The reorganization began on the first day of the year, when President Nixon signed into law the 1969 Environmental Policy Act, setting up a three member Council on Environmental Quality as advisers to the President.

On July 9, Nixon proposed executive reorganization plans for the creation of EPA and a National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration NOAA, to guide development of ocean resources, was established Oct. 3 as a branch of the Commerce Department.

EPA, the independent agency established Wednesday, assembles from the Interior Department, Agriculture Department, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and the Atomic Energy Commission the federal efforts to control air and water pollution, pesticides, solid wastes and radiation.

But even when he proposed those changes Nixon said he had received recommendations for additional reorganizations.

Control of federal land-one third of the nation-is now divided among the Departments of Interior, Agriculture, and Defense, and other agencies.

Rep. Wayne N. Aspinall, D Colo., chairman of the House Interior Committee, plans to introduce land use legislation in the next Congress based on studies by the Public Land law Review Commission which he headed.

And Nixon stressed, last August, the need to develop land use policy; his year old Council on Environmental Quality has been preparing legislative proposals.

Thus, land use seems certain to become the next big focus, and the result may be consolidation of federal lands under a single agency.

A New Western

WASHINGTON – "I've got it! I've got it!" Sam Craftsman yelled as he rushed into the office of Darryl Kleigfoot, the head of Metro-Mogul studios.

"What have you got?" Kleigfoot said, slightly annoyed.

"An idea for a new cowboy picture. It's the greatest thing since 'How the West Was Won.' "

"All right, but give it to me fast."

"I was reading a history book the other night and discovered that President Rutherford B. Hayes was very disturbed because a bunch of Apache Indians were holding several American soldiers as prisoners. So he ordered his secretary of war, Alexander Ramsey, to get a rescue operation under way."

"Continue," said Kleigfoot.

"Can't you just see it as a film, Chief? We get John Wayne to play the colonel of the United States cavalry and Frank Sinatra as his cocky first sergeant."

"The secretary of war, played by Ronald Reagan, calls in Wayne and Sinatra and tells them he wants them to organize an expedition to go into Apache country and rescue the American prisoners. He tells them that unimpeachable intelligence sources indicate that the Apaches are holding the men at Little Red Creek and the President says they can have anything they want as long as they get the men released."

"Wayne and Sinatra go back to Fort Frontier and, with the aid of captured maps, build an entire replica of the Indian village of Little Red Creek."

"Then, with a hand-picked crew of cavalrymen, they rehearse the attack on Little Red Creek. For three months they go over every detail."

"Come on, come on, get on with it," Kleigfoot said angrily.

"All right. The secretary of war reports to President Hayes that everything is in order and so President Hayes writes him a note and says 'Proceed as planned.' "

"Wayne is notified and he orders all his men to mount. They ride off into Apache country."

"Good," the studio head said.

"The plan is to attack at night so the Apaches will be surprised. So they wait until midnight, and then, firing all their guns, they ride into the sleeping village of Little Red Creek."

"It should make a good fight scene," Kleigfoot said.

"Wrong, Chief," Craftsman says. "There's no one in the village. The soldiers go from one tepee to another and find they're all empty."

"Oh, my God," said Kleigfoot.

"Apparently the intelligence was wrong or else the Apaches were tipped off and moved out."

"So what happens?" Kleigfoot said.

"The cavalrymen ride back to Washington, D.C., where the secretary of war calls a pressconference and introduces Wayne and Sinatra to the reporters."

"The secretary of war calls it one of the most successful operations aagainst the Apaches in military history. It was not only pulled off with precision, but did not produce one single casualty. The only way they could have improved on it was if they had found the prisoners."

"President Rutherford B. Hayes sends his personal congratulations to Wayne and tells his press secretary to announce that this should be a lesson to the Apaches once and for all."

"We end the film with the secretary of war awarding Wayne a medal and Sinatra getting the girl."

"I don't know, Sam. There's something wrong with the story. Don't you think the public will be let down a little at the end, when the cavalry finds nobody there?"

Craftsman said, "I don't see why."

Miscellaneous Tidbits

There were a couple of holes in the Iron Curtain last week. An East German sailor, who had contacted his brother in the U.S., planned to board a Soviet vessel bound for Cuba, and jump off near the Florida keys and be picked up by his brother, who was the owner of a motorboat. The plan went perfectly, but an unexpected twist made the escape all that more dramatic. When the sailor jumped overboard, three other sailors, seeing what was happening, decided to get into the act, and made the splash three times as big. All four made it safely to the motorboat.

The other hole in the Curtain was immediately plugged by Rear Admiral Ellis of the U.S. Coast Guard. When his cutter stopped a Soviet "fishing" vessel snooping in U.S. territorial waters, one of the sailors, a Lithuanian, leaped on board the U.S. ship and begged for asylum. Not only did Rear Admiral Ellis refuse to give the sailor asylum, he allowed the Russian sailors to beat the Lithuanian into unconsciousness ABOARD THE AMERICAN SHIP, WHILE IN U.S. TERRITORY. When I was in Boston on Saturday, 500 Lithuanians congregated in Government Center to protest the inaction of Rear Admiral Ellis, and to demand his resignation. Being of Lithuanian descent, I joined in their demonstration. (I would have even if I were Mongolian).

Rockefeller Ecology?

To the Editor:

How is Rockefeller-money-for-ecology like deSade's setting up a fund to promote chastity?

This Thursday at 4:00 P.M. in the Student Union there will be a meeting--the issue is of concern to all in the Five College community (of life and death concern to millions of people around the world): How do we want to deal with a Rockefeller?

A senior partner of one of the world's most powerful empires of oil and banking wealth, John D. Rockefeller III, the director of his family's "charitable" foundations, is coming to the area Sunday to announce an ecological "grant" to the Five Colleges. Yet the "charity" funds are more than paid for by countless revenues untaxed, and thus lost to democratically-selected uses. Do students and faculty want to partake of such "charity" in the predictable cool-it Rockefeller family context?

Why did the President so soon appoint his campaign rival, Nelson A. Rockefeller, John III's brother, to report and recommend (in "Quality of Life in the Americas") on future U.S. policy toward Latin America? Who shapes U.S. policy? Consider Viet Nam. The Brothers' Fund had already reported on "International Security" in 1958; Henry Kissinger, now a chief foreign policy advisor to Nixon, was on the reporting staff then, with Dean Rusk. The 1958 report became official U.S. policy through the 60's.

Who is to call what tune in the U.S.A.? Are the Rockefeller brothers self-authorized to determine the quality of our lives here--of millions of lives needlessly exploited globally? The tale of defoliation, oil pollution, vast ecological waste is told daily. John III takes with a hundred hands what he gives back with one. Shouldn't we in the Five Colleges decide in whose interest we choose to direct our talents, energies, resources? Is it to be money first and people second (if at all)? Or people first?

What do we want to say to Rockefeller on Sunday? Meet Thursday at 4:00 in the Student Union. Come to Hampshire College Sunday at noon.

Mobe Defense

To the editor:

In reply to Bill Panttaja's attack on the Mobe sponsored demonstration held in the Hatch last Tuesday, I have several points to make.

1. Contrary to what Panttaja implies, The New York Times and the Boston Globe do not determine "correct English usage." The Oxford English Dictionary defines the verb "to invade" in this way: "to enter in a hostile manner or with armed force; to make an inroad or hostile incursion into." If Panttaja refuses to agree that the bombing of the North and the simultaneous raid at Sontay constitute armed and hostile entry of North Vietnam, that is a measure of his ignorance not mine.

2. Panttaja is right in finding the bombing missions near Hanoi of greater significance than the purported "rescue" attempt of POW's at Sontay. The bombing mission, billed as a "diversionary tactic" by the administration, was in fact the substantial escalation of the War, and the raid at Sontay designed to "divert" the attention of the American populace.

3. The demonstration against Nixon's latest escalation of the War was sponsored by the Student Mobilization Committee and, if I recall correctly, I wrote and presented the main address, not Sid Finehirsh. The Antiwar Movement on this campus and elsewhere is not and cannot be bound up with only one or two figures. Panttaja's attempt to link the demonstration and several political groups to one personality is both insulting to others who work very hard in the Movement, and inaccurate. Panttaja refuses to deal with the issues raised by the demonstration. He prefers to conceal his ignorance in a vulgar attack on one personality. The Student Mobilization Committee will not be intimidated by this tricked-up form of red-baiting.

4. Finally, if Panttaja chooses to remain ignorant of the "world-wide" anger" stirred by the U.S. government's most recent atrocity in Vietnam, that is his prerogative. But it is not his prerogative to impose that ignorance on others in the pages of the Collegian. It is unfortunate (and peculiar since his letter contains repeated references to stories in The New York Times and the Boston Globe) that he seems to have overlooked reports in both these papers of a demonstration against the U.S. escalation of the War last Tuesday in Paris. That demonstration alone, according to reports in the Times and Globe, attracted 50,000 participants. Panttaja's easy dismissal of world-wide anger over the invasion goes contrary to evidence supplied by his two favorite papers. Peculiar, considering his supposed concern for "objective" reporting.

Complaint

To The Editor:

This letter is being written in rage. I just came from the dining commons where I found out that Wednesday night before Thanksgiving, steak is being served. Isn't that delightful! After only 2 1/2 months we are getting a decent meal. (All 1% of us that will be here).

This is my third year in this school and the food has gotten progressively worse each year. When there is a food particularly disliked, the alternative is always something worse. There is practically no imagination or variety used at all.

Yet, it is required of students under 21 to buy a meal ticket (for how could a 20 year-old decide for himself if he wants a meal ticket?) I think that if meal tickets were not required, that the commons would be forced to improve the quality of the food to stay in business.

Less grease to the people.

The Redmen

To the Editor:

Congratulations to the Redmen basketball team on a great opening victory over St. A's. Granted they weren't up against Marquette or UCLA, but they played their game after a slow start and won going away. Fifty-two percent from the floor, including in that figure a cold first half, is unbelievable. The way the team played in the second half, they could take on anybody.

Speaking of playing well, I wonder how many people around here realize exactly how good Julius Erving is. This summer he was a star on the American touringteam, a team that was selected from the best amateur basketball players in the country. If he doesn't make All-American this year something's wrong. Great game, guys. Keep it up!

Cancerous Growth

To the Editor:

The American Cancer Society included the following in one of its recent publications:

"A story is told of two young boys who were determined to challenge and expose a man who was supposed to be wise. They caught a small bird and decided on a formula that they felt could not fail. They would go to the wise man with their hands cupped and say:

"Tell us, wise man, is the bird, that one of use holds in his hands, alive or dead?" If he said "dead" they would release the bird. If he said "alive" a squeeze of the hands would prove him wrong. When they confronted him and asked the question, the wise man smiled, and considered, and finally said, "The answer is in your hands."

There are ever so many cancerous growths in our society today. Maybe the bird of paradise continues to dump on us because we've continued to neglect and mis-handle the birds of: racism, the war (it's like an institution already), the draft, miseducation...And if you look really close, you'll see that those birds are sitting in your hands right now. Don't wait until the droppings pile up any more. Their smell is already quite fowl (sic).

Book Review

Fischler's Orr Only So-So

Bobby Orr And The Big Bad Bruins
Stan Fischler
Dell Paperback

Bobby Orr, and the Big Bad Bruins, a new Dell release by Stan Fischler, starts out as an intuitive, interesting often emotionally exciting book about the life of Bobby Orr.

It then takes a sharp turn for the worse, moving through a dull, incomplete, figure-riddled history of the Bruins, into a series of sketchy, almost comic-like vignettes of some Bruins players.

The weakest point of the book, as if all that is not enough, is that the book was written and copyrighted before the '69-70 season and, although promising a future dynasty for the Bruins, cannot deliver the emotional lift it needs; the end of the quest, the winning of the Stanley Cup.

Any Bruins fan will remember, with a kind of emotional delerium, Bobby Orr flying through mid-air, the winning goal tucked neatly in the St. Louis Blues net, and a few moments later the "chief", Johnny Bucyk, parading about Boston Garden with the Stanley Cup hoisted proudly above his head. It is unfortunate that Mr. Fischler did not wait another year to complete his book. However, the book is not all that bad. The section on Bobby Orr is somewhat enlightening, although grossly incomplete. The author has simply failed to capture the "character" of the great one. Yet, he did provide some interesting background information, especially about the formation of the Players' Association, and Bobby's phenomenal salary battles, which changed the entire monetary outlook of the NHL.

In fact, Bobby Orr, and the Big Bad Bruins is relatively a good sports book, as compared to the usual "as told to" fiascoes; books like Cowboy at the Mike (the story of Curt Gowdy, as told to.....), or My Turn at Bat (the story of Ted Williams, as told to....). This book at least represents a journalistic objectivity, an attempt to present some kind of historical perspective.

This book will undoubtedly sell out its first printing to the many Bruins fans who cannot ever get enough print about their idols to satiate them. Nevertheless, the book could have been much better, and to do justice to the personalities involved, should have been.

Public Health Assoc. Accredits Grad Program

UMass has been notified by the American Public Health Association of the accreditation of its graduate program for preparing community health educators.

The accreditation was based on a three-day visitation of an Accreditation Site Visit Team this fall. Also the Accreditation Council of the National Environmental Health Association, at its annual meeting in Houston, approved accreditation of the UMass undergraduate program in environmental health. This accreditation was based on a site visit of two days in mid-October.

Dr. William A. Darity, professor and head of the UMass Department of Public Health, in which these programs of study are carried out, spoke of the particular importance of the accreditation for students in both programs. He said "Graduates of these programs will now have the opportunity to compete at the same level as students who are being prepared in graduate programs for community health education in schools of public health and students preparing for undergraduate environmental health in other institutions. This accreditation will also mean possible student support from foundations and federal sources. Also there will be a wider range of employment opportunities for the graduates of these programs.

"The accreditation will also enhance the development of the department as a whole. As the availability of resources increases, the faculty, and students should be able to better meet their needs in such areas as expanded library facilities and services."

Graduate programs with concentration in health services administration, survey and health statistics, environmental health, air pollution, epidemiology and biostatistics, and public health laboratory are also offered by the UMass Department of Public Health.

NYU Professor Will Lecture On Environmental Quality Act

David Sive, associates professor, Graduate School of Law, NYU, member of the Legal Advisory Committee to the President's Council on Environmental Quality, is scheduled to lecture at the Memorial Hall, University of Massachusetts, on Friday, December 4, 1970, at 8:00 p.m.

Prof. Sive will speak on "The Environmental Quality Act of 1969". The lecture is open free of charge to the public.

He brings to this area a decade of wide experience as a conservation activist and as an environmental lawyer. His many affiliations range from six years of leadership with the Atlantic Chapter of the Sierra Club, to his most recent membership on the Legal Advisory Committee to the President's Council on Environmental Quality.

His record of conservation litigation ranges from four cases as counsel for plaintiffs vs the U.S. Corps of Engineers in opposition to the Hudson River Expressway, as counsel for the Sierra Club in the Scenic Hudson Preservation Conference vs the Federal Power Commission, to the recent case of the Hilton Head Fishing Coop. Inc. vs basf corporation of South Carolina.

A workshop on the Connecticut River Basin plan of the Corps of Engineers will follow the lecture. His talk is sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ), the Connecticut River Ecology Action Corp. (CREAC) and the Sierra Club.

Draft Counselor's Corner

A CO Need Only Prefer Not To Kill

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

You do not--repeat, do not--have to be a pacifist or a believer in non-violence in order to be a conscientious objector.

If, given a choice, you would prefer not to kill people or be put in a situation where you might have to kill in self-defense, you are probably a CO. That is the simplest initial determining factor. All else is amplification and clarification.

You may be a CO even if you would kill in self-defense. What you would have to demonstrate is that you prefer not to kill, and would take steps to avoid going to places where there is a strong likelikhood that you might be attached in such a way that killing would be the only possible means of defense.

For example, if you knew that you would have to shoot your way through the tunnel to get into Southwest (assuming for the moment that anyone would want to get to Southwest), you would probably try to find some other route. This would probably be true even if you had brushed your teeth with Colgate that morning and still had the protection of Gardol's invisible shield, therefore not being in any direct personal danger. The idea is that you don't have overwhelming urge to kill fellow human beings.

Call Vietnam the tunnel to Southwest. After all, we've been hearing about the light at the end of it for about seven years. You know that if you go there people will be shooting at you. (There is, according to secret documents captured from the Pentagon, a war going on there, and rumor has it that people shoot at people during wars.) Thus, it is quite possible that you might be called upon to kill a so-called enemy in self defense-if you allow yourself to be sent there in the first place.

Okay. You don't want to go there because human beings are shooting at other human beings. (Unlike the deer season, which only lasts a week, the U.S. has helped create a constant open season on humanity in Nam.) Part of why could be that you don't want to have to kill somebody to stop him from killing you, and not being in a place where that somebody can kill you seems like a sensible idea.

If this rationale seems even fairly logical, and you really think that there might be some value to human life other than its use as a bullet-stopper, you are on your way to being a CO. Visit a draft counselor and rap a little, or go to the Draft Counseling Services' group CO counseling in 811 Campus Center any Monday or Tuesday from 1:30 to 4:30. Christmas is coming. What better time to think about peace on earth through goodwill to all men. Dig it.

Legislative Internship Offers Experience, Credit

The Undergraduate Legislative Internship Program offers student internees valuable experience as well as course credits in practical government and politics in the State House in Boston. At the same time it permits him to continue his academic work at the UMass /Boston campus.

The internship program is a continuation of last spring semester's arrangement whereby several undergraduate government majors obtained six credits for their work as part time aids to state legislators in Boston. The internee's work is supervised by a UMass/Amherst political science professor and by the representative's office.

In addition to the six credits work in the internship program, applicants must also enroll for an additional nine credits of regular academic work at the UMass/Boston campus. Living arrangements in Boston must be worked out by the individual students.

Junior and Senior political science majors with a 2.5 cumulative average in their government courses are eligible to apply. Those majors with a lower average in their government courses are also eligible, but they will need a letter of recommendation from one of their political science professors.

Students meeting these qualifications who are interested in applying for this Internship program may contact Professor Robert A. Shanley, 202 Thompson Tower, during pre-registration week.

Scuba Club Will Explore Florida Reefs

The Scuba Club serves as a meeting place for experienced divers to exchange ideas and relate experiences. It also functions to train new divers. Instructions leading to certification are offered by the club to anyone interested every Thursday evening from 7-9 p.m. at the WOPE pool.

Other advantages of this club are 30-40% discounts on all diving equipment and, beginning next semester, the use of a new compressor which will provide free refills for diving tanks owned by club members.

December 2, 1970.

Due to a shortage of personnel and illness, only nineteen Residence Hall Assistants were available to cover forty buildings. Fortunately, this was a very quiet night. A Southwest dorm was discovered unlocked upon the arrival of the RHA. This dorm had prviously been locked at 7 p.m.
3:07 a.m. Report of a window broken in a Southwest Dormitory by someone throwing rocks. A crusier was assigned to check.

Humanities In An Inhumane Society Subject Of Smith Lecture

NORTHAMPTON—Maxine Greene, professor of English at Teachers College of Columbia University will speak on "Humanities in an Inhumane Society" at Smith College.

The lecture will be given at 8 p.m. Thursday (Dec. 10) in Wright Hall on the Smith campus.

Professor Greene is a 1938 graduate of Barnard College and received a masters degree in 1949 from the School of Education of New York University. She continued her graduate education at New York University and received a doctorate in 1955. She is currently professor of English at Teachers College, and editor of the "Teachers College Record."

Since 1962, Professor Greene has served as a consultant and member of many committees dealing with educational problems. In 1962-63 she was a consultant on the Curriculum Committee of the United Presbyterian Church. A year later she served as a consultant and writer on the Philosophy of Education Project sponsored by the University of Illinois and the U. S. Office of Education.

In 1967 she was a member of the Advisory Committee on Human Relations and Community Coordination for the New York City Board of Education. During that year she also lectured at the NDEA Institute in Advanced Aesthetics Education at the University of Illinois.

Among her major publications are "The Public School and Private Vision," published by Random House in 1965 and "Existential Encounters for Teachers," Random House, 1967. She has three books currently in progress: "Philosophy of Education." "Technology and the Humanities," and "The Humanities."

Government Department Changes Advising

The Government Department recently revised its entire program of undergraduate advising. Under the new system, at least one of six undergraduate advisors will be available between the hours of nine a.m. and four p.m. each day of the week.

The advisors are: Professors Steeper (Chief Undergraduate Advisor), Sulzner, Shanley, Syed, Kramer, and Allen. Professor Allen will keep office hours both in Thompson Hall and at his residence, Noah Webster House 234 (Orchard Hill).

Students may exercise one of two options: they may either select one advisor and see him during the hours he has posted; or, they may simply check the time and see who is available at that hour.

During Counselling week, special procedures will be in operation. All of the advisors will keep extra hours and schedules will be posted throughout the Department. Professors Steeper and Sulzner will concentrate their attention on seniors, checking especially to see that all requirements have been completed. This is the first step in Departmental certification necessary for June or September graduation. Professor Syed will advise the Class of 1972, Professor Shanley, the Class of 1973, Professor Kramer, the Class of 1974. Any residents of Orchard Hill regardless of class, and any former Orchard Hill residents who wish to do so, may see Professor Allen.

In addition to the services of faculty advisors, both Government graduate students and undergraduate majors will be available in Room 412, Thompson Hall. The graduate students are particularly interested in talking with juniors and seniors who are formulating their plans for graduate school. The undergraduate majors will be prepared to discuss departmental requirements, course offerings, and general selection of course schedules.

Committee To Receive Housing Grievances

A Landlord-Tenant Relations, committee to receive, investigate and make recommendations upon complaints of unfair and unreasonable practices in private rental units within the Town of Amherst.

Complaints may be brought by tenants or by landlords and may include but not be limited to matters of rent, security deposits or services.

All grievances should be sent in writing to: Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee, Amherst, Mass. 01002

Include in the greivances dates, names of landlord and tenants, the location of the apartment in question, the address, phone number and signature of the person submitting the grievance along with a brief description of the precise nature of it not to be more than one page in length.

The committee consists of a landlord, a tenant and three representatives of the public interest. An alternate tenant and landlord participate in all meetings, which are held on the second Monday of the month at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall. All meetings are open to the public.

Questions may be addressed to S. W. Fletcher, Chairman of the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee. He can be contacted in Room 201, Agricultural Engineering Building (phone 545-2547).

Dr. Hulton Works To Control Lactate Dehydrogenase

Dr. H. O. Hultin of the department of food science and technology is working under a $20,000 research grant from the National Science Foundation on a study of the control of lactate dehydrogenase by reversible binding to subcellular structures.

Since enzymes are responsible for most all of the chemical reactions occurring in biological systems, such a study will have significance in determining the control of metabolic processes. In particular, lactate dehydrogenase is an important enzyme in the regulation of muscular activity and in the determination of the quality of meat products.

Gov't. Majors Exchange With Va. State

The government department has just developed a semester exhange program with Virginia State College in Petersburg, Virginia. Virginia State College is a liberal arts institution of 2700 students with a predominately black student body. Two government majors will spend the spring semester at Virginia State and two government majors from Virginia State will reside in Amherst this spring. Any Government Majors who would like to seek further information about this program should contact

George Sulzner, 236 Thompson Hall, 545-0405.

Parking Regulations To Ease Snow Removal

The Parking Office wishes to remind members of the University that the Town of Amherst began the winter season parking regulations as of December 1, 1970. All members of the campus community should be aware of the Amherst regulations.

To facilitate snow removal on the Universit campus, the following precedures will be in effect for overnight parking.

1. All cars legally parked overnight in lots #10-11-12-13 will park in the #10 lot. Please be prepared to move vehicles when snow removal vehicles are working. Please park as close to gether as possible.
2. All legally parked cars in number 2 lot will park in the small section adjacent to Fernald Hall. People engaged in night research or work in Morrill Science can park adjacent to the Faculty Club.
3. All legally parked cars in M lot overnight will group together under the lights in an orderly manner.
4. All storage lots, F,V,E,O,H, will be plowed as soon as physically possible. Dorms will be notified when snow removal will take place if necessary.

Prof. Porter Tours Russia

Professor Roger S. Porter, a member of the UMass faculty, has been invited to spend ten days in Russia as the sponsored guest of the Academy of Science of the U.S.S.R.

He arrived in Russia Nov. 25 for an extensive lecture schedule. He is visiting laboratories and giving lectures in Moscow and Leningrad, principally at the Petrochemical Synthesis Institute and the Institute of High Molecular Weight Compounds.

Lectures offered are on the subject of order and flow of liquid crystals, on the mechanochemistry of polymers, and on the pressure effects, viscoelastic properties and special morphologies that can be achieved in polymer theology. Additional studies developed at the University of Massachusetts on gel permeation chromatography are also being presented as part of the lecture tour. Prof. Porter has been head of polymer science and engineering since its origination on the Amherst campus in 1966.

Tournaments at this late time of the year often have trouble drawing the top names of the tour, but this one which starts Thursday has pulled 10 of the record 15 players who have won more than $100,000 this season.

Palmer, of course, the all time leading money winner and the game's top gate attraction, is certain to gain the most attention as he bids to extend his record of having won at least one tournament a year since 1955.

NEW YORK (AP) - Sonny Jurgensen of Washington has loosened the Bay Area Bombers' grip on the top spots in National Football League passing, according to statistics released Thursday by the league.

Lamonica still ranks No. 1 in the American Football Conference ahead of Buffalo's rookie quarterback Dennis Shaw. But in the National Conference, Brodie has slipped into a virtual first place tie with Jurgensen.

Sonny has completed 59.7 percent of his tosses to Brodie's 59.3 and has picked up 20 touchdowns through the air to Brodie's 17 but big John has outdistanced Jurgensen 2,275 yards to 1,937. Lamonica owns a 52.3 percent completion record with 2,026 yards and 19 TDs.

Kickers Fred Cox of Minnesota in the NFC with 97 points and Jan Stenerud of Kansas City in the AFC with 93 are the league's top scorers.

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Randy Russell dreams of the Pittsburgh Steelers playing in the Super Bowl, but his realistic mind prevents him from looking past the next game.

The Steelers' upset the Cleveland Browns 28-9 last Sunday and for his performance at right linebacker, Russell was named Defensive Player of the Week in the National Football League.

"I think we can go to the Super Bowl if we play the kind of game we played Sunday," the six year veteran said.

"You dream of that kind of thing, but when you're rational you have to think of the next game."

Rational thinking is Russell's forte. He's a team captain. He has his Master's degree in business. Football to the 225 pound Russell, is not brute force alone, but knowledge and psychology as well.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Astrology was utilized by the Allies and by the Axis during World War II. In Vietnam, it is known that leaders both North and South heed astrological counsel. Most religious holidays in Southeast Asia are based on sky or astrological pattern. In the United States, astrology is a personal, "you" subject, claimed now by both the man-in-th-street and the sophisticated jet-setter.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Gifts, surprises of pleasant variety are featured. Excellent for entertaining at home. New understanding prevails with family members. Accent harmony, friendship.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Some obstacles are evident. But any blocks are really constructive challenges; meet them with confidence. Be analytical. A friend could provide privileged information.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Desire to be on the move may conflict with duties. Take long-range view. Get in touch with one at a distance. Be aware of trends. Show professional superior you are capable.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Accent on money belonging to another; you may hold deciding vote. Key is to perceive what lies behind the scenes. Nullify risks by completing a project. Then you receive deserved credit.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Spotlight on partnerships, legal affairs. Review goals. Advice offered by mate, partner is apt to be valid. Sift through various possibilities. Take time to be positive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Past obligations take precedent over current desires. Aquarius individual plays significant role. Maintain even pace. Avoid extremes. Distinguish between actual needs and mere whims.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Emphasis of excitement prevails. Children grab much of spotlight. Social affairs lift you out of emotional rut. Welcome new contacts.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Details which have been neglected now demand attention. Home, property, basic values are accented. Read between the lines. Be aware of fine print. Heed words of older individual.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Visiting and visitors highlight; be flexible. Sense of humor now serves as valuable aid. One who complains may merely be seeking attention.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Financial picture brightens. Take inventory. Collect and pay debts. Get money, house in order. What appeared a setback boomerangs in your favor. Home improvement is indicated.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Improve appearance. Exercise, addition of new wardrobe — these are favored. Take initiative. Proceed with confidence. Put original ideas to work. Stress independence of thought, action.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Toe line as far as basic duties are concerned. Veering off course now could prove costly. Know this and act accordingly. Throw off secret doubts, fears. You are going in right direction.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are capable of bouncing back from adversity. Your mind is keen. You are alert, agile. Recently, there have been significant changes which freed you from restricting bonds. You soon will make adjustment in domestic area — very favorable.

Pied Pipers Cop 4th In Nationals

The first annual National Touch Football Championship Tournament was held this past weekend in Columbus, Ohio. The tournament brought together championship teams reprsenting various leagues in the northeastern and l midwestern parts of the country.

Of the thirty-four teams invited by the host Columbus Touch Football League, fourteen were able to attend and compete for what was somewhat presumptuously called the "world championship of touch football." Among the fourteen were teams from New Jersey, Delaware, Missouri, and Springfield, Massachusetts, as well as a number of Ohio teams. Only one collegiate intramural championship team was invited, the Hamlin Pied Pipers of UMass.

The Pipers placed a very respectable fourth in the tournament. They defeated teams from Perth Amboy, New Jersey, and Springfield before bowing in the semi-finals to the champions of the host Columbus league. Easily the youngest and lightest of the participating teams, the Pipers came in as unknowns and left as the "Cinderella team of the tournament," as Commissioner Paul Jacobs described them. They won the respect and admiration of all, and left with the assurance that next year's UMass IM champions would receive a similar invitation.

The opening round of the tournament saw the Pipers defeat the Perth Amboy team by a score of 13-6. Quarterback Rich Goldberg threw scoring passes of ten yards to Andy Dutkanicz and seventeen yards to Dean Moreau. Although easily in control throughout the game, the Piper offensive unit played somewhat below its usual form.

The laurels for this victory have to go to the defensive unit which held the fast but rather unimaginative opponents to a net of approximately zero yards. The sole score for the New Jersey team came in the fourth quarter when a Piper fumble was recovered and carried fifty yards to paydirt.

The high point of the tournament for the Pipers was the 9-7 defeat of the Kossick Ford Cowboys, champions of the Western Massachusetts Touch Football League, in the second round. The Cowboys came into the game with a 60-game winning streak, led by quarterback Jerry Yost, a former West Virginia University star who missed the Heisman Trophy award in 1962 by only 25 votes.

Again the Piper defense made the difference. Its pass rush, which appeared to be the best in the tournament, kept so much pressure on the Kossick quarterback that he was forced to stand a full twelve yards behind the line of scrimmage. Defensive linemen Arnie Sumner and Tom Green, with Fran Paquette and Mark Whisler alternating at the third position, maintained a tremendous rush against their larger opponents throughout the game.

The victory margin came when Green caught the Cowboy passer in his own end zone for a safety late in the first quarter. Four pass interceptions by the defensive backs thwarted most of the offensive drives of the Cowboys. Each of the four Piper defensive backs picked off one pass, symbolizing the balanced play of the team throughout the tournament. The four were Tom Brennan, "Charlie" Donohue, Andy Dutkanicz, and John Solomon.

The Piper offense showed marked improvements in this game, although it was able to score only one touchdown, a thirteen yard pass from Goldberg to Dutkanicz.

The Pipers took a 6-0 lead in the second period on a 15 yard pass to flanker Tom Brennan. By halftime, the score was tied at 6-6, and in the third period the Ohioans went ahead, 12-6, on a disputed pass reception in the end zone. The key to the Black Forest victory was its quarterback's ability to pinpoint his passes low to the ground where his receivers often made diving catches. Such passes are extremely difficult to intercept, and the Pipers were able to snag only one, that by John Solomon halting a first quarter Black Forest drive.

A fourth period Piper drive fell short when the team failed by two yards to make a critical first down. The offense maintained a constant threat throughout the game, due in large part to the fine pass blocking of backs Doug Roome and John Solomon, and center Lenny LeBlanc.

Credit for the fine Piper showing must also go to end Bob Buturlia, blocking back MacLeod, and Athletic Director, Bill Trevett.

The Pipers voted after the loss to forfeit the third place "consolation" game scheduled for Sunday in order to get an earlier start on the long trip back to Amherst. Thus they returned proudly to UMass brandishing themselves the "fourth best touch football team in the world, "tongues wedged firmly in cheeks.

Doubting The Redmen

(Editor's Note: The following paragraph is reprinted from the student newspaper at Boston College, the "Boston College Heights". The writer of the article it came from is unknown, but it appeared on Monday, Nov. 30, 1970 and was a reaction by the writer to a story that appeared in the game program of the UMass-BC football tilt. That story was a preview of the Redman basketball season. The writer of the paragraph below seems to feel that UMass shouldn't bear the label of defending New England basketball champions, even though, yes even though, the Redmen were rated the number one team in N.E. last year by the United Press International (UPI) and presently have in their possession the plaque that designates them as such. Nothing more need be said. It is recommended here that one read the paragraph and react to it as he may.)

Those of you who read the UMass game program must feel that our biggest score is yet to be settled with the Mass. Aggies. BC travels to Amherst for a game with the "Defending New England Champion" Redmen on February 9. That's quite a claim for a team that hasn't beaten BC since 1964. They ought to play a schedule of comparable toughness before making such self-proclamations. It'd be nice to see a large contingent of fans make the trip to UMass for that game to watch the Dalymen stick it to those bums, Erving and all.

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Tonight at 6:00, the freshmen hoopsters travel to Hanover, New Hampshire, in quest of victory number two.

Sporting a 1-0 record, the Little Redmen face the Dartmouth Indians, in their first of six away contests this season.

The key in tonight's tilt will be the Redmen's ability to cut down in fouls and turnovers. If they succeed there, and can duplicate their rebounding and shooting feats of last Tuesday night, they should emerge with an impressive victory.

The frosh will also be looking for more of the scoring balance and excellent teamwork that they displayed in their first win. Defensively they will again be working man to man, a defense which was used for 30 of the 40 minutes against St. Anselm's. The zone defense, which was used in the later moments of that game, is sure to be seen again tonight.

With the all important first game behind them, the Little Redmen will be off and running tonight, a little less nervous, and a little more confident. This 1970-71 version of freshman basketball appears to have great potential, and tonight's outcome should be a clue of what's to come.

Broaca, O'Brien Review Seasons

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

The UMass Varsity M Club opened its winter season yesterday at the Newman Center with soccer coach Peter Broaca and cross country coach Ken O'Brien the featured speakers.

Both coaches had led their respective teams to Yankee Conference titles this past fall and were being cited for their achievements by the Varsity M.

Each reviewed the seasons that had just past and in doing so relived some of their more memorable experiences with their teams.

Broaca stressed that the Yankee Conference on the whole was stronger than most people have given it credit for. He pointed out that the final total record for the entire league was over the .500 mark.

He also introduced his captain for this past season, Rick Matuszczak who noted that since his freshman year there have been many changes on the campus, with the soccer program one of these.

O'Brien cited his three seniors Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson, and Leo Duart for their contributions to the cross country program during their four years of running. Wayne then introduced to the gathering at the luncheon and he spoke on his running over the past few years and on this years team.

O'Brien showed a film on the preseason training that the Redman harriers have done over the past seasons on Martha's Vinyard. He also explained the sport and the type of physical and psychological strain that the runners have had to go through leaving many of those present in awe.

To conclude the program both coaches entertained a question and answer period. Broaca pointed out that soccer was the fastest growing collegiate sport in the nation. In this region the NCAA births have grown from two to four in the last couple of years and the region is now looking for two more in the future.

O'Brien concluded his round of questions by stating that his runners get a great sense of satisfaction from what they have done, but not recognition for doing it.

Next Wednesday at 12:15 the Varsity M Club will feature basketball coach Jack Leaman as its guest speaker.

Fac-Sen Extends "W" Period

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Meeting yesterday afternoon, the Faculty Senate moved to extend the close date of the "W" period to eight weeks after the first day of the semester. The Senate also moved to form a Student-Faculty-Staff Commission on the University Environment, and to form a committee to investigate the possibility of collective bargaining for the university's professional staff.

The motion to establish the "W" period as eight weeks following the first day of the semester passed with little disagreement. The "W" period was once semester-long; faculty had insisted that it be limited, because no one failed a course under these circumstances.

The motion which just passed allows the student to drop a course without penalty after a significantly longer time than the previous ruling on the "W" period allowed.

The Student-Faculty-Staff Commission on the University Environment was endorsed last night, with Chancellor Tippo's stated intention that it investigate everything affecting members of the university, including bio-physical factors but concentrating mainly on social forces.

The faculty members appointed will be predominantly from the social and behavioral sciences.

A committee will be formed to investigate collective bargaining for the university's professional staff. The faculty does not at present have the kind of automatic cost-of-living increase in salary that the non-professional staff does, and must deal with the legislature. The investigating committee will deal with, among other questions, the public policy, authority, mechanics, regulations and procedures, advantages and disadvantages, experience of other colleges and universities relating to faculty collective bargaining.

The Senate endorsed the action of the Chancellor in establishing a committee to recommend procedures for dealing with grievances on the part of non-academic employees. In the time before the adoption of such procedures, ad hoc committees will be appointed.

Professor Hollander moved on behalf of the Sociology Department that the Administration reconsider recent changes in its Annual Faculty Evaluation Report. Professor Hollander felt that there was too little concern with professional activities other than teaching reflected in the form, and that certain questions asked in it were too vague.

Professor Mario Depillis joked that the Evaluation Report really did embody a sociologist's nightmare, putting teaching before research. Professor Walker Gibson argued that the administration deserved a "reserved pat on the back" for its effort to give teaching more importance in the evaluation form. The movement was amended to involve appointing an investigating committee, and was voted down.

A letter from Isidore Silver was suggested for the consideration of the meeting. The rules were suspended so that it could be read: "A letter from Is Silver is something special," as one Senator quipped.

Mr. Silver wrote that the Supreme Court has refused to rule on the case of Close vs. Lederle. Several years ago the work of a member of the Art Department was removed from the Student Union as obscene.

Mr. Silver, then a member of the faculty, brought suit on the part of the American Civil Liberties Union to restore the art. One court supported Silver, another court reversed the decision, and still another court supported the reversal of the first decision. Now the Supreme Court had decided to stay out of the matter -- at least for the time being, Mr. Silver noted.

A motion by Professor Allan Hoffman to appoint a committee to investigate an autumnal recess was decisively defeated.

Senate Endorses Open Enrollment

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

After going around in circles for two hours on the firearms issue, and ending up with nothing to show for its efforts, except two rescinded motions, the Student Senate Wednesday night did go on to other business which it was able to handle.

The Senate acted on several measures, among them one on open enrollment for university education and one calling for revision of the Campus Center Governing Board.

The Senate had spent most of the meeting in what a Senator called a "muddy morass", trying to resolve whether or not to urge the return of firearms to campus for the Flying Redmen and the rifle teams, and ending up with no legislated position.

The Senate resolved to endorse the philosophy of opening enrollment in the state's university system to any state resident with a high school diploma or equivalency certificate. It further resolved to urge the administration not to let any campus in the system that would be developed grow above a general level of 20,000.

The resolution supports the concept that the highest purpose of the public university is to extend the benefits of education to the populace at large. As a sponsor of it, President Glenn Elters said that the motion does not aim at this campus in particular but at a whole new system to be developed which could handle the increased enrollment.

Recognizing the dissatisfaction students have expressed with the Campus Center's operation, the Senate charged two of its own committees to work to improve the Campus Center Governing Board. Where the board is now controlled by the board of trustees, sponsor Nick Apostola intends his motion to bring about a switch of jurisdiction to put the board directly under the Senate.

Apostola hopes that the governing board can be changed to make it more responsive to student opinions so that the center can better meet student needs and desires. He stresses that this is not a power play by the Student Senate.

Campion Named Vice—Chancellor

Thomas B. Campion, Director of Operations for the New York Times, has been named Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Affairs at UMass.

In his new post, Mr. Campion will be responsible for services that support the campus academic and student areas. These will include three basic areas: administrative services such as procurement, personel, data processing, mail, parking, duplication, etc.; physical plant operations; and auxiliary enterprises such as food service, university housing and the campus center. Together the auxiliary enterprises spend $20 million annually.

Mr. Campion's appointment is the result of a unanimous recommendation to the Chancellor by a student-faculty-administration search committee. His appointment is effective Dec. 22, 1970.

An employee of the Times for the past 22 years and principal executive of that newspaper for the last eight years, Mr. Campion has been responsible for 3,000 of the Times employees in manufacturing and engineering departments, plant operations and communications systems.

During his years at the Times, Mr. Campion played a major role in initiatinga company-wide cost control system, a supervisory training program, a long-range equipment replacement program, and the newspaper's computer systems.

A graduate of Phillips Academy in Andover, Mass., he received his bachelor's degree from Harvard University in engineering, and then received a degree in Engineering Administration from a combined study program in the Harvard Business School and Harvard Engineering School.

A former president of the Bronxville Parent Teachers Association, Mr. Campion served as President of the Bronxville Board of Education last year. He is a member of the Board of the American Council on Nationalities Service in New York City, and has worked a number of years on the Westchester Committee for Sarah Lawrench College, serving as chairman from 1965-67. He has been active in the American Newspaper Publishers Association (ANPA), ans served as Chairman of the ANPA Research Institute Committee on Production Engineering from 1966-68.

Mrs. W. E. B. Dubois:

Truth Is The Answer

By KAREN DEGRACE
Staff Reporter

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." So began Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois in a speech given last night to a near capacity crowd in the Campus Center auditorium.

Mrs. DuBois, widow of Dr. W.E.B. DuBois, urged her listeners to try to know the truth about others, for, she cautioned, the truth has not been told through the years. "Rational understanding", she said, "is much needed in today's era of world liberation.

Ten years ago, dark peoples were rejoicing over the liberation of Africa. And in 1963 the charter of the Organization of African Unity was signed. But, she said, rejoicing was naive.

"How senseless it was to assert their intentions when they didn't have the power to protect themselves in the task of rebuilding Africa in the modern world' the greedy exploiters love Africa's resources, but they do not love Africans", she declared.

The essence of Western racism, she went on, is the capacity to transfer and legitimize its power thrust under the cloak of national morality.

Outsiders granted Africa her independence, she explained, only after helping to write a flimsy constitution. "As long as outside interests control the economy of any country," she continued, "that country is neither free nor independent."

"Tricks have been played in Africa," she insisted; "colonial imperialists" built the Suez Canal for easy access to the Indian Ocean. We now have open aggression in the invasion of Guinea but, she explained, the people's militia has made the invasion fail.

America is an interracial nation; this does not necessitate hatred or separation, but at the same time it does not deny the fact that Blacks do not want to be like someone else.

A crime even greater than the plundering of the natural riches of the African continent is the crime of robbing Blacks of a past, of brainwashing their minds.

Pride of race, lineage, and self are necessary. These, she feels, are the essence of today's Black movement. Black is something of which to be proud; and, she said, "America has caught up with that idea".

In the words of her late husband, Mrs. DuBois said: "The problem of the twentieth century is the problem of the color line." "We must not talk too much," she urged; "we must think, we must learn, and we must plan." And, she concluded; "we must seek the truth to understand where we are going, and how we shall get there."

"Try to know the truth about others," urged Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois, in her speech last night in the Campus Center auditorium. She was concerned with the plundering of Africa and robbery of Black's heritage. (MDC photo by Gary Slickman)

Mrs. Dubois will speak at an informal gathering in the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union at 2:30 P.M. today. The topic under discussion will be Palestinian and African Liberation movements.

Betty Puzh listens attentively as Bob Aims makes a point at last night's Student Union Governing Board meeting. A motion to subsidize The Noodle at a rate of $222 per week and to encourage Food Sevices to render assistance to The Noodle was passed at the meeting. (MDC photo by Gary Alpaugh).

SUG Board Agrees To Aid The Noodle

By ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

After protracted debate during a meeting held in the Campus Center, the SUG Board authorized subsidization for people working in the Noodle.

Other major subjects up for consideration included the allocation of the Franklin Room to the Student Mobilization Committee, currently housed in the Plymouth Room.

The Noodle is a macro-biotic vegetarian restaurant run by a local figure named Demian which opened about a month ago in the Suffolk Room in the Union. Student response proved so overwhelming that a full time staff of four is now required to run the place. The motion before the SUG Board called for pay for four full time staff, procurement of a new dishwasher and possibly a new stove, and the use of the Hampshire room during the peak suppertime rush.

The financial state of the Noodle was brought before the board by Bob Nims, treasurer of the board. After lengthy consideration of all aspects of the Noodle's problems, a motion was presented which stated that:

The Noodle remain in its present location in the Suffolk Room; it's dishes be washed in the Hatch dishwasher; Food Services would render all reasonable assistance to Demian, as needed; it would be funded by the General Fund at the rate of $222 per week continuing till Dec. 20, 1970; employees would be hired by Demian but would follow University student employment rules; and, lastly, the funding arrangement would not be renewable.

The motion as passed carried amendments by Thad Dabrowski, Vice President of the board.

Other minor issues were brought before the board, but most were tabled for consideration at a future date.

Demonstrators Will Protest At Rockefeller's Address

John D. Rockefeller III will address Hampshire College Sunday at 1 p.m. on his concern over the increasing conflict and divisiveness between the generations.

A peaceful demonstration organized by the Five College New University Conference, is planned to coincide with Rockefellers speech in protest of what he stands for, they said.

Calling for reconciliation in his speech, Rockefeller will offer a proposal, based on a recent study, of ways in which Youth and the Establishment can work together toward constructive social change.

Franklin Patterson, president of Hampshire College, will announce a "planning grant" to be made by Rockefeller and used jointly by the five area colleges. The grant is to initiate an environmental improvement project in the Connecticut River Valley.

The protest is intended to show Rockefeller and his minions that "we are not deceved and cannot be bought off" said spokesmen from the Conference.

Foundations such as the Rockefeller Fund and related "charities" have been intimately involved in the deliberations that have shaped the Cold War and determined our country's militaristic foreign policy, they said.

The Conference members feel that the supposed "good works" of the Rockefeller Foundation and allied funds are meant to obscure the people's understanding of how the elite rules, and stifles their demands for change.

Demonstrators will meet at 12:30 Sunday at the Main Lecture Hall, Academic Building, Hampshire College, where the address will be given.

Eric to Guest Lecture

Eric "The Rat" Walgren will be a guest lecturer at professor E. E. Kriekhause's History of Systems in Psychology course today, at 12:20 in 124 Harbrouck.

Walgren will deliver what he terms a "revolutionary perspective criticism" of Freud's Civilization and Its Discontents. He says he plans to illustrate his thesis by discussing several "repressed and repressive" administrators and his relationship with them.

Canadian Terrorists Surrender Hostage

MONTREAL (AP)—French Canadian terrorists surrendered kidnapped British envoy James R. Cross to a Cuban government delegation Thursday, placing the Briton on freedom's doorstep after 60 days of captivity.

Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau said final details were being arranged for Cross's release and a safe passage flight to Cuba for as many as seven accused terrorists.

Cross, 49, the British trade commissioner in Montreal, was kidnapped Oct. 5 by the Quebec Liberation Front-FLQ- who demanded that the government release a score of "political prisoners" and pay a $500,000 ransom in gold bullion. FLQ terrorists struck again five days later, kidnapping Quebec Labor Minister Pierre Laporte and strangling him Oct. 17.

The dramatic break for Cross came Thursday morning as police surrounded the suburban house where he and two of his abductors were waiting.

Trudeau told the House of Commons he had spoken with Cross by telephone and that Cross was in the "technical hands" of the Cubans.

Justice Minister John Turner said in Ottawa he was "relatively certain" that the terrorists found with Cross had not been associated with the kidnapping and murder of Laporte.

Youth To Nixon:

"I Cannot Believe In Your Sincerity"

WASHINGTON (AP)—A young, $140 a month church worker returned President Nixon's accolade with a spontaneous oral slap Thursday because, she said later, "I refuse to be used as a symbol" against dissident youth.

When Debra Jean Swett, 19, stepped forward in the White House Blue Room to accept a medal and a presidential hand shake she admonished Nixon: "I cannot believe in your sincerity until you get us out of Vietnam."

Nixon replied "We're doing the best we can," and turned away.

Miss Sweet, honored for her leadership of a Wisconsin antihunger drive, said her remark had been made "very necessary" by the thrust of Nixon's opening comments at the ceremony.

As the President extolled her and three other young people for bravery or exceptional public service, he had added by way of contrast, "We hear too much these days about the very small minority of young Americans who have lost faith in their country." It was a theme he has often repeated.

"I couldn't accept that," Miss Sweet said later in an interview. "The leaders of the youth of America are resisting, and certainly aren't happy.

"I hadn't planned to make any specific comment," she said. "I was prepared to accept the protocol, but I saw him using me as a symbol, and I refused to become that symbol."

Debra's mother, Mrs. Charles W. Sweet, allowed that "My heart is in my mouth" over the incident but added, "To just say empty words....is something Debra just couldn't do.

"I'm proud of her. I believe in what she feels she has to do."

Debra's father, a state agriculture official at Madison, Wis., agreed with that sentiment, but noted he would have preferred she make "a more positive statement-like please do what you can to end the war."

Although Debra disclaimed any prior intent for her comment, her father said "I knew the situation would arise if the opportunity presented itself. Debra is not artificial in any way, shape or manner. She believes 100%."

Boondoggle or Boon?

Supersonic Plane Grounded

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate voted Thursday to ground further federal subsidies for the supersonic transport, a plane President Nixon has personally sponsored.

The defections of several Republicans clinched the 52 to 41 adoption of an amendment slicing a $290 million SST subsidy fund from the Transportation Department's appropriation bill.

The amendment was sponsored by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who was able to muster only 22 votes for a similar amendment last year.

The big difference this year, was concern for the environment, a new issue in which the embattled SST has become a major symbol of potential global pollution.

As Proxmire scored a personal victory, Washington states's two Democratic senators, Warren G. Magnuson and Henry M. Jackson, shared the defeat with Nixon. Their state is the home of the Boeing Aircraft Co., prime contractor for SST development.

Jackson declared the Senate had "turned its back on 30,000 working men and women currently engaged in this program, and 150,000 who eventually would have been engaged."

Magnuson termed the vote "a real blow at the future of American air superiority in the next generation."

From the beginning, there has been argument over whether the 300 passenger, 1,800 mile an hour plane would become a boondoggle or a boon.

UVM Paper Charges Admin Collaboration With FBI

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP)—The Cynic, student newspaper at the University of Vermont, said in a copyrighted story Thursday night that the university's security office has collaborated voluntarily with the FBI in investigating the backgrounds and political affiliations of UVM students.

The university issued a statement denying the story, saying no university office releases confidential information of any kind unless the individual involved authorizes it.

The story also was denied by Fred Barrett, chief of security at UVM. Barrett said his office has furnished to the the FBI "only information of a public nature" and then only "when it has been requested."

There was no comment from the FBI.

The Cynic story, written by Gary H. Barnes, UVM senior and editor of the newspaper, was attributed largely to Thomas Hetinger, 22, a former UVM security office.

Hetinger claimed that he was ordered several times to attend campus demonstrations and obtain information for the FBI.

Accompanying the Cynic story was an affidavit from Hetinger in which he reiterated his allegations.

Hetinger said the most recent example of alleged UVM FBI collaboration was at a campus demonstration Oct. 30 to protest the findings of a grand jury that investigated last May's clash between National Guardsmen and students at Kent State University in Ohio.

He said he saw a three page hand written note from Barrett outlining security precautions for the demonstration and accompanied by the words "lead confirmed," and "FBI."

The Cynic story broke at a time when the UVM campus already was deeply split over the threat of a university trustee, John L. Beckley of North Caldwell, N.J., to resign at a trustees' meeting this weekend.

Women May Face Tight Job Market

WASHINGTON (AP) - The arithmetic of supply and demand is about to hit the women's rights movement where it hurts - in the career women's job market.

The Labor Department said Thursday the 1970's "may have a particularly adverse effect" on the burgeoning crop of women college graduates, who in the past have spearheaded the drive for fair sex equality.

"The increasing participation of women in the labor force and the narrow range of professions in which the majority of them seek employment are at the heart of the women workers' problem," the department said in the fall issue of Occupational Outlook Quarterly.

It cited these factors:

- A projected tremendous increase in women college graduates through 1980.
- A sharp decline in opportunity in teaching - which traditionally has absorbed two of every five women college graduates.
- A continuing absence of any but highly talented and motivated women in such high opportunity fields as medicine, law, engineering and science.

"Thus, unless women enlarge the range of occupations for which they prepare, strong competition may develop among new women graduates and between new graduates and experienced older women seeking to re-enter employment in the traditional fields of employment for women, especially in elementary and secondary school teaching," the department said.

It said the outlook for college graduates generally also is less rosy than in the past decade.

"Tomorrow's college graduate may be reviving an old sport - a recently little understood phenomenon on campus known as the 'job hunt'," it said.

HEW Offers $1.20 Welfare Pay Plan

WASHINGTO'((AP) - The Nixon administration, in a late hour bid for liberal Senate support, proposed Thursday that all jobs under its stalled welfare reform plan pay at least $1.20 an hour.

The package of compromises offered by Secretary of Welfare Elliot L. Richardson pleased but did not completely satisfy liberal senators who favor an income guarantee system but one with fewer restrictions and more benefits than the administration's family assistance proposal.

Furthermore, the compromise offer may be too late. The Senate Finance Committee failed again Thursday to complete action on a Social Security bill for floor debate and probably will not until next week-the original target date for congressional adjournment.

The administration, which has twice lost on welfare, in the Fiance Committee, hopes on the Senate floor to attach family assistance to the Social Security bill already laden with import restricting amendments.

If a threatened filibuster against the trade restrictions occurs, said Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D Conn., "the whole thing will go down the drain," including family assistance.

Richardson, speaking for the administration at a meeting of Common cause-a new public interest lobbying group-accepted seven welfare amendments proposed by Ribicoff to win liberal support for family assistance.

The seven would strengthen federal management of the program, guarantee that no welfare family receives less under the new plan than now, and provide some public service jobs for recipients.

Richardson, however, balked at a key demand that all jobs under family assistance work requirements pay at least the federal minimum of $1.60 an hour.

The administration, which previously had referred only to suitable jobs, offered a $1.20 hourly compromise.

Slick Loophole

Navy Oil Dump Lawful

WASHINGTON (AP) - A 1924 law cited by the Navy as justification for dumping oil sludge in Atlantic waters was repealed last spring, but congressional experts say the law which replaced it contains a loophole which permits such dumping even if resulting oil slicks drift back onto U.S. beaches.

The Navy admits that it dumped two bargeloads of waste liquid containing oil sludge into the Atlantic Monday night. A resulting 760 square mile oil slick now threatens 50 miles of north Florida coastline.

The barges came from the Mayport Naval Station at the mouth of Florida's St. Johns River. An official Navy statement said the station "has used this procedure for the past two years, as required by the Oil Pollution Act of 1924."

The U.S. Water Quality Improvement Act, signed into law by President Nixon last April 3, ways in part: "The Oil Pollution Act, 1924, as amended, is hereby repealed."

The new law sets much stricter requirements on dumping in ocean waters within 50 miles of the U.S. coastline, but sets no limits on dumping outside that boundary, even if the oil drifts back to shore.

"If the Navy went out 50 miles, they didn't break the water quality law," said one congressional expert, "but President Nixon has announced that he intends to send up a tough new ocean dumping law next session which could prohibit what the Navy did.

"While they didn't violate the law, they apparently have violated the stated intent of the administration.

"It's abominable that U.S. vessels aren't prohibited from dumping oil outside the 50 mile boundary. It's a glaring loop hole in the law."

Dope-Liquor Licenses; Under 18 Excluded

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A Harvard University Medical School professor Thursday called for the legalization of marihuana for persons over a certain age, to be sold as alcohol is, with a specific potency so the buyer knows what he is getting.

A luncheon announcing the publication by Harvard University Press next spring of his book, "Marihuana Reconsidered," Dr. Lester Grinspoon said legislation would immediately put an end "to the costs and harmfulness of the present legal approach" of enforcing anti-marihuana laws.

"If we allow the legalization of marihuana," he said, "there would be no demand for hashish a stronger form of cannabis."

He said Operation Intercept, a federal program used to halt marihuana traffic at the U.S. Mexican and U.S. Canadian border, "actually was counter-productive. It lead to more use of hashish and heroin."

Its legalization, he added, also would provide the government with another source of revenue, as does alcohol.

Dr. Grinspoon, 38, described himself as "conservative about drugs." He said up until three years ago, he was against marihuana, but research he did prior to being asked to testify at a drug trial changed his mind.

"If anything, my bias was definitely negative," he said. "I had the impression it was a dangerous drug."

He said regulations controlling the use of "cannabis would limit it to marihuana of two percent tetrahydrocannabinol potency" for persons over 18.

Just as people don't seek out pure ethanol when whisky is available, 'so it is expected that with the unfettered availability of marihuana, few would seek out hashish."

Although there is some danger in any drug, Grinspoon said, there is no evidence that marihuana causes any "cellular" damage in users, and in a program he conducted linking the use of marihuana to schizophrenia among 41 patients, 39 showed no connection between use of marihuana and their mental disorders.

Dr. Grinspoon said it is unlikely that legislatures in the near future will legalize the use of marihuana, but "widespread ignoring of the anti marihuana laws will very shrtly come to pass. But this laissez faire approach is no solution....

"A more rational approach to the problem of the smoking of marihuana...would include legalization of the use of marihuana, regulation of its distribution, and the development of sound educational programs about it."

Higher Ed. Divisions Key To Future

(Editor's Note: The author is a recent transfer from a two year liberal arts women's college and is attempting to present her own personal views on this type of educational experience)

by LINDA BALICKI
Staff Reporter

In today's modern and sophisticated world, increasing emphasis is being placed upon the tyte and quality of education which is being provided by the nation's colleges and universities. It is even now the opinion of many educators that the future task of higher educational institutions will be to provide the more intensive and specialized type of education which will be required in future years.

Because of this there has been much inquiry in recent years as to the best educational means in terms of structure and program for preparing future generations of Americans for the years ahead. One of the most prominent proposals to result from this inquiry concerns the expansion of the present junior college and community college system to the extent which would make it an integral part of the program at a major university such as UMass.

Under such a system, which is similar, in essence, to the Upper-Lower Division proposal which has been recommended for study in the Long Range Planning Committee Report, a student would pursue a two-step, four year program of studies. Of these four years, the first two would be spent pursuing an essentially liberal arts course of study at a junior or community college co-educations or otherwise.

Specialized Course of Study

During these two years the student would be required to select and prepare for a highly intensive and specialized course of study in his major area upon graduation to the upper division or university. His course of study at the university would then be devoted exclusively to intensive study in his major area and would be characterized by independent study and field projects.

The adoption of such an educational system would have many advantages if put into widespread use. One of the major advantages would be that universities and junior colleges would, for the first time share an equal responsibility in the education of the country's youth. Up to this time junior colleges and community colleges have been relegated to a relative position of inferiority within the educational system.

Under the new system the junior college would become a sort of "testing ground" for prospective university students. The atmosphere and curriculum would be so designed as to allow a student the opportunity to gain the porper level of maturity which is needed for the successful completion of any higher educational program. This would take on added importance in light of the highly intense nature of the upper level course of study.

Determine Personal Capibilities

At the junior college or lower level the student would be able to determine his true capabilities and decide whether or not to continue on to the university level. Should he decide not to he could in an probability gear his studies so as to allow him to enter the business or vocational fields.

In the case that he should decide that he may wish to continue on, the junior college training will present him with enough of the problems which he may encounter on the univesity level so that he will either mature to the proper level or chose another form of preparation.

In such a way the university will be assured of receiving students who are truly capable, both mentally and emotionally of handling a university load.

This will be of immense importance in determining the quality of education which the university will indulge in. Because of its highly intensive nature, the bulk of the university curriculum may well revolve around in-depth independent study and research projects. Because the students entering the university from the junior colleges will have that maturity, the universities will more readily be able to conduct highly specialized courses.

Freshmen Syndrome Eliminated

They will also be able to do so because many of the probelms which accompany entrance into the university on a freshman level will have been eliminated. The student will no longer be bothered by matters of adjustment to a specialized form of education because he already have had training in enough depth that he will not encounter any stress in entering upon more highly advanced education.

In addition the problems which a freshman encounters in attempting to adjust to a situation in which there are all different stages of educational training and age groups will be eliminated because each student, regardless of his grade ranking will be involved in essentially the same type of educational endeavor. Each student will have achieved the relatively same level of educational maturity and will therefore benefit from living and working in an atmosphere which is intensively academic in nature. The give and take of ideas in such an atmosphere will result in an even higher quality of academic achievement than would normally be expected.

The results of this as viewed from a professor's position could be extremely beneficial. He will no longer be bothered by the presence of students who either have not had enough background or even if they have, have not gained a true sense of understanding of the material which he is dealing with.

He will also not have to be concerned with the maturity of his students. Too often a professor must deal in the early stages of his courses, particularly those on the introductory level with orienting his students in the proper ways to study for or deal with the material which will be presented. He may also be involved in giving assigments which may be essentially rudimentary and pedestrian in nature so as to give the students a sturdy basis on which to plan and formulate his methods of studying for the course.

Hopefully the students in the university will be of sufficient academic maturity that they will be able to maintain the pace of learning which he sets and will be able to initiate steps on his own to bring his speed and depth of learning in line with that of the professor's.

Student Frustrations Lessened

It will in all probability be found that in both levels that social stresses and deviances will be minimized as a result of elimination of many of the academic stresses. Very often a student's frustrations with academic affairs may lead him towards seeking relief from drugs, drinking and other forms of activity which will have grave consequences both for himself, the university in which he is enrolled and ultimately, society as a whole. Because each student will be involved in projects which he himself will have some level of confidence of success, he will be less inclined to give up in desperation and frustration and therefore be less inclined to engage in activities which may be unlawful or disruptive in nature. This will ease the burden of the universities in that they may well not have to concern themselves as extensively with discipline problems. This may eliminate the need for judicial bodies and the time spent with them and allow the universities to devote their full energies to the furthurance of high quality education.

The benefits of such a system to education as well as to society as a whole may well be numerous. Not only will the cause of quality educational research be advanced but society will see benefits in that its members will have the intelligence, maturity and training to deal with the vast technological nature of society in future years.

This is what we have against blades.

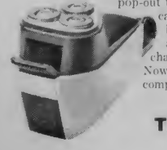
A shaver that shaves as close or closer than the new platinum and chromium blades.

99 men tested our Norelco Tripleheader 35T against these new blades. Each shaved one side of his face with a blade and the other with the Tripleheader. Our three floating heads followed the curves of their faces. And our eighteen rotary blades shaved in every direction at once (that's the way beards grow).

Blades can't do all this. They're straight. And that's why seven out of ten men said the Tripleheader shaved them as close or closer than the new blades.

What's more, the Tripleheader has a pop-out trimmer. So you can get your sideburns straight and even for a change.

Now what blade can compete with that?



This is what we have against other rechargeables.

A rechargeable that gives up to twice as many shaves per charge as any other rechargeable.

Our Rechargeable Tripleheader 45CT has all the features of our regular Tripleheader. It has three Microgroove™ floating heads. And eighteen rotary blades that continuously sharpen themselves to cut down on bothersome blade replacement. And a hidden pop-up trimmer for neat sideburns and mustaches.

It also has some special features all its own. A Shave Counter that automatically counts your shaves and tells you when to recharge. A Charge Indicator that lights up when it's recharging. And, of course, the Rechargeable can shave with or without a cord.

Now what rechargeable can compete with that?

O.H. Sets Admission Policy Application Demand High

"Orchard Hill is a type of alternative education. We have more relative courses than the University, it is small and personalized," Steve Lyons, Chairman of Admissions to Orchard Hill told the Collegian yesterday.

Interviews for students seeking residence on the Hill are now being conducted by a committee of 2 faculty members, Allen David and Barbara Herron, and 7 Orchard Hill students.

Lyons claims that 150 swingshift freshmen who lived on Orchard Hill in the summer have applied for second semester residence. One hundred students now at the University have applied for transfer to Orchard Hill, he said. He added that the number of openings is indefinite at this time.

Before a student is interviewed he must fill out an application including questions on his definition of a university education versus a high school education, his idea of a residential college, and the ideal living environment in a university, explained Lyons.

"The interview only lasts about 15 minutes and basically we want to know why the student wants to move here," he said.

"We suggest filling out an application before the interview so the person can think about the questions," Lyons said.

Applications are available now through Thursday, in the Master's Office, Eugene Field House. Interviews are conducted without appointment between 7 and 9 p.m., also through Thursday.

Pre-Registration: A Normal Semester

By Claudia Hamberg
News Editor

"At the present time, it's just a normal semester," commented Mr. Henry Skillings, Schedule Officer, as counseling week ends and the pre-registration deadline nears. Computer cards accumulate as students relinquish control of their academic futures to the computer, hopeful of receiving all of their courses plus a comfortable schedule in January.

What does "normal" mean in scheduling the course loads of over 20,000 students?

Plans for the spring semester, 1971 began in late September, according to Skillings. Course proposals were received from all departments in early October. These proposals included subjects, course capacities, times, and names of courses expected to be "flagged" or overenrolled.

On the basis of "contact hours," the number of class hours planned for each week, the Scheduling Office allocates rooms to the various departments. Average room use at the University is 38 out of a possible 45 hours per week. Skillings explained. The past semester's unused hours of space are analyzed and room charts used to allocate classroom space effectively. Skillings cited allocation of auditorium space as one of the most difficult areas of scheduling.

Changes in course proposals are made throughout the semester, and as many as possible are worked out before the course pre-registration schedule is printed and distributed to the student body.

With the pre-registration schedule booklet come the pre-registration cards, the cards under the juridiction of the Registrar's Office. Deadline for pre-registration cards for the Spring semester is December 8. Cards should be mailed or carried to the Registrar's Office by this time. Registrar Ralph D. Jones explained that his staff must "check and double check" the pre-registration cards received, and then "track down" students who did not submit pre-registrations.

The initial batch of pre-registrations will go to the Scheduling Office next week. Any special problems in scheduling for Spring semester will turn up after the Scheduling Office sends the first run of pre-registrations and course offerings through the computer, some three weeks before second semester registration. The usual problem is that "supply and demand don't match and we are short on time to work on the solutions," commented the Registrar.

Approximately 10 days before registration the final scheduling run is begun. Skillings explained that the schedules are developed on the computer in five hours, but it takes countless hours to print out the thousands and thousands of cards and schedules.

Questioned on the effectiveness of the UMass registration system, Jones answered, "Our system is more sophisticated than others of state institutions in New England...A serious problem is that students have no latitude in selecting course sections." Only students qualifying for special scheduling can choose course sections at this time.

"People with legitimate reasons for special scheduling trying to rearrange their schedules on Course Change Day in Januar create a problem which could have been solved before the scheduling was done," stated Jones. He noted the high volume of course changes made last semester, 12,000 drops and 20,000 adds. This semester, a student signing up for more than 17 credits without overload permission will be scheduled for only the first five courses or 17 credits appearing on his pre-registration card.

Schedule Officer Skillings observed that much trouble in January could be avoided if students pre-registered more carefully in December. Then he mused, "But maybe it lets the student think he is beating the computer when he spends hours rearranging his schedule.

Pre-registration cards await their destiny in the files of the Scheduling Office. Corresponding students have placed in the cards their academic hopes and desires for the coming semester. The memory banks will soon decide the acceptability of these ambitions. No doubt many anxious students will return with their alterred pre-registration and add-drop cards on Course Change Day.

Anchors Aweigh In Engineering

Anchors that have nothing to do with ships are the subject of an unusual ocean engineering project at the University of Massachusetts.

Using an 11-foot-deep concrete bin filled with water-saturated sand, UMass researchers have in effect created a section of ocean floor back of the engineering quadrangle at the Amherst campus.

There they are running tests on the vertical holding power of stationary anchors. These are the permanent, embedded anchors that hold buoys, floating docks, work platforms and other structures in the ocean.

"What we're trying to do is establish design criteria," said Dr. Stanley Bemben, associate professor of civil engineering project director. He explained that while some previous tests have been run on individual anchors, no one has ever tried to correlate all the characteristics and work out a set of design tables for embedded anchors.

The UMass test bin has a bridge-like structure straddling it; this holds hoisting and measuring equipment. The tests involve the amount of force required to move an embedded anchor at various depths. There is a winch for straight pull and a device to produce the kind of rhythmic pull that comes from wave action.

The UMass group is working with three main shapes of anchors, each in three different sizes, with testing planned in both sand and clay soils. The work is supported by the University's Project THEMIS grant from the Department of Defense and a separate grant from the U.S. Naval Civil Engineering Laboratory.

The anchor project is one of several areas of specialty in the ocean engineering program of the UMass School of Engineering. The program now has 27 faculty members involved in research and instruction and offers 24 courses. All five School of Engineering departments contribute to it under the administrative direction of the Civil Engineering department.

Jones To Lecture On Armenian History

Dr. Robert E. Jones of the UMass History Department will give a lecture on Armenia, A Historic, Political View of an Unknown Mountain State, this Sunday in Room 917 Campus Center, at 7:30.

Sponsored by the Armenian Social Activities Club. Slides will be shown and all are invited.

Grad Research Center At Half-Way Construction Mark

By PAT SUPRENANT
Staff Reporter

The Graduate Research Center, first of it's kind to be granted federal funds for construction, is nearing the halfway mark of completion.

It was originally proposed that the Research Center consist of three towers to house the graduate departments of Chemistry, Physics and Math, but because of a lack of funds, only the Chemistry tower is now under construction.

"10.3 million dollars has been asked of the State Legislator to complete the other two towers" said Karl Broekhize, business manager in the Graduate School.

The cost of construction so far has been estimated at 14.5 million dollars according to Leo Liberman Project Engineer for the University.

"These buildings are designed primarily as a facility for the prosecution of research in the University. Its primary function will be to serve graduate students doing research for their dissertations" said Broekhize.

A proposed completion date has been set at June of 1971. It was originally slated for August 1970, but because of labor disputes, it was delayed six months.

The three story building running east to west on North Pleasant St. will be the Physical Science Library. All journals and books on the earth sciences will be kept there. The library will be available for all students' use.

In the basement wing of the same building, which runs north to south on North Pleasant St., will be a glass blowing laboratory and a storage area. The basements of the two proposed towers have been laid and will be used for storage space and animal laboratories.

Two computers, now in the Engineering Laboratory Building, the Research Computer Center and the University Press will occupy the first floor.

Graduate offices and a computer science program offering only graduate degrees will take up all of the second floor.

Statistics and astronomy will be on the third floor.

Graduate section of the chemistry bio-chemistry departments, and center for the Palmer Science and Engineering program, will be in the seventeen story tower which will be mostly laboratories and classrooms.

These facilities will be semi restricted to those students who have a cause to use them.

The entire complex will be air conditioned.

" The reason for this is the computer room will generate large amounts of heat and many rooms will be using chemicals that will necessitate the constancy of temperature, Broekhize explained.

"This is done because it is easier to control the quality and it's simply cheaper", said Bob Hart, job superintendent for O'Connell on the Granger contract.

"Better control of the temperature and lighting led to the need for only two hundred windows in the tower," said Hart.

AAUP Explained to Campus By St. John's Professor

Wednesday night in the campus center, Professor Huppe of St. John's University in New York, spoke to an audience of about fifty suit-coated men about the American Association of University Professors. The A.A.U.P. is a collective bargaining association for teachers. According to Huppe, the A.A.U.P. is better than an industrial type union because it takes into consideration academic, as well as financial, demands.

"Thanks to A.A.U.P., St. John's has made great strides in academic freedom" claimed Huppe.

A.A.U.P. set a council of 6 members 2 alternatives, and two consultants to study the needs of the faculty. They came up with a fat booklet of demands. After a long period of negotion with administrators, a contract was signed.

The A.A.U.P. is a national organization, with many branches. It is an effective association in dealing with faculty-administration hassles because it has some "muscle", prestige, and financial backing.

Hope Fades For Soldiers In S. Vietnam Plane Crash

SAIGON (AP)—Hope faded Thursday of finding any survivors of two U.S. transport planes which disappeared without trace in the central part of South Vietnam with 123 Americans and Vietnamese aboard.

The transports-one missing since last Friday, the other since Sunday-were presumed to have crashed in rugged mountain country.

A large scale aerial search, fruitless so far, left officials with a three way mystery: What caused the two planes to go down, precisely where did they crash and were there any survivors.

U.S. headquarters in Saigon delayed announcement that the planes were missing for several days in each case to permit search and rescue operations without enemy interference.

Headquarters still withheld information, on security grounds, on where the planes took off or where they were going, although it was known that they took off from separate bases.

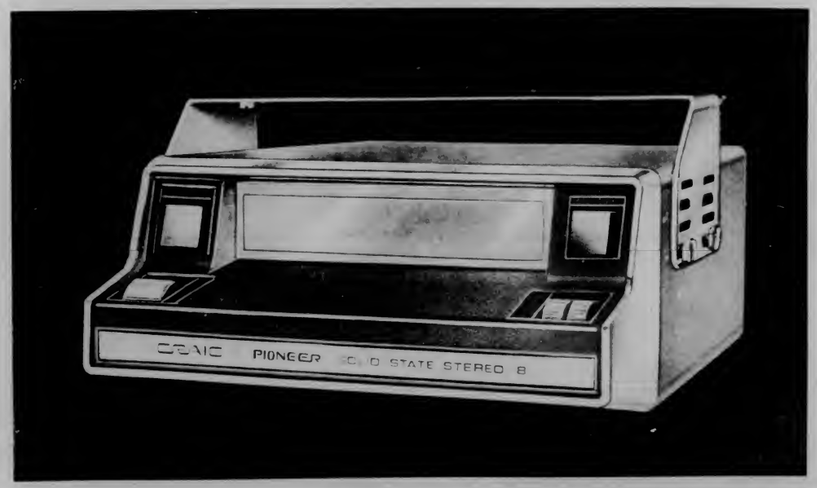
Both aircraft were twin engine, propeller driven C123 planes with the military designation of "Providers."

The plane missing since Friday carried 79 persons-an American crew of 5. one U.S. military passenger, 58 Vietnamese soldiers and 15 Vietnamese women and children dependents of the soldiers.

The other transport, missing since Sunday, carried 44 persons a 5 man American crew, 27 American troops and 12 Vietnamese passengers.

The loss of the two transports overshadowed action on the battlefields.

Except for a large scale operation in the Mekong Delta, fighting across South Vietnam remained at a low level and even the enemy rocket attacks of earlier this week tapered off.



In the Delta, about 7,000 South Vietnamese troops of the 21st Infantry Division pushed ahead with a newly launched drive to clear the U Minh Forest.

The cave filled "forest of darkness' has for years been a major sanctuary for the Viet Cong and has defied repeated government drives to clear it out.

South Vietnamese forces which launched the latest drive Tuesday have reported no fighting since two initial clashes. In these encounters, government troops claimed 40 Viet Cong killed and casualties to themselves of one man wounded.

The U.S. Command, in its weekly casualty summary, reported 32 Americans were killed in combat last week. An equal number died of illness or accidents. The battle deaths were just under half of the 65 reported killed in action the previous week.

Therapeutic Community: New Hope For Addicts

Editor's Note:
This article is part of a weekly series dealing with such topics as drug research, the "drug culture", drug addiction, drugs and religion, altered states of consciousness, and the use of drugs in other cultures such as the American Indian. This series will be sponsored by Room to Move, but will encourage readers to ract to the articles by mailing or bringing in questions, rebuttal, original statements, or interesting excerpts from varjous publications, c/o John Dunphy, Room to Move, Student Union (located in the old barber shop across from the post office). The hope is that this series will become a medium for an ongoing exchange of views on drugs and related usses.

One of the most perplexing and controversial issues of our time is what is to be done about Heroin addiction. The answers are many; the questions they raise are far greater. There are, at present, five basic ways of dealing with it:

1) Incarceration, either in prisons (at $10-24 a day per inmate) or in state mental hospitals ($15-75 daily). Obviously, despite the expense, incarceration does not solve the addict's real problem.

2) The British system of measured-out legal dosages. Because it has not succeeded in coping with the drug problem in England, it is now being questioned.

3) The methadone maintenance program, in which a synthetic drug is used therapeutically to satisfy an addict's need for heroin. Initial costs are high, and addicts on methadone remain addicts, in need of the drug-with its attendant costs-for the rest of their lives.

4) Psychotherapy. This involves thorough emotional reeducation to free oneself from the hidden hungers that seem to promote drug usage. The process is expensive and prolonged and requires great patience.

5) The therapeutic community. While this treatment does not work for everyone, it now seems to offer the most promise. And its costs-under $10 per person per day are low.

Where and what are these communities and what do they hope to accomplish? Let us take a look.

The communities have mushroomed from the first Synanon in Ocean Park, Calif., to include five more Synanons throughout the U.S.; Marathon Houses in Rhode Island, Mass., and Connecticut; Daytop Village on Staten Island; Phoenix Houses throughout New York; Kinsman Hall in Hillsdale, N. Y., the four Odyssey Houses in Manhattan etc. Their growth since 1958 has been steady but the supply is far exceeded by demand.

The majority of the communities are live-in and curative, welcoming drug-dependent persons for the purpose of rehabilitation through group encounters, re-education and hard physical work. Programs may be set up in hospitals, on farms or, as in New York City, in seedy apartment buildings.

In some communities, doctors, nurses and social workers live with the residents. Most communities also employ ex-addicts as staff, on the theory that the addict aiming at rehabilitation needs before him proof that addiction can be cured. All communities are based on the concept of community living in a simulated home setting with discipline, affection and work as background to retraining. Much sophistication of technique has taken place,; much more is needed.

The main hope of accomplishment, it seems, is to give addicts a second chance at growing up. They are immature people in flight from reality and responsibility; a reality which bares its ugly entrails all too often to most of us, but nevertheless a reality that must be dealt with on its own terms. From this grim situation must be fashioned the degree of independence and maturity necessary to deal with the framework at hand. It is far from easy.

There is, however, hope. For example, the Phoenix House has returned 150 graduates to society. Of these, 64 have jobs in the program. Most impressive, the program is succeeding in holding at least 50% of all those who enter-an extraordinary figure in the field of addict rehabilitation.

Hope, mighty as it is, begins to crumble over time when exposed to despair, fear and that all pervasive spiritual vacuum for which our society is famous. This is illustrated by the fact that only about 10% of "cured" addicts are "clean" after a five year period. This is discouraging but at the same time illuminates the basic truths of reality which can then be studied more closely, avoiding possible delusions about what the task at hand actually involves.

In Case of Fire. 5-2111

Finally, some action has been taken to eliminate confusion in the reporting of a fire by Campus telephone.

Although dialing operator ("O") is the utmost in simplicity, neither the telephone operators nor the telephone recognizes that any particular "O" is a call to report a fire, with the result that a fire call can get backed into the system along with other calls of individuals seeking assistance and information from the operators. When time is of the essence, there cannot be a holdup in the telephone consoles, and simplicity has to take a back seat.

A solution to the predicament has been the selection of a new number - an exclusive fire reporting number - 5-2111. A call to this number will be answered directly and forwarded to the Amherst Fire Department. An additional advantage is that the call will be taped for permanent record and for clarification of any garbled information.

The new telephone connections have been already and the new system is operable. It is expected that some confusion will still exist until 5-2111 is firmly established, and in the meantime, any fire call reported on "O" will still be handled as in the past by the telephone operator relaying the information to the Amherst Fire Department. Dialing "O" will mean a delay, dialing 5-2111 will mean immediate response.

The number 5-2111 was chosen because of the minimum time involved in the mechanics of dialing and for consistency with the campus Police number 5-2121 and the Infirmary number 5-2671.

Recently the town of Amherst adopted the 911 system of reporting fires and emergencies. This system is in use in many localities in the country and will probably become universal. The 911 system is basically for the community and will not apply to the University. The University is a separate entity with its own channels of communication: FIRE: 5-2111; POLICE: 5-2121; INFIRMARY: 5-2671.

Please note the change in the fire number in your university phone directory on the front cover and also on the inside front cover, where directions for reporting a fire are written.

UMass filmmaker John LeBaron will show his Canada Award-winning film and Bob Hodgkins of Boston will participate in a 'hands-on' display of his famous collection of current Leica cameras at the third meeting of the UMass Photography Club in Room 165 of the Campus Center, at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 6.

This will be the first time LeBaron's film has been shown to a general audience since it captured the first prize earlier this year. LeBaron will discuss technical aesthetic aspects of film-making and offer advice to club-members who are interested in film-making.

Following the film, club members and visitors will be invited to get to know the famous Leica System of cameras and accessories. Bob Hodgkins, who has owned collections of every major camera system will do a 'show and tell' about why he is a 'Leica man', using photographic examples from his current and previous cameras.

Also on the agenda will be preparations for the club's first exhibition, to be held in the lobby of the new Campus Center, and the election of office members. Visitors are welcome.

Science Teachers To Attend Course In Air Pollution

The Environmental Engineering Program of UMass' department of civil engineering will present a short course in air pollution next week to a selected group of approximately 12 secondary school science teachers.

The purpose of the course is to help teachers integrate air pollution subject material into their secondary school science curricula.

Arrangements have been made with the help of Donald Lambert, Westfield School science teacher and director of Project EPIC (Educational Program to Implement Conservation), a Federally sponsored project. Participants will be drawn from the Westfield School system and surrounding towns. Last January, a similar short course dealing with water pollution was presented by the UMass civil engineering department.

Legal, meteorological and sampling aspects of air pollution will be presented by Professors F.A. DiGiano and D.D. Adrian in evening laboratory and lecture sessions Dec. 7 through 11.

PE-2040 Deluxe 3-speed automatic turntable

The ultimate in record playing equipment, the PE-2040 rocks like a manual turntable, operates like an automatic. A dial control in the center of the tonearm pivot allows you to adjust for the perfect (critical) tracking angle in single play, multiple play. The result is maximum protection for your record collection. Operation is completely silent. The one-command control is extra sensitive.

Other features include: 3-speed selector with synchronous motor; automatic record size selector with variable pitch, ultra gentle fingertip cueing control . . . feather-touch, pause control . . . fail safe stylus protector . . . continuous record repeat action . . . dynamically balanced, 11½", aluminum platter with noise suppression grooves . . . transcription-quality tonearm . . . 4-pole, 4-coil induction motor . . . interchangeable single play spindle with the record to minimize center-hole wear.

PE-2038 3-speed automatic turntable

Incorporating all the exclusive features of its deluxe counterpart, the PE-2040, the PE-2038 is a superb performer. Its dynamically balanced, 11½" aluminum platter rotates on a precision-honed shaft and weighing 4.4 lbs. minimizes flutter and wow. The anti-skating dial is coupled with the stylus force adjustment, and is calibrated over a range of 0 to 6 grams. Stylus force setting is extremely gentle on the PE-2040 record grooves.

Records last longer in multiple play with its gentle lowering action to the platter.

PE-2035 would most assuredly rank at the top, in many manufacturers' product collections the PE-2035 reflects it is similar to the PE-2038. Its control for vertical tracking angle adjustment is factory pre-set for optimum tracking angle both in single and multiple play. The lengthy, slender tonearm is designed for low resonance and inertia. Stylus force setting and anti-skate control are combined and are set simultaneously.

The same ultra gentle cueing control employed in the top two PE models is incorporated into the PE-2035. Viscous damped two-ways, it raises and lowers the tonearm, setting it precisely and smoothly into the record groove.

Despite its unpretentious price, the PE-2010 boasts many of PE's exclusive features including one-lever command control, automatic record scanner, stylus protection system, record repeat mechanism. In common with the sophisticated PE-2040, it shares the same powerful and precise 4-coil, 4-pole induction motor. Its 10¾ inch, 2½ lb. metal platter insures minimum wow and flutter.

EDUC 242 26 implies that all students taking EDUC 242 will be examined on Wednesday, January 13, at 10:30 a.m.

sec 2 32 implies that students in section 2 of EDUC 251 will be examined on Thursday, January 14, at 4:00 p.m. When examination time is detailed by section, it is to be assumed that unlisted sections are not scheduled for a final examination.

II. See your instructor for information on the place of examination.

III. CONFLICTS or MORE THAN TWO PER DAY

Students who have conflicts in their examination schedule or who have more than two examinations scheduled for any one day may report to the Schedule Office (168 Whitmore) for resolution of these problems.

The Schedule Office will not assist in resolving problems unless they are reported not later than FRIDAY, DECEMBER 11.

Peace And Profit

Perhaps the most nauseating thing about the great Movement and its various splinter causes is the trail of businessmen it keeps attracting. Peace buttons, love T-shirts and Resistance douche have all been marketed successfully over the past two or three years, making a pocketfull of money for a group of obnioxious businessmen and preverting any honorable values which the specific causes may have had at their start.

An excellent example of the practice of milking money out of people who think they live on some lofty cause was found by a nosey janitor who was shuffling through an old abandoned file cabinet last week.

It is a letter, received by the Student Strike's Steering Committee last May, and addressed to "Campus Peace Groups, Univ. of Mass. "This is not made up; here's what it said.

"Need bread for Peace?

"Unfortunately, everything costs money, even working for peace...if your group needs bread for peace, we can help you.

"Now we can offer you a nearly painless way to raise some bread. Now, peace concerts offer your movement group a pre-packaged, ready to go fund raising concert that's all the NOW sound, and with a strong peace message too. Peace concerts will help you raise consciousness as well as money on your campus.

"We 're not talking about amateur performers who've just learned to play a guitar..but professional performers who've sung for peace and brotherhood (sisterhood too, for our Woman's liberation friends) from every stage they've played on.

"Peace concerts offers you the performers already timed and rehearsed in good vibration with each other...and solidly packaged into an exciting, fast moving and meaningful evening. To sponsor a peace concert all you have to do is hire the hall, we do all the rest.

"If you want to learn more about how your movement can fill its treasury with a Peace Concert, just fill in the enclosed sheet and return it to us. And what better time to do it than now, right in the middle of the Student Strike, when movements of all sorts need that extra bit of bread. Peace and profit."

Campus Comment

Free University

To the University community:

I am a homosexual. And though I think I am well adjusted to my sexual orientation, I am quite familiar with the feeling paranoia. I have experienced that feeling on this campus, and my fear was strengthened by the unfortunate incident Wednesday night in Moore House.

I am not alone in being a paranoid homosexual. Fear is a very real thing to the majority of homosexuals on this campus who (if you accept Kinsey's study) number approximately 2,000. But because of the socially imposed anxieties in this academic community we'll never really know how large the gay population is.

The only visible gay people at UMass are the members of the Student Homophile League, which has only been in existence two months.

The major problem in starting such an organization is to overcome fear of public exposure, ridicule and censorship.

Evidence that paranoia is a gay way of life on this campus includes the fact that the place of the SHL meetings has never been published for fear some insecure straights will try to harass members. Newly attending homosexuals rarely give their last names let alone a phone number or address to the SHL. Few are willing to be seen putting up posters at the five area colleges, let alone doing anything as "radical" as to hand out leaflets, pass around petitions or engage in public discussion. And I am among them.

In spite of the great fear accompanying such an innocent act as attending a meeting, the membership has grown from twelve members to an average weekly attendance of 45. I think proving well that the need for such an organization is so great that people will risk a great deal of personal security to attend.

Most of you will probably find it hard to believe that homosexuals have anything to fear at UMass and the local colleges. Yet the major portion of discussion time at our weekly meetings is devoted to trying to find ways to cope with such feelings.

Gradually we have begun to feel that such anxieties can be handled. The group's supportive role has encouraged its members to have a greater sense of positive indentity. The SHL is the only place in this area where homosexuals can obtain such support.

Directly because of the need to cope with society's repression, three homosexual encounter groups have been formed within the last month. I have participated with three other SHL members in an open discussion of homosexuality with two sections of a Psych 10 class. For the first time I was willing to tell a group of strange heterosexuals that I was gay.

While our efforts to cope with our own identities have become more successful SHL has also felt a growing obligation to encourage other gay people to overcome their fears and benefit from meaningful communication with other homosexuals.

To publicize SHL, ads were placed in the five college student newspapers. Phone numbers were included for those wanting further information. After receiving a number of calls it was discovered that a small portion of the homosexuals responding to the ad were too afraid to attend meetings without some kind of personal assurance. After discussing the problem at a general meeting several weeks ago, nineteen members volunteered to meet with anyone referred to them by SHL to discuss the organization and how it might meet the needs of the individual.

The week before Thanksgiving posters were put up on the five campuses to further expose homosexuals to the organization. Unfortunately this added publicity also attracted the attention of some poorly educated heterosexuals. Someone scrawled "queer" across a poster in Morrell, and most were quickly torn down. However this reaction had more or less been expected.

The wrong people have started to read the ads and call the information number listed. Throughout the day and evening the phone rings two or three times and then stops. Several calls have been vindictive obscenities, which I suppose should be expected.

But tonight some sick heterosexual bastards topped them all. As part of the SHL referral service, a member went to discuss the organization with a student in Moore House, only to discover that the student had never contacted SHL. As the member left the student's room he was confronted by approximately thirty students who hilariously shouted abuse and seemed to be immensely enjoying this sick joke at the expense of others.

Small wonder I'm paranoid on this campus. I wish I could demand (but can't really expect) an apology from those individuals. Hopefully less bigoted and more integrated heterosexuals will censor them by showing their disapproval of such behavior.

The Student Homophile League on this campus fills a definite need. The persons who have no need for such an organization should leave us in peace. We are making an honest effort to better this community. We do not want to threaten anyone merely live fuller lives as whole human beings.

It is undeniable that such occurances as that in Moore House tend to reinforce the stand of radical homosexuals. I believe the SHL on our campus does not seek or support at this time a militant confrontation but the behavior of supposedly intelligent students may eventually force such a situation.

I personally hope that the gradual re-education of the heterosexual public can be achieved peacably, not by coercion. But I am getting angry.

"Bill of Rights"

The academic freedom of university professors is currently being attacked from all directions. It is therefore imperative that a "Professor's Bill of Rights" be formulated and defended at any cost. Some of the rights that must be included in such a manifesto are set forth below.

I THE RIGHT to retain library books for indefinite periods of time without being subject to fines. Our greater intellect enables us to get the maximum benefit from library materials. Thus, we have the right to preferential treatment.

II THE RIGHT to have others do our clerical and secretarial work. It is a waste of our time and talents to do trivial, menial and boring tasks. Secretaries (preferably female) should be made available for such work.

III THE RIGHT to give boring and irrelevant lectures. Exciting lectures develop emotional rather than rational attitudes. This leads to a loss of objectivity which must not be tolerated in a University. (The right to give boring and irrelevant lectures does not preclude the right not to lecture at all. Teaching assistants should be made available for these courses.)

IV THE RIGHT to do irrelevant research. Our duty is to knowledge, not to mankind. All research shall be guided by our own curiosity. We have no obligation to use our skills for the study of problems relevant to society.

V THE RIGHT not to be held responsible for the uses of our research. It is not our concern how our research is applied. If our research enables others to commit the most despicable crimes, we have the right to a clear conscience.

VII THE RIGHT to remain neutral on all social, political, and moral issues. However, such neutrality does not preclude our doing research or consultation for anyone who can pay the price for such work.

VIII THE RIGHT to determine the admission standards for our profession. If such standards exclude certain segments of the population from our ranks then so be it. Our ancient traditions must not be changed to satisfy modern egalitarian concepts.

Quote of the week: "Hitler was delivering an address to the students of Berlin University and the Institute of Technology...A large number of professors sat in favored places in the middle of a bare platform. Their presence gave the meeting an importance and a social acceptability that it would not otherwise have had." -- Inside the Third Reich, Memoirs by Albert Speer.

EXODUS

They came in droves
To the Big University
To prove they were men and women
Of strong character
And independant fiber.

But
They all believed in the myth
That they had to adjust to a new way of life,
So they drank and smoked
And expressed themselves in Obscenity
And they tossed all sense to the winds.

And they look at themselves in their mirrors,
Proud of what they are;
Strong in a character that reeks of filth
Independant of their families,
Yet dependant on each other for direction.

Here they adjusted to the lowest common denominator
Here they found mediocrity sublime
They never desired to be independent
They only wanted the freedom
To conform.

Donald Robadue, Jr.

THE PURIFICATION OF LUST ("Le Sacre de Printemps")

The maidens and the youths
Came in long white flowing robes
With garlands of flowers
Draped all over them.
They came to the altar
And the elders circumcized them
Every one, in spite of the gore
Which was slightly dirty.
Then they bathed and healed
The youths and maidens.
In another month
The maidens and the youths
Came in long white flowing robes
With garlands of flowers.
The elders undressed them
And lathered them
With disinfectant and vaseline.
The elders drew lots
And paired a maiden and a youth
Until all were paired.
And the maidens and the youths
Were joined in sexual combat
While the elders stood
Amongst the flowers
And masturbated.

11th Hour At Salve Regina

(Editor's note-Tim Ney, one of the founders of the Free University at UMass, wrote this essay on Catholic women's education after visiting one such school)

by TIM NEY
Special to the MDC

The transformation of life in its entirety willcome when men and women dare to rule their own lives.

Salve Regina College, the first Catholic college for women in Rhode Island, is a contemporary continuation of the educational system begun in Dublin, by the foundress of the Religious Sisters of Mercy, Mother M. Catherine McAuley, in the early nineteenth century.

"I'm not asking you to agree with me, I'm just telling you what to do."-Sister Mary Christopher, President. In a letter concerning "tacit acceptance," Sister Christopher calls for a two year moratorium on social change at Salve.

"What's the point of all this crap?" - Junior-class vice-president. Tacit acceptance or active resistance? Dorms lock at midnight, no one leaves or enters. Alarm system. No parietals. No freedom of religion. No freedom of speech.

Amerikan flag blowin, ivory statue of Jesus, arms outstretched. Walking into their white-brick cubical academic building. Stopped at the door by nun-like grey-haired woman. "I think your presence is not required." Administrator-type man in greysuit. "Do you know you have no business here?"

Today, one of the leading Catholic women's colleges in the country, Salve Regina has an enrollment of 750 students working toward their baccalaureate degrees under the tutelage of 85 faculty members in a dozen major fields. The campus has expanded to include some 18 buildings, six of them garden dormitories, on 50 acres of the historic peninsula's former great estates.

Newport. Richness, Society, and Naval Defense. Mansions and meat-eaters. One, Two, Three, Four, student rights is what we're for! Guerrila theatre, black arm bands, marches, signs, and vigils. Don't let it bring you down, its only castles burning. It can't happen here.

Here, at Salve Regina College-in the classroom, in the laboratory, in the lecture halls and library, in a variety of courses and specialized programs - ranging from creative arts and special education to nursing and medical technology-young women, living in a Christian community, prepare for a creative and productive life.

Ladies Home Journal. Cook-books, the man from PC, Reader's Digest, and Mass on Sunday. Frozen parents and send their daughters to the protective Catholic college - life-negative and anti-genital. They sell a lot of cigarettes at Salve.

When you dance, do you senses tingle? Take a chance.In a trance, while the lonely mingle with circumstance. I can love, I can really love.

Thanksgiving Mass. All present except Sister Christopher. An offering of Frosty-O's and Wonder Bread for the poor. Singing we are one. They'll know we're Christians by our love. The priest speaks on the breakdown in relationships between ourselves and God. The security guard keeps the girls from going up to the second floor. We must offer our hearts to the poor and oppressed, Father says. Leaving during the Gospel, I see the nun-like grey-haired woman on her way to worship.

During the Prayer of the Faithful there are prayers for Sister Christopher's resignation. Are you still listening? Please be gone we're tired of you. Song: "It ain't you, Chris. It ain't you we're looking for."

The youth of Earth are moving intuitively towards an utterly classless, omni-cooperative, omni-world humanity. The ELECTRIC MASS was an all-night live-in, sing-in, and video-tape watching ourselves as gods.

After the Mass about two hundred Salve students remain in the building for a sit-in, sing-in, live-in. An electik mass - new age chapel. Sisterhood holiness. Guitars, candles, sleeping bags, pillows, and video-tapes of the day's activities. New port tv-land talkshow.

"We get brighter everyday
And everytime they see us
Scatter brightness in our way
And we'll teach them how to love us"

The protest vigil/pajama party continued throughout the night. Outside waves smashed against the rocks and in Washington the Black Panthers prepared to rewrite the American constitution. 'Gonna give you 'til the morning comes. 'Til the morning comes.

Theater

By ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Editor

AN EVENING OF ONE-ACT PLAYS
Three short, contemporary plays by three of America's fine, new playwrights make up a program of a Mount Holyoke Dramatic Club production this weekend. The plays are HOME FREE by Langford Wilson, IT'S CALLED A SUGAR PLUM by Israel Horovitz, COMINGS AND GOINGS by Megan Terry. At Chapin Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8. Tickets $1.00

THE BAT

THE FROG PRINCE
A musical for children taken from the classic fairy tale about a bewitched prince freed from being a frog by the Princess who loves him. Presented by the Smith Theater Department, performances will be Saturday and Sunday afternoons at 2 and 4 at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater; admission 25¢.

THE ROSE TATTOO
Tennessee Williams wrote this warm, romantic, sometimes bawdy comedy about a New Orleans Italian widow and her search for a husband. Friday through Tuesday evenings at 8 at Theater 14, Smith College.

Movies

A HARD DAY'S NIGHT and YELLOW SUBMARINE (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
The Beatles first film, directed by Richard Lester is teamed with this highly innovative and enjoyable cartoon feature making up a double feature that will guarantee a good time.

THE AMERICAN UNDERGROUND FILM (Saturday, Herter 227 and 231, 7:30 and 8 P.M., $1.00)

BLOW-UP (Tuesday, Mahar, 6,8, and 10 p.m.)
An intriguing, baffling and somewhat erotic experience, directed by Michaelangelo Antonioni. David Hemmings plays a mod, London photographer who discovers a murder...or does he? Vanessa Redgrave is featured in this film which asks many questions.

BONNIE AND CLYDE (Thursday, Student Union Ballroom, 7 and 9 p.m.)
Arthur Penn's comic study of two of the Thirties moreinteresting criminals. Faye Dunaway and Warren Beatty are starred in the title roles and featured in award-winning performances are Estelle Parsons and Michael J. Pollard as the memorable C.W. Moss.

DIARY OF A MAD HOUSEWIFE (Campus Cinemas)

DR. ZHIVAGO (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
An epic film remembered mostly for its music. Directed by David Lean it follows the botched life of a Russian doctor set to the background of Revolutionary Russia. The huge cast is headed by Omar Shariff, Julie Christie, Rod Steiger, and Tom Courtenay.

The Marx Brothers are let loose in this freewheeling farce, probably their best made in 1933.

THE GOLD RUSH (Saturday, Science 1, Amherst College. 7:30 and 9:30 p.m.)
Charlie Chaplin's 1925 classic comedy film, as funny now as ever.

HAMLET (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Tony Richardson's version, featuring a very unpoetic dynamic performance by Nicol Williamson and featuring Marianne Faithful as Ophelia.

Another version of the Shakespearean classic, this one made in Germany in 1964 and featuring Maximillian Schnell in the title role.

JOE (Academy of Music, Northampton)
A study in extremes and as far as extremes go, not politically valid. Made on the shoestring with relatively unknown actors in the genre of the relevance film. Essentially it studies the meeting of the hard hat and the drug culture.

LOVERS AND OTHER STRANGERS (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Some short playlets, all dealing with sex, have been adapted with questionable taste. Yet the film is saved by the fine performances of an excellent cast headed by Gig Young and Anne Jackson.

LOVING (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith, 7:15 and 9:30 p.m.)
An ignored film of last year dealing with the disintegrating marriage of a New York commercial artist played in a fine, sensitive performance by George Segal.

MOVE (Amherst Cinema)
Not very good, yet a must for any fan of Elliot Gould. An overworked look at paranoia with Gould playing an out-of-work writer who walks his dog, daydreams, and hides from muggers.

MY LITTLE CHICKADEE (Friday, Mahar Auditorium, 7 and 9:30)
Unusual, to say the least, is this comic western which features the combination of Mae West and W.C. Fields. Not very coherent nor funny but worth seeing merely to see these two legendary stars together.

THE ODD COUPLE (Friday and Sunday, Hampden DC, SW, 7:30 and 9:30)
Jack Lemmon and Walter Mattheau play recently divorced husbands who find it difficult to live together, adapted from Neil Simon's Broadway smash. Easy-going and funny but hardly as hilarious as it thought to be.

ONE-PLUS-ONE (Sunday and Monday, Kirby Theater, Amherst, 7:30)
A recent film by cult French director Jean-Luc Godard which is distinguished by featuring the Rolling Stones recording "Sympathy for the Devil."

PERSONA (Sunday, Student Union, 7 and 9)
A puzzling film dealing with identity by a master director of difficult films Igmar Bergman.

WAIT UNTIL DARK (Friday, Student Union)
Audrey Hepburn is a blind girl terrorized by some burglars. Its a shocker, to say the least, as the tension is built through fine direction and good performances, namely Alan Arkin in a featured role.

Music

LA SALLE STRING QUARTET (Wednesday)
The second in the series of Chamber music concerts of the Fine Arts Council brings this internationally known group to Bowker Auditorium next Wednesday evening, December 9, at 8 p.m. The group has had a continuous interest in contemporary music which is evidenced by their program featuring works of Berg, Webern, and Penderecki. Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, Herter Hall or the Bowker Box Office one hour before performance. Tickets are priced at $1.00 to UMass undergraduates; $1.50 to graduate and all other students; $2.50 for Faculty and staff; and $3.00 to the public at large.

LIGHTHOUSE
Mount Holyoke's Winter Weekend Concert this year is a musical program entitled LIGHTHOUSE, plays for peace. It's all to take place at Chapin Hall, Friday evening at 7:30 and 10:30. Tickets priced at $3.00

STUDENT RECITAL
Debbie Sobol, an advanced piano student at Smith College will present a formal recital Friday evening at 8 p.m. at Sage Hall on the Smith Campus. She will perform works of Haydn, Brahms, and Schubert and the concert is open to the public free of charge.

UNIVERSITY SYMPHONY BAND
The University Symphony Band, under the direction of Larry Weed, will present a concert MSunday, December 6 at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The program will feature works of Meyerbeer, Mokaupt, Barber, Jacobs, Dvorak, and Gould. The concert is open to the public without charge.

A Good Morning

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Fine Arts Staff

What can I say about Dylan's latest album, New Morning?

Should I invoke the old cliches – "new directions"...."innovative"...."a pioneer"...."the new Dylan"....?

Should I dutifully note what the city papers have called Dylan's new gospel-blues-jazz orientation and say that "If Dogs Run Free", with its Mose Allison and Swingle Singers type interjections, is the best cut on the album?

Of "Day of the Locusts", will I write that it's about Dylan's honorary degree at Princeton, and how he was glad to escape?

What conjectures should I make about the enigmatic photograph on the record jacket? Is Dylan content and happy, or does he aspire to future moral conflict, genius, and trend-setting?

How does Dylan personify stereotypes of love and hate, birth and death in his songs, as exemplified by "Father of Night" and "Three Angels"?

Has Dylan lost his ability to "rhyme the tick of time, the edge of pain, the what of sane", or has he demonstrated new ability with "New Morning"?

Should I discuss Dylan and how Love has affected his life, and how his forte is not necessarily protest songs, folk-rock, or country, but simple sentimental Love plaints as "The Man in Me" and "If Not For You"?

What can I say about Bob Dylan's New Morning that hasn't been said?

I can only say that when you've stopped running, when you've come down from your wordly drugs of power and friends, talk and dope, when everything else just doesn't sound right, when the sun is radiating warmth on a clear autumn day, and you want to be happy, but you can only be sad and acknowledge that you are but a Man; that's when you listen to Bob Dylan.

Poetry Afternoon Schedule

A poetry reading featuring Rosellen Brown, a National Council on the Arts Selection award winner for 1970, and Donald Junkins, director of the Master of Fine Arts Program in English at the University of Massachusetts, will be held Wednesday, Dec. 9, at 4 p.m. in Herter 321, on the University campus.

Rosellen Brown will read from her newly published award winning volume, "Some Deaths in the Delta," which she wrote after three years working with the civil rights movement in Mississippi in the 1960's. Donald Junkins will read from his new book, "And Sandpipers She Said," which was published last month, along with "Some Deaths in the Delta," by The University of Massachusetts Press.

Mr. Junkin's other poetry books include: "The Sunfish and the Partridge" (1965), the "Graves of Scotland Parish" (1969), and "Walden, 100 Years After Thoreau" (1969).

The University of Massachusetts Press, the Master of Fine Arts Program and the English department will co-sponsor the reading. A reception will follow. The program is open to the public without charge.

Men, Women Wanted For UT Production

WANTED: 7 men and 9 women willing to enter 17th century! Tryouts for William Wycherley's THE COUNTRY WIFE - a 17th century comedy of deception, affectation, and hypocrisy - will be held on Sunday afternoon, December 6, in 811-815 Campus Center of the Student Union.

(Call backs as needed December 7, 8). Interested students may sign up for an audition time at Miss Bednerik's office, 405 Machmer. Additional information concerning the audition format is available there. Since actors will need to learn period movement, rehearsals will begin the week of intersession, Monday, January 18th. Production dates are March 3,4,5,6.

Carnegie Report Urges Educational Reform

The Carnegie Commission on Higher Education recommended yesterday a series of sweeping reforms that would liberalize the traditional degree structure of American colleges and universities.

Included in the proposals, which were drawn up to give students greater flexibility in designing their college careers, were recommendations to reduce the period of undergraduate education from four years to three years and to extend greatly the opportunities for education throughout life after high school.

Also included were proposals to reduce both the large number of different degrees available and society's emphasis on certification of ability through formal higher education.

Such reforms, the report said would provide "more effective utilization" both of the time a person devotes to education and the limited resources of financially hard-pressed schools.

The commission estimated that the reforms would reduce the forecast student enrollment growth of three million by 1980 to two million, which would save the schools a total of $5-billion in capital construction costs during the nineteen-seventies.

The commission said the changes would also "be the most significant undertaken since the modern system of higher education emerged from the classical college beginning a century ago."

"Formal higher education would absorb less of the time of students and less of the resources of society and it would, at the same time, serve better both the interests of the students and the needs of society.

"We need more paths and more rates of progress to individual self-fulfillment and to service to society."

"We should," the report concluded, "neither over-invest the time of students nor the resources of society in higher education."

The special report, a 55-page document released by the commission in Berkeley, Calif., yesterday, is the fifth in a continuing series of interim reports issued pending completion of the commission's five-year study of American higher education in June, 1972.

Earlier reports have dealt with Federal financing, equal opportunities, community colleges and medical education. The next one--on Negro colleges--is expected early next year.

Financial Outlook Haunts Private Schools

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A Harvard University committee reported Thursday that "the entire private university system in the United States is in grave financial trouble".

"The outlook for the next few years is bleak," added the report of the 14 month old University Committee on Governance. "The long term prospect, though less certain, is also bleak."

The comments were part of a report, "Harvard and Money: A Memorandum on Issues and Choices", which discussed how the university should employ its $1 billion endowment and other financial resources.

No recommendations were made by the committee, headed by Dean John T. Dunlop of the School of Arts and Sciences. A spokesman for the university said the report was intended "to raise questions, not give answers."

The report said university expenses have risen six fold in the past 20 years and are expected to rise at a rate of 7.5 per cent per student per year into the foreseeable future.

The committee pointed out that currently each school at Harvard law, business, education, etc. is self supporting. If one school earns a surplus, that money may not be used to help a school that is running a deficit.

Without recommending centralized control over allocation of funds, the report said "nevertheless one can make a powerful case for a more centralized process of decision."

The report raised the question, "Should any part of Harvard's $1 billion portfolio be invested in socially beneficial activities that do not offer a financially attractive combination of yield, growth and risk?"

The question was not answered, except indirectly through statistics showing the steep increase of operating expenses expected in the future.

The report added, however, that "the university's obligations as a corporate citizen are not fully discharged by working toward excellence in its primary mission."

"Harvard has a corporate responsibility to take into account other facets of its economic and social impact on its neighborhood and community," the report said.

Suggestions have been made by some students, faculty and other persons that Harvard should use its endowment to support "socially beneficial" enterprises such as day care centers or minority small business venture capital firms.

About one third of Harvard's endowment is invested in bonds and about two thirds is in blue chip common stocks such as IBM $47 million, and Gulf Oil Corp. $15 million.

The report of the 35 member committee goes next to the Harvard Board of Overseers. Meanwhile, it is being circulated in the university community "in the hope that it will stimulate wide spread discussion," according to committee chairman Dunlop.

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Baseball honored its best at a plush Academy Awards type dinner last night as the annual winter meetings turned toward their conclusion.

Honored were the Player of the Year, Pitcher of the Year, top defensive player, Manager of the Year and the player who best typifies the game on and off the field.

The nominees for Player of the Year were catcher Johnny Bench of Cincinnati and first baseman Boog Powell of Baltimore, the most valuable players in the National and American leagues.

Also honored were Ted Williams, George Sisler and Bill Terry, baseball's only living 400 hitters, and Stan Musial, Hank Aaron and Willie Mays, the game's only living 3,000 hitmen.

Special awards also went to Sadaharu Oh, Japan's Player of the Year, and Toru Shoriki, president of the Tokyo Giants.

In other developments yesterday, American League Umpire Emmett Ashford, 56, announced his retirement and the New York Yankees and Chicago White Sox completed a minor league trade.

In the Yankee-White Sox trade, outfielder Bill Robinson moved from New York's AAA affiliate at Syracuse to Tucson, Ariz., of the Pacific Coast League for left-handed pitcher Barry Moore.

Robinson batted .258 with 13 homers and 43 RBI for Syracuse last season while Moore, a five year major league veteran, was 3-9 with a 5.30 ERA for Cleveland and Chicago.

Footballers Chose Co-Captains, Offensive, Defensive Stars Named

Co-captain John Hulecki

Co-captain Dennis Keating

The UMass football team has elected its co-captains for the 1971 season and they are defensive halfback Dennis Keating and offensive tight end John Hulecki.

Also selected on the Redman football team were its top defensive player of this past year and its top offensive player of '69. The defensive player was Dennis Collins, who won four Varsity M Club awards as defensive player of the week on those occasions. The offensive player was Bob Pena, who won three Varsity M Club awards for his offensive work. Each received his last citation for his outstanding job against Boston College in the season-ending game. Collins is a linebacker, Pena a guard.

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP)—Leroy Kelly-10 carries, zero yards gained.

That statistic tells a lot of the story behind Cleveland's 28-9 loss last Sunday to the Pittsburgh Steelers.

It tells even more about why the proud Browns, holders of the best record in the history of the National Football League, are struggling through their worst season in nearly a decade with a dismal 5-6 record.

"My problem has been mainly injuries," said Kelly, 28, who has been heralded as one of the NFL's all-time great running backs and who for three straight seasons ran for more than 1,000 yards.

He has been bothered this season with sprains of both ankles and strained hamstring and Achilles tendon.

NEW YORK (AP)—Jim Plunkett received the Hisman Trophy Thursday and announced he had one more goal as a college player-to lead Stanford to a Rose Bowl victory over Ohio State.

The 6 foot 3, 204 pound quarterback became the 36th player to receive the trophy, inscribed "to the year's outstanding college football player," at New York's Downtown Athletic Club, which annually presents the award in memory of its late athletic director, John Heisman.

Plunkett, who remained in school for another year though he was eligible to play pro football this season because his original class has graduated, said, "This helps make waiting that extra year worthwhile, and a victory in the Rose Bowl game would make it all perfect."

John Ott, president of the Downtown Athletic Club, estimated that winning the Heisman Trophy should be worth "at least $100,000" to Plunkett

Girls' Gymnastics Begins Tomorrow

The first meet of the Girl's Gymnastic Team will be held tomorrow at 7 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium.

This will be the first collegiate competition for two outstanding freshmen, Anne Burmeister from New Jersey and Margie Combs from Colorado. Other top of the team members include captain Linda Seikunas, Laurel Milch, Barbara Holt, Marina Rodriquez, Lynne Lamarche and Sue White.

Miss Combs and Miss Burmeister were chosen to compete in an international dual meet against Canada over Thanksgiving vacation. Miss Combs tied for first in vaulting and took 6th place honors in all-around. Miss Burmeister came in fourth in floor exercise and balance beam.

For the first time, girls gymnastic meets are charging admission. A student must have his student identification card or be prepared to pay $1.00.

Scrimmage For Gymnasts

The UMass gymnastics team will hold an intrasquad meet in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym this Sunday at 2 p.m. This meet will culminate months of pre-season practice as the Redmen prepare for what hopefully will be their most successful season ever. Spectators will be welcome.

In their first dual meet of the regular season, the Redmen will be hosted by Southern Connecticut State College on Saturday, Dec. 12.

WRESTLING OPENS—The UMass wrestling team opens its season tomorrow at 3 p.m. The Redman grapplers are coming off an impressive 16-4 campaign of a year ago. Full details are provided on page 24.

Puckmen Face Toughies UPenn & Vermont In Next Two Days

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Just how far the heralded UMass hockey juggernaut is going this season may be answered by the end of this weekend as Coach Jack Canniff's sextet faces hockey power-houses University of Pennsylvania and Vermont. The Penn tilt starts at 4 p.m. this afternoon at Orr Rink and the contest against UVM gets underway at 8 p.m. Saturday night.

UPenn comes into this game with an 0-2 record; included in the record is a 4-2 loss to UVM and an upset 6-5 defeat at the hands of Northeastern in which the NU goalie made an incredible total of 64 saves.

The Quakers also boast a sophomore winger, Bill MacDonnell from Downsview, Ontario, who was the number one Junior A draft pick out of Junior B last year, and an excellent defenseman, Pete McNamee from So. Witby, Ontario.

The Catamounts of UVM come into Saturday's encounter with a 2-1 slate, having beaten Penn 4-2 and Norwich 7-5 and having been routed by Providence 11-2.

Bemoaning the fact that the Lowell Tech affair didn't show him much, Canniff does not know what to expect from his squad this weekend. Noting that UPenn is in the tough E.C.A.C. Division I conference and that UVM is the defending Division II champ, he rates his team as underdogs in both encounters, and feels that good forechecking and aggressiveness are needed to score upset victories.

In a prelim to the varsity tilt Saturday night, the UMass freshman sextet will face a highly-touted B.C. squad with face-off at 6:15.

Starting in goal for the Little Redmen will be Chick Rheault who was the all E-Mass Tournament goalie in 1968, and whose style Canniff compared to that of Ken Dryden former Cornell great.

Banquet Honors Champion Harriers

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

The UMass cross country season officially came to an end last evening at the annual harrier banquet held in the Campus Center. Coach Ken O'Brien MC'd the affair which saw Ron Wayne, Tom Jasmin, Tom Swain, and the wrong way frosh walk away with all the awards.

Wayne received the Llewelyn Derby Award which annually goes to the most valuable Redman runner. O'Brien cited Wayne's achievements during this past season and pointed out that Wayne's performances were usually taken for granted by the team. O'Brien went on to say that it was always encouraging for the team to be going into a race knowing that Wayne would give them the number one finisher in the meet.

Jasmin and Swain were voted by the members of the team to be the co-captains for next year's UMass squad. Both sophomores, they added the depth in the front positions that helped carry the Redmen to the CanCon title and a second place in the New Englands.

The wrong way frosh were the recipients of the Gomer Award given annually to a member or members of the team who displayed some act that deserved the title of "Gomer." Up to the New Englands the race for the award was close, but Doug O'Connell, Rich Sevigny, and Joe Frontierro, left all opposition behind with their electrifying feat of taking a wrong turn at the New Englands only a tenth of a mile from the finish.

Jim Mulcahy, the president of the Varsity M club, was introduced to the runners by coach O'Brien and proceeded to describe the Varsity M and its functions. Mulcahy concluded by presenting Varsity M certificates of excellence in cross country to seniors Dick Bell, Leo Duart, Dave Eiben, Joel Fox, Larry Paulson, and Wayne.

The program concluded with a series of slides on the past season taken and shown by Chris Chambers, who will be running for the harriers next fall.

HARRIER HIGHLIGHTS - Wayne competed in the Nationals last week and finished 48th in the nation with a time of 29:21. In so doing, he beat 11 out of 16 runners who had defeated him at the IC4A's.

FROSH WIN—The UMass freshmen hoop team captured its second victory of the season last night at Dartmouth, 64-52.

Barr Promises Improvement As Wrestlers Open Year

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

"We'll be better than last year". This was the prediction of UMass wrestling coach Homer Barr as he assessed his team's chances in the upcoming campaign which opens tomorrow afternoon at home against Tufts. The freshmen have a meet at 1:45 and the varsity will follow at about 3:30.

Normally this kind of prediction would seem to be the usual optimism expressed by a coach to stimulate interest in the team, but considering the wrestlers are coming off a 16-4 record, best in UMass history, and also that a grand total of zero members have graduated, it appears that the wrestlers will add their contribution to what could be the most successful winter in UMass sports history.

Barr has the enviable task of trying to use twenty top notch wrestlers in only ten weight classes and the result has prompted some very stiff competition and some unexpected upsets.

The Redmen boast two New England champions on this years' squad and five other place winners from last years tournament, but only three will start for the team tomorrow. Sheldon Goldberg, who won the title at 134 last year, will open the season for the Redmen at 142. Dave Reynolds finished second in the 126 division and will be out to improve on that mark this season. Clay Jester finished third in the 142 lb. class, but has moved up to 150 for the season's opener.

Defending N.E. champ Tom Young will be watching from the sidelines after being knocked off by Kent Mignocci in the wrestle-offs this week. Jim Godkin and George Zguris will also have to be spectators because neither has reached his best weight class as of yet.

The only other holdovers from last year's record-breaking squad who will be starting are Tom Andrews at 177 and Chris Hodson at unlimited. There will be newcomers in the other four weight classes. Dave Amato will open at 118. Amato is a transfer student from Keystone Junior College and brings with him the credentials of being both Rhode Island state and New England champion in high school.

Junior Barry Godowsky, who saw little action last season has nailed down the 134 lb. class. Brian Urquhart has returned after sitting out last season due to illness and has swept to the top in the 158 lb. division. Sophomores Ed Carlson and frosh Mike Krestich are still contending for the 190 lb. class. Carlsson was N.E. champ last year and Krestich is making a strong bid to win a varsity spot in his first year.

also plenty of depth. The team is composed of the members of both the 167-'68.

The Redmen appear to be strong at every weight class and there is also plenty of depth. The team is composed of the members of both the '67-'68 and '68-'69 New England freshman champions along with some frosh from last year and some transfers. The schedule is tougher this year with the addition of Yale, West Chester State and NYU, and the team will have to come up with an excellent effort to top last years' mark.

Also on the schedule are perennial New England champion Springfield; Rhode Island, Connecticut, Central Conn., Dartmouth, WPI, MIT, BC, Harvard, Coast Guard and Amherst. Barr expects West Chester State to offer the stiffest competition and also expects tough meets from Springfield, Yale and NYU.

Tufts doesn't appear to be too stiff an opponent for the Redmen and this pleases Barr. "I like to see the type of pre-season competition that we have had, but it also scares me. There have been a few surprises and a few disappointments and I just hope we are as good as I think we are."

The Redmen haven't had any pre-season scrimmages as a team, and Barr is anxious to see the team in action. The Redmen topped Tufts, 36-6, last year, and the Jumbos don't appear to be any stronger. The team does have two outstanding wrestlers in 177 lb. Steve Cary and 190 lb. Gary Scalia. Andrewes and either Carlsson or Krestich will have their hands full with these two.

118-Amato edged out two year veteran Nick DiDomenico in the wrestle-off and may be hard to displace. DiDomenico enters his senior year with a 24-11 dual meet record.

126-Right now Reynolds seems to have the class all to himself, but there is competition from soph Tom Hayward and maybe Godowsky if there is a shift in weight classes.

134-Barr is hoping that Goldberg will eventually get down to this class, but right now it belongs to sophomore Godowsky and transfer Dick Beauchine, who has been impressive but is currently sick.

142-Goldberg will probably vacate this slot and Jester will probably move down a class to take his place. Junior Steve Jones may also see action after he recovers from an injury. Versatile senior Phil Davis can be used anywhere from 126-142, but is also on the injured list.

157-Urquhart is the lone man at this class right now, but Barr expects Godkin to wrestle at this weight in the future to give Urguhart some competition.

167-Mignocci has been very strong in pre-season and has the edge on Young, who has a two-year record of 22-5-2.

177-Andrewes enters his senior year with an 18-3-2 record and will start ahead of senior Bob Willman.

190-Both Carlsson and Krestich have been impressive, but may have to fight off a challenge from senior Zguris as the season goes on. Zguris has been first and second in New England in the last two years with a 14-10-1 record and will probably move down from the unlimited class.

Barr is trying to coach the team for one match at a time, but the February 2nd meeting with Springfield is on everyone's mind. The Chiefs have dominated New England wrestling for 22 years and Barr hopes this will be the year of the Redmen. He expressed this clearly when commenting on the goals of the team, "We're shooting for the moon, and the moon is Springfield."

Redman Hoopsters Seek Second Win, In Catamount Country

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

After an 8-16 season and with only four veterans returning, the Vermont basketball team looks to be in for a long, long season. Considering that the Catamounts have lost their most prolific scorer, Frank Martiniuk, and that they play five of their first six games on the road, it may turn out to be a rebuilding year. Their only home game in this stretch is Saturday night at 8 p.m. against UMass.

Coach Art Loche looks at the situation as a challenge. Due to the inexperience of the squad, the Vermont mentor will be stressing fundamentals and UMass will probably be seeing nothing fancy from the Catamount five. Loche will be using a very controlled type of attack. "We will be working for that good percentage shot - it simply will be a more disciplined offense."

Leading the returnees is senior captain Tom Clay, a 6'2 forward. Clay is a good driver and possesses a fine shot from the corner. Also starting up front for the Catamounts will be veterans Rich Trela at forward, and Mark Miller at center. The 6'6 Miller is an excellent rebounder and scores most of his points on easy layups underneath.

Cartoon by Fred Rosenthal.

In the backcourt Loche will go with Ray Ortiz and Jim Ducey. Ortiz, a 5'11 junior, is described by Loche as "one of the best shooters I have ever coached at Vermont, and we'll be counting on his jumpers from the outside."

Ducey will act as the team's playmaker, a position which the coach feels is the key to the "more disciplined offense." He will be the only sophomore starting on the team.

Among the leading substitutes for the Catamounts are juniors John Deibert, Todd Schill and Neil Hermann. Deibert was impressive in early workouts and at 6'7 could see a lot of action.

As well as operating in a strict fundamental offense, Coach Loche will probably mainly rely on a zone defense although he is likely to use some man-to-man against the Redmen.

With so many things going against him, Loche is still envisioning a good year. "We'll just have to take one at a time. Undoubtedly, we'll be underdogs in most of our games, but we're eyeing a winning season. With all this youth, it's like starting a new program."

As far as the Redmen are concerned, Coach Jack Leaman will likely go with the same starting five that he sent in the team's opening win against St. Anselm's. That would mean that Mike Pagliara and John Betancourt will be in the backcourt with Chris Coffin and co-captain Ken Mathias and Julius Erving up front. The way the game shapes up, most of the UMass squad will probably see action as UMass should not be severely tested.

BASELINE BANTER - Vermont has played two contests thus far, losing its opener to Dartmouth and James Brown, 87-66. Although winning by 21 points, the Big Green led by only four at halftime. The Catamounts second contest was played last night against Maine up at Orono...

Western Imperialism Denounced by Mrs. Dubois

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

The struggle against racist imperialism in Palestine and Africa was the topic of heated discussion at a coffee hour for Mrs. Shirley Graham Dubois Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Dubois, widow of Dr. W.E.B. Dubois, attacked the aggressiveness of Western philosophy and denounced Great Britain for continuing to try to build an empire around the world.

"We hear today how Zionists go to empty desert lands and develop them but the lands are not empty, not all desert, and they haven't made them flower, and when they did it was at expense to the people, who were driven out" said Mrs. Dubois.

She compared the Palestinians' situation to that of the American Indians, and to the Jews under Hitler, but she said there was one special difference.

"Palestine was colonized in an era of decolonization, while all the others were overtaken in a period of colonization," she explained.

If the development of history from one hundred years ago affects us, certainly Palestine, which happened so recently, should, too, Mrs. Dubois claimed. But what is the UN for she asked. What do they mean and what have they meant?

"I was taken into a refugee camp and I saw the suffering of the Palestinian people, the deprivation and poverty of these camps," she said, implying a non-fulfillment of duty on the part of the UN.

Explaining the goal of Palestinian commandos Mrs. Dubois quoted them as saying "We shall establish a non-sectarian democratic free state where Jew, Moslem, and Christian can live together, work together with discrimination toward none and justice toward everyone in the state."

There is, however, a difference of opinion on how to reach this goal, she added.

"There will be no peace in the Middle East until the Palestinian people have justice" was her prophesizing remark on the situation.

When and how long the struggle will be Mrs. Dubois said she doesn't know.

"We talk in this world about peace," she continued "Yes, I want peace, my husband wanted peace, and not just in Africa, but everywhere. But, I'm not interested in peace unless there is justice too," she concluded.

Involved debate between Mrs. Dubois and members of the audience followed her informal lecture and continued for some time during the coffee hour.

Official Installation For Wood This Week

Robert C. Wood will be installed as the 17th President of UMass -- and the first President of the new three campus system -- this Wednesday, in Boston.

The installation will take place at the Statler-Hilton, adjoining the Boston campus of the University, at 10:30 a.m.

Joseph P. Healey, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, will administer the oath of office. In a departure from more traditional inaugurals, there will be no academic procession, and President Wood will give the only address.

Following the installation, President Wood will participate in a series of day-long events at the Boston, Worcester and Amherst campuses.

These include:

Boston-Reception and luncheon at the Statler-Hilton. Francis L. Broderick, Chancellor UMass Boston, will host the luncheon program, which will examine the role of an urban university in the Seventies.

Worcester-President Wood will meet with UMass Medical School Dean, Lamar Soutter, faculty, students and community leaders, at the Worcester Foundation Auditorium. A special program will focus on the unique role of the University Medical School.

Amherst-In the evening, President Wood will join Chancellor Oswald Tippo and the UMass-Amherst academic community at the Lincoln Campus Center Auditorium. Student and faculty representatives will make brief welcoming remarks after which President Wood will respond concerning problems and prospects facing higher education.

The decision to forego the traditional academic exercise of presidential inaugurations is in keeping with society's increasing emphasis on substance rather than circumstance. President Wood views the installation as "an opportunity to focus on the issues which confront a vigorous statewide university. Specifically, the intent is to stress the role of each campus in serving the Massachusetts community, as it seeks further scholastic achievement."

Dr. Wood was named President of the University last May 13. He succeeded John W. Lederle, who has been President for the past 10 years.

In addition to his official duties, Dr. Wood is almost alone among university presidents in teaching a regular undergraduate course. He commutes weekly to the Amherst campus where he teaches a course titled "Development of National Urban Policy." In subsequent semesters he plans to teach on the Boston and Worcester campuses.

Before coming to UMass, Dr. Wood was Director of the Joint Center for Urban Studies at MIT and Harvard; head of the Department of Political Science at MIT; and Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority.

Dr. Wood served as Under Secretary, and later as Secretary, of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development from 1966 to 1969, during the Johnson Administration.

A recognized authority in the field of metropolitan politics and government Dr. Wood is the author of a pioneering study in 1958 on Suburbia: Its People and their Politics, and co-author of a widely-used college textbook, Politics and Government in the United States, published in 1965.

Dissatisfaction With DC Service Prompts Student Boycott

By WILLIAM LONGRIDGE
Staff Reporter

For the first time in their history, Southwest Area students may have a choice as to where they eat their meals. If Southwest Assembly bill #71-A19 (dealing with mandatory board) is successful, and Southwest students cooperate, this choice is insured.

The bill, which was hammered out by Jesse O'Leary, Washington - Lower Head of Residence, various other Southwest Heads of Residence, and Southwest Area Assemblymen; states briefly, that the University is imposing a severe financial hardship on students in Southwest by forcing all residents to pay for high priced, starchy food which after preparation is unappetizing, and disregards the dietary needs of the Southwest students.

The Southwest Assemblymen plan to tell all appropriate administrative personnel that the mandatory board can no longer be tolerated, confer with the Student Senate Lawyer about the legality of the mandatory board plan, and lastly, support the withholding of that portion of the student bill which equals the mandatory board charge until serious proposals for alleviation of the problem can be arrived at.

Southwest Assembly members plan to begin distributing form - letters to all Southwest students today which explain the boycott situation and urge all students to support it. Copies of these letters will also be sent to the parents of students, urging them to withhold payment of next semesters board fee. The letter states health and economic reasons as criteria for parents to withhold the money for the mandatory board plan.

As the student goes to dinner tonight, he or she will see a table set up with various Southwest Assemblymen seated at it. Should you have any questions as to possible repercussions of the boycott, other possibilities for arranging meal accommodations, or why the boycott is being organized, these people will be able to issue information and answer any questions you might have.

Some random possibilities which have been suggested as alternatives to the mandatory meal ticket. They are: 1.) a la carte meal ticket 2.) experimental kitchens in utility rooms 3.) taking meals at restaurants 4.) and of course the present system - if it appeals to you.

The Southwest Assembly urges all students to come together and eliminate the mandatory meal ticket. Obviously, the more students that participate in the boycott the more effective it will be. Should you want information on the boycott, or if you can help in any way, please call 5-1552.

Americans Seek Foreign Aid

WASHINGTON - Leaders of a Detroit welfare reform group have said they are seeking foreign aid from the Soviet Union and other countries for some of America's poor.

The Rev. Norman P. Thomas, chairman of Citizens for Welfare Reform, and Mrs. Dorothy Payne, vice chairman, said they felt compelled to make the request because the authorities in Michigan and the United States have not been responsive to their calls for help in clothing poor children in Detroit.

Father Thomas, a Roman Catholic priest, said his organization hoped to obtain aid from the Soviet Union, Sweden, Canada, Britain and other countries.

$25,000 Rejected

Five-College Refuses Rockefeller Support

by DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

Members of a Interim Planning Committee composed of Five College Students and faculty yesterday rejected an offer of $25,000 by John D. Rockefeller III to support a student-run environmental project on the Connecticut River Valley.

In a statement read by Hampshire College President Franklin Patterson, the Committee said, "We cannot accept this grant at this date....there are certain serious questions that must be considered."

The Committee has not ruled out the possibility of accepting the grant but apparently is seeking an explanation by Rockefeller of some of his business interests.

The grant was made by Rockefeller as part of his attempts to close the gap between youth and the "Establishment." Over the past two years a study supported by Rockefeller has been involved in interviewing students and businessmen all over the country. From the results of the study Rockefeller has concluded that youth and the establishment both wish a reconciliation and the grant to the Five Colleges is his way of helping to achieve it.

Speaking before a jam-packed auditorium at Hampshire College yesterday afternoon, Rockefeller said, "In my judgement, the fundamental issue (between youth and the establishment) is still the relative lack of response by the Establishment to the constructive potential of the young."

He added that his study shows that, "There exists a solid basis for cooperative effort between young people and the Establishment. Cooperation is wanted by both groups. Both believe that it is urgently needed."

The grant was intended to subsidize a Five College student-run group which would identify a specific environmental problem in the area and attempt to solve it. The direction that the project would take would rest in student hands.

Reacting to the announcement by Paterson, Rockefeller said, "I think you were all right to turn it down. I think if the idea is going to be meaningful, have validity, it must be yours, you must put it together. I am pleased at your decision, but the door is still open if you want to come back."

Rockefeller said that he would come to Hampshire again in the near future to attempt to resolve the impasse.

Free Univ. "Grapevine" Provides Endless Info

By WALTER SOBZAK
Staff Reporter

In an attempt to initiate a coordinating network for the several innovative groups and individuals on campus, Free University City has established a "Grapevine" for persons interested in supplying or obtaining virtually any kind of information.

According to a spokesman, this system will provide "a network for people to get in touch with each other". It will attempt, for example, to find out about courses and professors in this school and in the five college area, to find out about modular credits from the School of Education, and to take courses not for credit, but for education."

In order for "Grapevine" to get under way, it is necessary for interested persons and groups to get involved. Groups like Project 10, Clearinghouse, and dorms with special programs are being asked to cooperate.

Individuals wishing to provide any kind of information, and those desiring information from University workshops to flute lessons to drugs, should call "Grapevine" at 545-0066. The office is located at Free University City in the old Bookstore, next to the Hatch.

Vermont Internship Program Offered

Announcements have been received in the Placement Office concerning academic year and summer internships at the Vermont Environmental Center, Inc., Ripton, Vermont.

The academic year internship is open to graduate and advanced undergraduate students interested in environmental studies or environmental education, and approval must be obtained for off-campus study as an accepted part of the student's formal program.

Summer internships are also open to graduate and advanced undergraduate students interested in environmental studies.

Applications for summer internships should be received by the Center before April first. Further information concerning these internships may be found in the Placement Office at 239 Whitmore Administration Building.

A rash of bomb scares occurred last Thursday night in Southwest. According to Campus police, the series began in JQA at 2:05 a.m., then to Patterson at 2:10 a.m. Residents in JQA were again stirred at 3:37 a.m. and Patterson residents were awakened at 4:13 a.m.

Patterson residents taking refuge in the lobby of JA during their second scare were forced to leave when an alarm sounded in that dorm at 4:21 a.m.

Saturday afternoon two bomb scares caused Patterson to evacuate again. This time they occurred at 1:03 p.m. and 6:28 p.m.

Guerrilla Troupe Finds Things Rocky

By David Williams
Tuesday Issue Editor

As far as demonstrations go, it was at least well-rehearsed. But this is their second appearance, and like the song says, "Second verse, same as the first."

It's nothing but enjoyable though. Their shows are witty, quick, well-timed, and, to coin a new phrase, "half-wittedly relevant." I say only "half-wittedly" because that's about what it is. It's funny and makes sense to a point, but somewhere along the line the entire allegory breaks down and buffoonery takes over.

But that might be the desired effect.

Yesterday before I went in and watched John D. Rockefeller III outsmart all those people who asked him all those supposedly profound questions that he so glibly avoided answering, I stood and watched our latest local talent, John and His Merry Troupe.

When I got in to watch Rockefeller I almost expected to see him come out on stage and say "Right on, brothers and sisters" and roll his eyeballs around while fingering a dollar bill.

But he didn't. He came out and read a long, boring speech.

He came across perhaps a little too strongly for some there. The monotony of J.D.'s voice was occasionally interrupted by a snide comment from a member of the audience. And everyone would laugh appropriately, "Ha-ha isn't he a pig." Is he?

They refused his money. No one actually said, "J.D., you're a capitalist pig and we won't take your money being the principled people that we are." no one came right and said it, but they couldn't have inferred it much better if they had tried.

They want several "serious questions" answered before they'll touch his dirty check. No one said what the questions are but it isn't hard to guess that they will focus on any remote connections J.D. has with no. 1; the war, no. 2; poverty (how do you justify a personal fortune in these times, ad nauseam) and no. 3; pollution.

Only when good old Rocky beats his breast and begs forgiveness; only when he humbles himself; does it seem likely, to me at least, that some people who are right now cutting off their noses to spite their faces going to accept his freely offered help.

Final Exam Correction

The times stated for final exams in Friday's Collegian should have been listed as 8:00 am, 10:30 am, 1:30 pm, and 4:00 pm. Also under the Saturday column there were two 15's listed; the second 15 should have been 16.

N.J. Refinery Burns In Suspected Sabotage

LINDEN, N.J. (AP) - City officials said yesterday they thought saboteurs touched off the giant oil refinery explosion that injured 29 persons and caused damage in the millions in a crowded urban area Saturday night.

An anonymous telephone caller told police beforehand that the refinery would "Burn, baby, burn," and afterward a caller told a New York radio station that a revolutionary group was responsible.

The FBI and state police entered the case and the investigation was proceeding under the assumption that sabotage was involved at the huge refinery that had been the cornerstone of the Standard Oil empire founded by the late John D. Rockefeller.

"In the opinion of the commanders of the police department and in my own opinion, we feel this was a deliberate act of sabotage," Mayor John Gregorio said.

Officials of Humble Oil & Refining Co., the Standard successor which operates the Esso refinery, said equipment malfunction was also a possibility.

Workmen apparently had no indication of trouble prior to the explosion, in a basic refining unit which feeds other parts of the plant. Hydrogen under high pressure reportedly was among the volatile substances in that unit.

A spokesman said it would take someone with some knowledge of refining to sabotage the plant effectively "unless he was very lucky."

Police said several leads were being checked.

Six refinery employees were hospitalized but it was believed that most of the others injured were not hurt seriously.

Residents of the area were jolted severely. One, Mike Sweeney, 22, said he felt heat a mile and a half away from the 1,500 acre refinery and described the sight as a great "fireball in the sky."

Flames shot 1,000 feet in the air. Windows were broken in Linden, Elizabeth, Staten Island and dozens of nearby communities and the shock was felt within a 40 mile radius.

Three Humble office buildings, including the refinery headquarters, were heavily damaged.

Linden Mayor John Gregario said that refinery security officers were notified at once after a call was received at police headquarters.

The caller said, "Listen good. I'm going to tell you once. Esso was lucky last week. Get it right the first time, the refinery is gonna burn, baby, burn. This time they're gonna get it good. Get that, pig."

The call was received at 9:21 p.m. The explosion came at 11:01.

After the blast, a caller told station WINS in New York that a group called the United Socialist Revolutionary Front had set off three incendiary devices at the refinery, one of the largest in the United States.

About 700 firemen battled flames throughout the night. The fire finally burned itself out about dawn Sunday.

Humble officials said the explosion occurred in a primary refining unit, where crude oil is first separated into gasoline, oil and other basic components. These basic products move onto other units for further refining into finished products.

Four units occupying about a square block in the center of the refinery grounds were damaged and the refinery was shut down except for some subsidiary operations.

About 200 men were at work at the time, but most of them were in an explosion proof concrete bunker which houses the main control operations. The refinery, built originally in 1909 when Rockefeller first began expanding his oil operations, has been modernized in recent years and operations now are controlled by computer.

The explosion brought on a traffic jam on the Turnpike and Interstate 278, as well as local roads. Hundreds of curious residents flocked to watch the flames, which burned throughout the night.

"It was the worst explosion I've ever heard, louder than a bomb," said a resident of Staten Island. In a Linden theater, patrons were evacuated when ceiling plaster fell. They went outside to see the sky "lit up bright orange."

48-Hour Traffic Jam Possible By 1975

BOSTON (AP) - Registrar of Motor Vehicles Richard E. McLaughlin last night said drivers themselves will demand limiting vehicles within the cities when they "experience traffic jams that prevent them from getting home the same day."

McLaughlin predicted that by 1975, drivers on metropolitan Boston highways could experience traffic jams up to 48 hours in duration.

If placed bumper to bumper, the 2.6 million registered cars in Massachusetts would almost be 10,000 miles long, McLaughlin said, adding there was only 27,000 miles of public way in the state.

"When sitting in your car," McLaughlin said, "your share of the highway is one space in front and a compact space behind."

Cambodians Resent Viet Pressure

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)-A Cambodian general said yesterday that if his forces had enough weapons they would be better off without help from the South Vietnamese army.

"South Vietnamese troops rape, they destroy houses, they steal, they loot pagodas and they beat the Buddhist monks," said Brig. Gen. Sostene Fernandez.

He is the commander of 30,000 Cambodian troops in Military Region 2, south and southwest of Phnom Penh.

Burger Defends Court Against Crime Charges

WASHINGTON (AP)—Chief Justice Warren E. Burger rejected yesterday the view that Supreme Court rulings are a lone responsible for a rising crime rate.

"If something is found to be permitted, then it's more likely to be done," Burger said.

But to suggest that court rulings are alone the cause of an increase in crime is an extreme point of view, he declared.

The other extreme, Burger said, is to say "what courts do has nothing whatever to do with crime and crime rates."

Burger made his assessment in a copyrighted interview in the magazine U.S. News & World Report.

Burger defended the use of growing legal aid for the poor to overcome the feeling "of some people that there is one code of justice for the rich and another one for the poor."

The chief justice said there are "not two systems in the conscious sense," but in the financial resources of litigants.

Much of the interview was devoted to Burger's often stated contention that the U.S. system of justice is headed for a breakdown unless court loads are lightened.

Burger said that 1,000 cases were filed before the Supreme Court in 1940 and 4,400 this year and "we now project 7,182 in 1980."

"Before that-long before that-the work of the Supreme Court of the United States will either break down or it will deteriorate in quality so that its historic role will not be performed adequately," he asserted.

Kennedy, Byrd Vie For No. 2 Senate Job

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Policical Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -Sen. Edward M. Kennedy claims he has the votes for re election as the Senate's No. 2 Democratic leader- and says a challenge by West Virginia's Robert C. Byrd could be divisive in a party seeking to avoid ideological discord.

But Byrd said neither he nor Kennedy now has enough committed votes to win election as Senate Democratic whip. He said he has not decided whether to run.

The generally conservative Byrd, who now is third man in the leadership hierarchy as secretary of the Senate Democratic conference, said he does not view the job of whip as one involving ideology.

A majority of the 55 Democratic senators who will serve in the 92nd Congress will choose party leaders when the new Congress convenes, probably on Jan. 20.

"We've got the votes," Kennedy said in an interview. He did not disclose his exact advance count.

Byrd said he will continue talking with other senators before deciding whether to challenge.

If he does, and Kennedy wins, the Massachusetts senator and his allies are virtually certain to retort with a challenge to Byrd's re-election as secretary.

Sources close to Kennedy have indicated the rival entry might be Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina, a Southerner with a reputation as a moderate.

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D Hawaii, is another potential choice to challenge Byrd. Sen. Frank E. Moss, D. Utah, has indicated he will seek the No. 3 spot if Byrd tries to move up the ladder in January.

Kennedy said that during a new term as whip, he would hope to serve as a spokesman for Democrats on matters of policy.

And he said there is concern among some Democrats - including conservatives as well as more liberal members-at the prospect of an ideological struggle over party positions in the Senate.

B.C. Raises Tuition

NEWTON, Mass. AP - The board of directors of Boston College announced yesterday a weekend vote to increase tuition for all undergraduate schools by $260 and place a general temporary freeze on all faculty and administration salaries.

The decision increases tuition for undergraduates to $2,500 a year.

The Rev. W. Seavey Joyce, S.J., the college president, said in letters to parents of students that the decision was arrived at "after careful consideration of every factor, the most important being the financial position of Boston College. Increased revenue is absolutely necessary if we are to continue to provide the high quality of education of which we are presently so proud."

The directors' announcement said BostonCollege was one of 11 American universities and colleges listed by the Carnegic Commission on Higher Education as being in financial difficulty.

Divorce Bill Passed By Italy's Parliament

ROME (AP) - Parliament's landmark approval of divorce shows how far modern Italy has moved away from the direct influence of the Roman Catholic Church.

Divorce was unthinkable as recently as five years ago, when the bill to legalize it was introduced. For 100 years before that 10 attempts to legalize divorce failed to reach even the debating stage.

As recently as the 1950s, few newspapers favored divorce, or, for that matter, anything that would displease the Vatican.

Against this background, the Church underestimated the challenge. After the divorce bill was voted into law Tuesday, a well placed Vatican theologian confided with grim dissapointment: "We took the entire matter too lightly. When we woke up to what was happening, it was too late."

The complacency could be understood, because Vatican influence had been enormous.

Though the papacy's rule over Italian property ended a century ago, the Vatican's financial holdings were big enough to affect the economy. Bishops' exhortations to voters helped block a Communist victory at the polls after Worl dd War II.

The Vatican's injunctions on morals - what films Italians could see, what books they could read - were the rule of the land.

The 1962 65 Ecumenical Council called by Pope John XXIII loosened the Vatican's grip. The post-council Church emphasized non-interference in state affairs. Some Italian papers and politicians came to regard Pope Paul's denunciations of the divorce bill as interference, and said so.

The thaw in the cold war and the papacy's own open view of dialogue with Communists wrought changes in politics. The dominant Christian Democrats made room for Marxist Socialists in the government, an alliance still in force. The Church backed Christian Democrats developed their own left wing. They offered no resistance when allies in the government and other parties moved to force the Vatican to pay taxes on its Italian investments.

The Christian Democrats fought divorce to the bitter end, but did not resort to the ultimate weapon of forcing a crisis with their government partners.

In Church state attitudes, the Rome daily Il Messagero says, "The country has moved ahead on its own, even faster than its leadership."

The Socialist vice premier Francesco de Martino, speaks of "a victory for democracy." Divorce advocates hope to knock down other targets. Among them are the 1929 Church state concordat, and the Italian law that bans fostering of artificial birth control.

Concern For Law Expressed By Pope

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI expressed gratitude to God Sunday for his safe return from a journey that was marred by what he called an "insane" attempt to assassinate him. But he said he felt bitterness at Italy's enactment of a divorce law in his absence.

The Pope's denunciation of the divorce law approved by the Italian parliament Dec. 1 came toward the end of his five minute address.

Scattered applause ripped through the immense crowd when he said: "We cannot hide our bitterness for the law which intends to introduce divorce also in Italy....an event which for many reasons we consider unhappy."

A half hour before the Pope's noon appearance, a motorcade of divorce advocates swung near the St. Peter's crowd with signs reading: "Divorce: a defeat for the clerics."

Police ordered all demonstrators to keep far away from the square, however, and by the time the Pope appeared the only one was an elderly man, lost in the crowd, wearing a white sweatshirt on which the words had been printed: "Divorce referendum." This referred to a campaign by militant Roman Catholics to repeal the law in a nationwide vote of the people.

The Pope made no mention of a referendum. But some Vatican observers thought it curious that he would say the law "intends to introduce" divorce, since the legislation has been signed by President Giuseppe Saragat and published in the official gazette.

Some saw in the Pope's words a hint that he did not consider the action final. In addition to a referendum, the divorce law could be squashed by Italy's Supreme Court, which could rule it unconstitutional in accordance with the Vatican argument that the law violates the 1929 church state concordat.

The PO

The Pope stressed the distinction between church and state by saying: "Never forget that you are Catholics in ..... a free and strong country which has the providential fate to be host to the distinct and independent Apostolic See."

18-Yr-Olds May Hold Mass Office

BOSTON (AP) - Any registered voter age 18 or over is eligible to hold state office under an opinion issued by the Massachusetts Attorney General, Robert H. Quinn.

Mr. Quinn issued the opinion Thursday on request of Secretary of State John F.X. Davoren.

He said persons would not be eligible at 18 for the United States Senate or House of Representatives and also ruled that "a person must be able to read and write in order to hold public office."

Irish Radicals Defy Govt. With Monument Explosion

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) - A 50 foot monument commemorating a visit by King George IV of England to Ireland in the 18th century was blown up yesterday in what was seen as a sign of defiance against the Irish government.

Prime Minister Jack Lynch stubbornly resisted pressure to give details behind his assumption of the power to intern anyone without charge or trial to combat what he called a kidnap and kill conspiracy against leading politicians and probably foreign diplomats.

Under heavy guard, Lynch appeared at a dinner in Dublin Saturday night and told newsmen he would make a statement in the Fail parliament on Wednesday - "but I am not going to say anything more than I have said."

The Sinn Fein, political wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, began making plans to defy the government's crack down and challenged Lynch to explain his motives.

Tomas McGiolla, president of Sinn Fein who spent 20 months in the republic's main internment camp in The Curragh, County Kildare, during the government's campaign against the IRA in the 1950s, said: "We are afraid that we will probably be the first to go if special powers are used. We won't go underground and we will continue in our normal way.

"We are a legal political body - not political gangsters."

Sinn Fein and the IRA are pledged to fight for the unification of Ireland - by force if necessary.

The policy of Lynch, like all Irish politicians, is for unification but he insists it must come about peacefully.

Life went on normally yesterday in Dublin and the rest of the republic but there was a sense of intrigue that excites the Irish.

The big internment camp in Kildare, next to the fashionable Curragh horse race track, is being prepared to accept internees. The camp consists of huts surrounded by stockades, trenches and barbed wire. In the 1950s, when the government outlawed the IRA and cracked down on it, about 300 men were held there at various times.

Sinn Fein chief McGiolla, who denounced the government's assumption of emergency powers as "obviously a political move," said: "We will mobilize public opinion against this. But we intend to fight it on the political front."

The government insists no one has been formally arrested or interned yet.

Students Pay To Keep Prof

WESTCHESTER, Pa., (AP)-Students at West Chester State College didn't like it last spring when the school dismissed Dr. Michael Kay, a history instructor. So they decided to pay him a salary themselves.

Using money from a student dance, a rock concert, a bake sale and contributions, they started a fellowship. They hope to pay Dr. Kay $12,500 a year to keep him around.

West Chester students set up the Kay Fellowship Fund last April after a college evaluation committee recommended that Dr. Kay's contract not be renewed. It did not specify why.

Under terms of the fellowship, the 42-year-old Australian born instructor will hold at least four lectures at or near the school and on other area college campuses and also teach at least one course at a free university near the campus.

Dr. Kay predicted the action will prompt students at other colleges to help fund professors who are dismissed because of their political views.

The American Association of University Professors has recommended that West Chester reinstate Dr. Kay, who describes himself as a philosophical radical.

U.S. Colleges Financial Situation Bordering On "Depression" For Many

America's colleges and universities are in the worst financial crisis in the country's history, the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education said recently.

Two-thirds of them face fiscal problems "serious enough to be called a depression" is the conclusion of a major nationwide study just released.

Only 800 of the country's 2,340 institutions of higher education, with just 23 per cent of the total college enrollment, are not yet in trouble.

The study, entitled "The New Depression in Higher Education, was based on a detailed analysis of the financial condition of 41 selected and varied institutions, including Harvard and Boston College, with the results projected to the rest

Harvard was in the largest group considered "heading for financial trouble" while Boston College was rated in the smaller category of already "in financial touble."

No other New England institutions were involved in the survey.

Harvard was joined in the "headed for financial trouble" grouping by such long-established and tax-supported state universities as Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri and Oregon.

FISCALLY "in trouble" Boston College is rated in crisis along with Stanford, the University of California at Berkeley, Tulane, New York University and St. Louis University.

The study , headed by Dr. Earl F. Cheit, a professor at Berkeley, showed that this "in trouble" category included about 540 institutions enrolling 21 per cent of all college students.

Commenting on the report, Harvard President Nathan M. Pusey called the situation "the most serious threat to higher education of all kinds - public and private - the country has experienced in many a decade."

Harvard ran a deficit last year, for the first time in 15 years, of $760,000. For this year, Dean John T. Dunlop of the faculty of Arts and Sciences projects a deficit of $1.5 million, which he terms "unacceptable."

IT IS EXPECTED that cutbacks will come in new appointments and visiting professorships, but the greatest fear is that the fiscal squeeze will affect numbers and amounts of scholarships awarded.

Boston College already has had budget deficits of $4.6 million for two years and is facing another of $1.9 million. Tuition will rise again next year and salaries will be frozen.

A weeks-long student strike at BC last spring over an announced $500 tuition increase was only halted when the increase was cut to $240. Now, however, another $260 boost is in the offing.

In the study, an institution was rated "in financial difficulty" if because of its financial condition it had to cut back services that it regarded as important parts of its program.

SATF Budget Guidelines

The following guidelines, set by the Student Senate Budgets Committee, are to be followed by all RSO's, Class Governments, etc., in drawing up their group's budget:

1. The prime consideration of the Committee in reviewing each individual request will be based on whether the organization fulfills a useful role to the undergraduates of the University and whether it really requires the funds it is seeking.
2. Non-funding of any religious organization or any organization which is in any way affiliated with a religious organization.
3. Non-funding of any organization that is involved in blatant political activity (Under the Board of Trustees ruling, this means any organization which endorses candidates or works for the election of any candidate; organizations which are opposed to certain policies but do not endorse candidates are not included under this restriction)
4. Non-funding of salaries and/or compensation for undergraduates who hold positions in any organization (either elected or appointed)
5. Non-funding of conferences or overnight off campus trips (off-campus conferences that is).
6. Non-funding of weekend meals for undergraduates who are off-campus because of duties connected with your organization.
7. Compensation for weekday meals missed for undergraduates who are off-campus because of duties connected with your organization at the current Dining Commons rate of $4.45/day for all three meals.
8. Non-funding of administrative personnel unless students are

The deadline for submitting request for hearings is February 1st. All organizations are urged to contact the Chairman for dates as early as possible. The Committee is working under a deadline of March 15th, at which time the entire Budget Act will be presented to the full Senate. All hearings will be conducted between Dec. and March 1st, with meetings being held every Sunday and Thursday night.

One week prior to a group's first hearing a description of the organization and the necessity for Senate funding, two copies of its budgets request, and a list of members in the group with an estimate of how many people it benefits, should be submitted to Budgets' Chairman Kevin Kulakowski.

Poetry Reading Scheduled

A poetry reading featuring Rosellen Brown, a National Council on the Arts award winner for 1970, and Donald Junkins, Director of the Master of Fine Arts Program in English at UMass will be held Wednesday at 4:00 p.m. in Herter Hall (Room 321). The program will be open to the public.

Rosellen Brown will read from her newly published award winning volume, Some Deaths in the Delta, which she wrote after three years working with the civil rights movement in Mississippi in the 1960's.

Donald Junkins will read from his new book, And Sandpipers She Said, which was published last month, along with Some Deaths in the Delta, by The University of Massachusetts Press.

Mr. Junkin's other poetry books include: The Sunfish and the Partridge (1965), the Graves of Scotland Parish (1968), and Walden, 100 Years After Thoreau (1969).

Academic Affairs

Grading policy, major designation, course and credit structure, and requirements all come under the Academic Affairs Committee's definition of "locked structures"; those that do not take individual student differences into account but force all through the same program.

By studying academix proposals from the entire campus community, the committee attempts to identify and change such situations.

Academix Affairs has five major sub-committees, they and their functions being:

1. Long-Range Planning, in charge of reviewing from where the university is coming and to where it is going. It informs the committee of the effects proposed changes will have and of problems that need to be solved.
2. Research and Continuance, charged with gathering the resources available on problems before the committee, and the history and current situation of each problem considered by the committee.
3. Department Programs, which attempts to promote department councils, such as CUSP, Educ. It recommends to the full committee requests for funds out of Senate account 802K, which is set up to help fund council projects. This sub-committee is also responsible for discovering educational innovations at other institutes and to report them to the committee.
4. Dorm Program and Education, in charge of increasing interest in the students' educational problems. The development of dorm programs and lines of communication is part of their attack on this problem.
5. Finance, concerned with increasing the amount of scholarships available on campus, and with gathering funds for educational programs.

The committee also represents student views on education before the Faculty Senate, and has membership on the College of Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee, as well as on the Faculty Senate Academic Matters Committee. These committees and other informal communication lines are important to achieve needed changes in the university.

Services: A Channeling of Complaints

The possibility of making the University Store a co-operative enterprise, ways of alleviating student damages and theft, and the improvement of outdoor lighting on campus are some of the primary considerations of the Services Committee this year.

The committee is offered as a buffer between the students and administrative personnel. As such, it facilitates the channelling of student complaints and replaces confrontation with negotiation.

Varied work done through housing, health services, the Parking Commission and many other campus departments is implemented to achieve these ends.

The new meal ticket stub system, initiated this fall by Food Services, is a result of the Services Committee's plea last year for a tighter security system within the dining commons to guard against excessive freeloading.

Services deems the review and evaluation of campus services an important and valuable aid to students in carrying out their academic pursuits properly. For example, the committee was instrumental in starting the Campus Shuttle Bus Service, and is now working on a new system of roommate selection for both freshmen and upperclassmen.

A thorough review of all dining commons services, campus housing units, and parking facilities round out the committee's list of priorities, a list directed towards making university life more comfortable for students by serving their individual needs and wants.

Under the able guidance of Chairman Joe Ackerstein (center), the Services Committee examines a variety of campus problems at its

PR: Linking Student To Senate

The Senate's Public Relations Committee, instrumental in publicizing last year's "rent hike" demonstrations, has a goal of improving and maintaining relations between the Student Senate and the university community at large.

Making use of the campus media, WMUA and the Daily Collegian, the Public Relations Committee has prime responsibility for informing the students of actions taken by the Senate, and to promote better understanding of those actions.

The committee promotes the "education" of the student population concerning the Student Senate standing committees and their functions. A Public Relations-sponsored committee brochure further explaining this topic will soon be available in the Senate office.

The Financial Overseers

Budgets: Deciding SATF Allocations

The Budgets Committee is the chief financial committee of the Student Senate. The Senate has charged the Budgets Committee with the investigation and review of the budgets of all organizations seeking Student Activities Tax money. This review (of all individual budgets) produces a set of recommendations which the Committee presents to the Senate, known officially as the Budget Act.

Last year this committee recommended a Budget Act totalling over one-half million dollars which was accepted by the Senate.

The time spent drawing up the Budget Act is considerable. Each individual budget is based on first, whether the organization fulfills a useful role to the undergraduates of the university, and second, whether the organization, even if it does fulfill this role, really needs the funds it is asking for.

Since the money to fund these organizations comes from a tax paid by all undergraduates, these two considerations are of prime importance in reducing the tax to the lowest level possible.

The impact of this committee on each and every undergraduate is easily seen in the fact that last year Budgets recommended a tax of $35, which has to be paid before a student may register for his courses at this university.

As in the case of all Student Senate Committees, both non-senators and senators share equally in the power and decision-making process of the Budgets Committee. This year the committee has decided to meet once a week on Thursday nights first semester and twice a week on Sunday and Thursday nights during second semester until the Budget is completed.

Finance Committee

All financial motions that are brought before the Senate must either originate or be committed to the Finance Committee for approval of feasibility, legality, and accordance with the Financial Policy Act. Serving as the major legislative control of the Policy Act, the committee is also responsible for maintaining an accurate account of alternations to the Act.

The Finance Committee attempts to provide budgeted organizations as well as non-SATF groups with category alterations, lines of policy authorizations, and assistance with RSO procedures that allow them the financial ability to realize their organizational objectives.

By investigating the financial feasibility of student tax expenditures for a group, Finance acts much like the Budgets Committee except that Financial appropriations all occur during the course of the academic year and disseminate from a more limited category allocation.

Ways And Means: Keeping The Tabs

Serving as the financial gatekeeper, to the many Student Senate-supported organizations and projects the Senate Ways and Means Committee wields a powerful "check" on almost all of the Senate financial activities.

The Committee, although not a fundamentally "legislative body" gains its influence through access to all the financial records of R.S.O. groups.

The Ways and Means committee is specifically empowered to:

———Investigate compliance with the Senate Financial Policy Act

———Assure compliance with the organizations internal budgetary categorizations and Senate approved "binding" clauses

———Evaluate the efficiency of organizations based on their formal financial statements and R.S.O. records

———Recommend future action by the Senate on General Senate Financial Policy

———Act as liason between the Senate and the various organizations it supports financially, informing them of policy changes.

Student Matters

A "more rational security system" to relieve students of "their constant paranoia" is one of the changes the Student Matters Committee sees needed to aid students in campus life.

In an effort to "have a very definite affect on student life" this year, the committee is attempting right now to reform the university's judicial system and lift restrictions regarding off-campus living.

According to Chairman Lee Sandwen, "Students have to start being treated as first-class citizens of this community, adults able to make adult decisions."

By recognizing that students are often unable to affect change within their community, the Student Matters Committee views itself as "a committee that thinks the student matters."

It also supports increased student involvement in running the Campus Center to make that building's governing board more responsive to student needs.

Activities Committee

In addition to reviewing and accepting every activity constitution on campus, the Activities Committee is responsible for ensuring that all Recognized Student Organizations operate in accordance with RSO policies. In conjunction with this task, the committee undertakes a yearly re-evaluation of campus-wide regulations and makes recommendations to the Senate concerning needed changes.

The Activities Committee has taken on a new responsibility this year; the Student Calendar Commission. The Commission establishes a list of priorities for films and film series, which protects smaller groups from being obscured completely by larger groups, yet gives the larger groups ample opportunity to distinguish themselves.

The Commission also provides general approval for use of campus function areas and facilities.

Social Action

The Social Action Committee is responsible for initiating, funding and/or executing projects dealing with current social issues. Also, it is responsible for co-ordinating activities with the National Student Association.

The NSA is a confederation of some 300 college and university student governments across the nation. Delegates from the member schools meet each August at the National Student Congress to exchange ideas, promote inter-campus cooperation nationally, and to elect its officers.

Student Govt. Affairs

The Student Government Affairs Committee, which will be charged with the responsibility for investigating the feasibility of a proposal for a University-wide Senate, acts as the examiner of all questions relating to the "philosophy and structure" of Student Government.

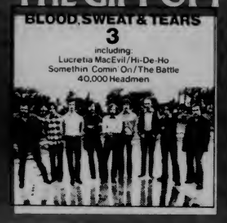
All amendments to the SGA constitution and the Student Senate By-Laws must be referred to this committee before enactment. The proper functioning of class government under the Class Government Act falls under the purview of SGA. Furthermore the maintenance of viable area governments (review of constitutions, etc.) through the various sub-committees and acts relating to same is a responsibility of SGA.

The SGA is responsible for conducting all Student Government Association elections and referenda, as well as all Senate elections, Class Government elections, and University-wide referenda which the Student Senate deems necessary.

The search for constant improvements in holding these elections also falls into SGA's category as does the maintenance of up to date files on newly installed and recently resigned Senators.

Faculty-Student Committees

In addition to the standing committees are joint faculty-student committees and Faculty Senate committees open to students.



Several of these committees have vacancies, two of the more influential groups being Master Planning (considering both long-range expansion and immediate university needs), and the Commission on the Environment (dealing with environmental matters facing the campus).

Other joint faculty-student committees with openings include the Health Council, Student Affairs, and the Communications Board.

All Senate Standing Committee meetings are open to the university community. Any undergraduate may apply for membership to a committee. Non-senators share equally in the decision-making process and exercise full voting privileges with senators. Applications and further information is available in the Student Senate office.

Communication

Administrators and directors should always be willing to listen to students and to admit that change is in order. On December 2, in Worcester Dining Commons, the Food Service Directors did just this. After dinner, the managers of all the Dining Commons, the Food Service Director, and the representatives of several of the dormitories got together and really discussed, not merely talked, about some of the problems regarding the Dining Commons.

The managers were honest and direct in dealing with the student representatives. As of now, there are two meal ticket plans under discussion; that of a ten meal a week plan, and that of a fifteen meal a week plan. The managers also presented the students with statistics like: fifty-five percent of those with meal tickets miss breakfast, about five percent miss lunch, and about five percent miss dinner. Numbers such as these, are important to know, so that one may understand better why the directors do some of the things that they do.

Questions such as having meat for breakfast, and on having an a la carte breakfast were raised, and are now under discussion. Sub committees are established as of now, and will be working on changes for next semester, on a study on serving brunches, on food improvement, and on revising meal tickets. They are to meet once a week with their respective Dining Commons Manager, so as to establish greater communication, and then every two or three weeks, all the sub committees will meet together to discuss what has been done.

It is communication such as this, that will make the University go forward onto more productive changes. It is interesting to note, however, that not all of the dormitories, by any means, were represented. If people think that change is necessary, they must be willing to come and make themselves known, and help to work for it.

Ali's Dilemma

Muhammed Ali is heralded by many to be the greatest boxer in the history of the sport. And if you don't believe it, just ask Ali. However, it is my sincere belief that Ali is not considered by most of the people in this country to be the greatest, for one very obvious reason.....he is Black. America simply would not be able to stand such a claim and at the same time keep up with its racist image. It is not my intent, although relative, to go into the racist attitude of this country. Besides, I wouldn't want my local draft board to catch wind of this article.

For Black people in every part of the country the Dilemma of Muhammed Ali symbolizes with the unleashing of every jab and right hand the easing of a frustration known only to Black people. Ali may have thought he was fighting a battle to retain his heavyweight status. However, he was also fighting a battle for many of his people, who are trapped in a system that neglects to bend for human beings.

In Ali's last fiasco the impact of his punches could be felt by everyone glued to the historical event. For white America, it hurt. For Black people the punches were a series of battles being won in anticipation of winning the war. As far as wars are concerned Ali has yet to lose a fight (in the ring), although America has tried desperately to stomp out this fad.

Ali has been sentenced to jail; stripped of his boxing license; and humiliated with the "great white hopes" feable attempt to defeat him with a computer. He has been teased time and time again with promises of a return to the ring. But for those of us familiar with American history and the Black man, the unjustice and hypocrisy used against Ali is not at all surprising.

Finally, THE RETURN; GOVERNOR DECLARES DAY OF MORNING. Ali is again faced with the "great white hope." RESULTS.....Ali in three. Then, the big questions; IF Ali didn't.....IF Quarry could have.....IF the fight had of.....The point; white America will continue to look backward as long as they continue trying to fool the NOW Black man with his racist tricks. The Dilemma.....there is not going to be a victory by the "great white hope" in the ring as long as Ali keeps his license. And sadly enough, the Black man is not going to win the ultimate victory in the boxing ring.

At any rate, here we go again another "great white hope." My prediction.....Ali in seven.

"Hard-hitting" Goose

SEXUAL REPRESSION IN MOTHER GOOSE NURSERY RHYMES
by R. Mendel Rivers, Ph. D.

This is an important literary document, especially taken in the light of today's social problems as interpreted by every hack writer across the nation. The author, a well-known advocate of the "responsible but free" philosophy toward sexual affairs, has investigated thoroughly the effect of childhood nursery rhymes on the sexual attitudes of adults. By revealing the hidden sexual meanings of the most innocent appearing subjects, Dr. Rivers has revealed to us the true basis for our innermost moral attitudes.

Perhaps the best way to introduce the unfamiliar reader with the quality of this book is to present a selection from one of its articles.

Dr. Rivers cites the epic work "Jack and Jill" as setting the mood for the entire collection of Mother Goose poems. It is a general overview of the subject, rather than a specific case history of sexual repression. Here it is then, as interpreted by Dr. Rivers.

JACK AND HILL

Jack and Hill
Went up the hill,
To fetch a pail of water.
Jack fell down,
And broke his crown,
And Jill came tumbling after.

"this is a hard-hitting commentary on the quality of sexual life in today's world. Jack and Jill, representing (respectively) the male and female segments of society, are trying to climb the hill (male sex symbol) to fetch a pail (female sex symbol) of water (symbol of fertility--for more complete treatment, see T.S. Eliot, THE WASTE LAND).

"Jack's fall is the failure of Man to fulfill his sex role (losing, or "breaking" his crown of sexual supremacy). As a result of this, Jill (who is the stronger character of this work) is left without support, and this leads to her downfall soon afterwards. Thus, the poem ends pessimistically, with no hope left for Mankind.

"The artful symbolism and deep social commentary of this poetic work is reminiscent of the late T.S. Eliot, and indeed, this work has been credited to his name (see Rivers, WHO WROTE IT?, Tripe Book Company). Certainly, the poem can at the very least be described as an inspiration for his better works.

"But no matter what the age of this poem, its meaning is especially important to today's world. The confused sexual roles represented in today's values and fashions are revealed in the especially poignant symbols of this work as the failure of Man in his role. And the outlook for all the Jills of the world (in the ranks of Women's Liberation) is very dim, indeed."

Flats

The following theory, as yet nameless, seeks to organize the body of knowledge science has accumulated relating to tire flattening so as to provide an easily assimilated comprehension of such phenomena:

1. The probability of a flat is directly proportional to the quantity of junk in the trunk.

Corollary: if the trunk is empty and a flat occurs, the spare is also flat. (The converse of this corollary does not hold: after completely unloading a heavily laden trunk, the subject often observes a depressingly unflated spare).

2. Flat tires occur in nice weather only when one is dressed in good clothes.

3. In rainy weather and on back roads, when a flat occurs either:
   a. the jack won't work, or
   b. the lug wrench is missing, or
   c. both

4. The lugs on the flat wheel are invariably and inexorably frozen.

Corollary: they always unscrew the other way.

5. (Newton's postulate) What goes up won't come down if it's a car on a jack.

Naturally this listing is incomplete; any empirical cataloguing is subject to revision as new data become available. Anybody interested in adding his observations - in the interest of science - is invited to do so.

The Human Condition-Conclusion

My friend died last Wednesday, and I remember Hamlet's dying plea to his friend:
"If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart
Absent thee from felicity awhile
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain
To tell my story."
And I write today because I selfishly want the world to know my pain and my love, my sadness and my dreams.

An artificial bone that can be totally assimilated into the body – marrow and all – is being developed by a Dr. Merritt, as is a pneumonia vaccine (Dr. Norman Somerson's project).

There are amino acids in outer space, and a gene has been made by a man – Dr. Har Gobind Khorana.

This coming February or March, a satellite will be launched to fly around Jupiter – a two-year trip of 500,000,000 miles.

Under the direction of Dr. Louis S.B. Leakey, man-made tools are being uncovered in California that are estimated to be between 50,000 and 100,000 years old.

Today is the 834th day that Louis B. Russell of Indianapolis has been alive since his heart transplant operation.

Mayor Lindsay opened the first methadone addiction clinic in New York last week.

Philadelphia has established an experimental program in affective education.

In front of us, endless possibility. Behind us, infinite power. Why need we fear?

But all the Doctors Merritt and Somerson, Khorana and Leakey;

And all the bone marrows, satellites, and hearts;

All of education and science, art and history, medicine and psychiatry;

All of Man's knowledge did not prevent my friend from driving into a concrete underpass on the Connecticut Turnpike at 92 miles an hour early last Wednesday evening.

The Human Condition:

We are born, we live, we die. In everything we live through, with all who we love, during all our times of loneliness, we are not alone.

The Human Condition.

Soliloquy

To the Editor:

"To be, or not to be...." is one of Shakespeare's best known philosophical ponderings. It is from an era long past, but still relevant today.

Here on this campus one need only consider the sorry events of the last several months to see that we could all stand some inner contemplation. We are not a healthy community when theft, mugging, rape and drug usage are prevalent. The recurring concert gate crashing and the consequent trampling of one's fellow students, underlines the need for immediate positive action.

We have gotten into the habit of resolving our problems by creating "committees" to "investigate" and make "recommendations". We look for someone or something on which to place the blame. Once this is done to everyone's satisfaction we can tuck the problem into a closet without ever really coming to grips with it. This solves nothing and is the lowest form of self-deception.

What can be done then? The dreary lament, "I am only one person, what can I do?" has been used to the point that further usage merely grates on the ears. Rallying around cliches and catch phrases has served only to stunt creative thinking and polarize people in a negative manner.

To the concerned observer of our times, the answer should be clear. Our college community and society at large needs a reformation of major proportions. The answer is simple; the undertaking vast.

It can be done, but each one of us must do his part. For in any free society, that freedom carries with it the responsibility to help maintain it. There are existing vehicles for communication and change which should be utilized. Know what your elected representatives in the student, local and national government are and express your feelings to them. If the present forms and/or leaders are inadequate, we must work to replace them with more effective ones.

Bring group social pressure to bear on those individuals among us who steal, destroy, inflict injury and advocate violence. Let them know their actions are not condoned, but abhorred. They cannot operate for long without support; and to them silence implies consent.

Perhaps the most effective means of easing our problems, and certainly the simplest, is to have a constant exchange of views with your fellow human beings. Inform others of your opinions and listen to what they have to say. Really listen and try to understand how the other person feels. In the communication process, listening is as important as exponding.

A free democratic society requires the active participation of all its citizens. If tolerated any longer, apathy will become our epitaph. What are we waiting for? There will be no one man rising out of the turmoil with all the right answers to lead us to brighter days. The responsibility lies on each of our shoulders individually.

"To be or not to be....." Is the question. We can all be a force for making our world a better place or we will simply cease to be.

Apology

To the Editor:

In response to the Friday, Dec. 4th letter of Kay M. Raymond:

Just a short note to extend a sincere apology on behalf of my ignorant sisters and brothers in the heterosexual community. Hopefully we will all someday understand that there is no Life, unless there is Life for All: Not just in tolerance, but with encouragement to find one's own Life - with Love, in Peace & Harmony - and Live it. Until such time I would like to say that I admire your courage and frankness and wish my best to you, the SHL, and any other organizations that encourage a full Life, free from fear of social persecution.

Surely, if someone from the SHL were willing, an article (or series of articles) aimed at educating the heterosexual community would be appreciated.

SUSAN FUCILLO

The Fun City

To the Editor:

I am totally disgusted at the amount of money being spent on construction and "Awful Waffles" while basic student needs are being largely ignored. Not the least of which is the parking problem.

On Friday, Dec. 4, at 4 P.M. I discovered that my car in F Lot was vandalized - a window smashed, my tape player stolen, as well as extensive damage to the body. I managed to attract the attention of a campus police cruiser. After listening to my story, the worthy officers did not deem it necessary to get out of the cruiser and look, they merely nodded their heads in acknowledgement of the crime.

But the crowning touch came about 7 P.M. that night. Since the thieves had left the door open and my battery was consequently worn down, I had to remove it and take it to a service station. Along with two other friends, I was removing the battery and a cruiser pulled up. An officer actually bestirred himself to get out of the cruiser, and asked one of us for quote "identification". He merely looked quickly at my school I.D. - never mind my registration or even a license. Maybe he would have accepted my Mickey Mouse Club membership card. He didn't even listen to my explanations as he got back into the cruiser and drove away.

This is not to say that I am the only victim of the increasing crime on this campus. My loss is small compared to others. Yet it indicates that the problems of a 1970 city are being attempted to be solved with the methods of an 1888 small town campus.

The moral of the story is: If you have a half decent car and would like to have it stripped, park it in F Lot. Its the easiest touch for parts and car thieves from here to Chicago. Next to V Lot....

The Time Of Man

"ONCE THERE WERE TREES AND A RIVER
ONCE THERE WAS GRASS WHERE YOU STAND
ONCE THERE WERE SONGS ABOUT RIGHTS INSTEAD OF WRONGS
ONCE THERE WAS THE TIME OF MAN"

About ten years ago, Glenn Yarborough popularized this song. It was called "The Time of Man." The author of the song, Travis Edmondson, was predicting a time when man would have destroyed his environment and would wistfully look back on the past as the "Golden Age of Man." Certainly the author never expected his prophecy to come to pass so quickly!

About 3,000 years earlier an old Hebrew sage put it like this:

"There is a way which seems right to a man, but its end is the way to death." (Proverbs 14:12)

Modern man has definitely chosen the way that leads to death:

..... death of the earth.
..... death of plant and animal life.
..... death to other men in war.
..... death to himself from drugs, on the highway...

But what can man do if his best efforts bring so much death? Is there any other way?

Is it possible that man's problem is man himself; that man himself must be changed if ever there is to be hope of a solution to his problems?

Nineteen hundred years ago another Hebrew sage said:

"I am the Way--yes, the Truth and the Life...
I say emphatically that anyone who listens to my message and believes in God who sent Me has eternal life...has already passed out of death into Life."
(John 14:6;5:24)

His name was Jesus, and He also said:

"Look!I have been standing at the door and I am constantly knocking. If anyone hears Me calling him and opens the door, I will come in and fellowship with him and he with Me." (Revelation 3:20)

Isn't it about time you and I quit the "way of death" and give Jesus a chance? He claimed that if we open the door of our lives, he will come into our lives and make us new creatures.

The door to which Jesus referred is the door of your heart - your will, your intellect, and your emotion. Just as you can allow someone who knocks on the door of your room to enter by saying "Come in!", SO YOU CAN ALLOW Jesus to enter the door of your heart through prayer. Why not ask him to come into your life right now? He won't mislead you - if you ask Him to come in He will!

'Superstar,' A New Rock Opera

by BOB GRAHAM
Fine Arts Staff

fine arts

"JESUSCHRISTSUPERSTAR", DECCA

The idea of dramatizing events in the life of Christ is not a new one. Recently it was tried again somewhat differently in the "rock opera" "JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR". This is not a vehicle for Christian dogma. It doesn't, as most versions of the Christ story attempt, try to convert its audience to Christianity. Rather its aim is to divorce the listener from previous beliefs about Christ and tells this "greatest story ever told" as a mere story. Christ is depicted as a political rather than religious martyr and a philosopher rather than a prophet.

The opera deals with the last seven days in the life of Christ, from the ride into Jerusalem to the Crucifiction (the ressurection is not dealt with, because of the thematic purposes described above).

The composers, Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice have borrowe from many music forms in creating their score: rock, gospel and jazz among them. The music is not really new or inventive, many songs seem echoes of others, and this leads to a problem. This is that the music seems dictated to by the old forms instead of being influenced by them. Webber and Rice obviously decided that they had to write a "rock opera" and therefore made many of the passages seem operatic. The opera has the effect of being made up of different musical forms, but its weakness lies in the fact that there is no main hybrid of these forms to make the opera a solid work. The result is, at times, a seeming lack if continuity.

The lack of continuity is also probably due to the fairly poor technical standard. The recording (I used the 8-track tape version for this review) seems to have been pasted together. Even some of the songs have treated in this manner with different parts having been recorded at different times ("Gelsemane" is an example of this). Also as some jump in as others are fading out. This tends to become pretty annoying. The "mixing" also needs to have been done better, and the "band" (made up of individuals from other groups) never sounds together, all contributing to the opera's lack of continuity.

The performances range from rairly good to pretty bad. There is a tendency for some performers to start screeching suddenly even though the music doesn't warrant it. This screeching even often works against the music. In general the recording needs a good director; someone who can tighten up the weak spots and make it a coherant whole. Despite its flaws, however, SUPERSTAR is still interesting. Its attempt to convey the story of Christ in an objective manner and its music, though not original and inventive, is still entertaining.

Famed String Quartet Performs Modern Works

The LaSalle String Quartet, in residence at the University of Cincinnati, will perform a concert Wednesday, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, UMass. The event, the second of five concerts in the 1970-71 Chamber Music Series, is under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council.

The LaSalle Quartet was formed at the Juilliard School of Music and received that famed institution's first degree in quartet ensemble. Since 1954 the quartet has made 20 international tours, performing concerts throughout Europe, India, Israel, Australia and New Zealand, and Central and South America.

The LaSalle Quartet received a very high honor for an American string ensemble recently when it was offered an exclusive recording contract with one of Europe's leading firms, Deutsche Grammophon. This distinction reflects the continuous interest in contemporary music which the LaSalle Quartet has had since its formation. While its repertoire is not restricted to contemporary music, the ensemble is the leader in this field and has recorded the works of such famous avant-garde composers as Gyorgy Ligeti, Earle Brown, Wolf Rosenberg and Krzysztof Penderecki.

For its debut concert at the University, the LaSalle String Quartet will perform Henry Purcell's "Three Four-Part Fantasias"; Quartet, Opus 3 by Alban Berg; Anton Webern's Quartet, Opus 28 and Penderecki's Quartet. Reserved tickets are available at the Fine Arts Council and are priced at $1 to University undergraduates' $1.50 to University graduate students and other students; $2.50 for University faculty and staff and $3 for the general public. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Box Office one hour before the concert. A telephone reaching both box offices is 545-0202.

Israeli Singer In Concert

December 8th, Hillel at UMass is sponsoring a concert of songs of many lands by the well known Israeli singer Aviva Semadar. Aviva is a Sabra who studied music in Tel Aviv and Europe. She made her concert debut in Europe in 1964 and has concertized extensively throughout Europe, Israel and the United States. She has appeared at many music festivals, on radio and television, and has made many recordings. She accompanies herself on the guitar.

Hillel is happy to present this concert for its annual Channukah celebration. The public is welcome free of charge. The concert will take place in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 p.m.

Roister Tryouts

Tryouts for the Roister Doister production "THE CHRONICLES OF HELL" will be December 7, 8, and 9 in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at 7 PM.

Casting is open to anyone, no scripts will be used, all you need bring is your imagination. Director Bob Rotenberg is looking for four or six women and ten men.

Also persons interested in working lights, costumes, building the set and other technical aspects of production should come.

"THE CHRONICLES OF HELL" was written by the Twentieth century playwright Michel de Gleiderade and can be described as a somewhat bawdy example of Medeival religious ceremony.

Dave Van Ronk Here On Friday

Dave Van Ronk, noted Greenwich Village folk singer, will perform two concerts at the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus Friday, Dec. 11, and Saturday, Dec. 12, under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council.

Reserved tickets to Mr. Van Ronk's concerts are priced at $1.50 for University undergraduates; $2 for UMass graduate students and other students; $2.50 for UMass faculty and staff and $3 to the general public and may be purchased through the Fine Arts Council Box Office one hour before each concert. A telephone reaching both box offices is 545-0202.

Anti-Poverty Programs Discussion On "Focus"

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" will broadcast a discussion on "Poverty and Anti-Poverty Programs in an Age of Inflation."

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests on the live 60-minute forum are Donald Brown, Tony Buteau, and James Collins, co-directors of the western Massachusetts division of Upward Bound; and Fred Bemak and John Knox, caseworkers for the antipoverty program.

The Upward Bound office for western Massachusetts, located at 205 Mills House on the UMass campus, serves communities in Berkshire, Franklin, Hamden, and Hampshire Counties.

Topics to be covered during the discussion include: drug abuse, child care, welfare, and Federal cutbacks in antipoverty programs, as well as an examination of the Upward Bound program and its effectiveness as an anti-poverty agency.

Tonight's program will also provide air time for renewing the "Drive to Alleviate Malnutrition," a fund-raising project sponsored by the Committee on Poverty of the Community Action Foundation. Recipients of all funds raised will be impoverished Blacks and Indians of the Ridgeville-four Holes area in Dorcester County, South Carolina.

Aptitude Testing Defended By Amherst College Dean

A prominent college admission officer has defended the use of aptitude tests to help determine which students should be admitted. Dean Eugene S. Wilson, director of admission at Amherst College since 1946, has replied to rising criticism of the tests in his 24th annual report to the nation's secondary schools.

The limitations of the tests, he argues, are due to improper training of students who take them, not to the tests themselves.

To the charge that the tests are unfair to students from disadvantaged areas (because their language is foreign to the ghetto), he argues that, "The language of the ghetto is not going to replace the language of the world. The challenge to our school systems is to move the language of the world into the ghetto.

"What a Scholastic Aptitude Test may be telling us is that this student has been shackled by an irrelevant curriculum, poorly trained teachers, inferior equipment, indifferent parents and counselors who couldn't care less."

Dean Wilson believes the tests do indicate accurately "which students at the time tested are ready for an intellectual experience of some kind and which need remedial work." To the charge that Scholastic Aptitude Tests unfairly measure only the academic or intellectual aptitude of a student, Dean Wilson admits that this is what they were designed to test.

"The other-than-academically gifted students, he writes, "have often been unrecognized and unappreciated by the marking and testing measures of education and by our curriculums – this fact is not new. It should have been known to educators at all levels. Unfortunately, our educational system pushes this truism into the background."

A rising sentiment among counselors and admission officers is that the tests should be used for placement, not for admission. Amherst's Dean Wilson answers that admission to a given college is placement.

"Institutions vary greatly in the curriculums and in the academic pace presented to their students," he writes, concluding that, "It is the task of an Admission Committee to place in its institution students who can meet with satisfaction to themselves the academic challenges presented."

Dean Wilson admits that if the academic emphasis in college programs gives way to experimental learning, the standard tests may wane in usefulness. And he welcomes experiments in open admission.

But he adds: "Sooner or later, however, reading, writing and arithmetic will be introduced to these students and at this point Scholastic Aptitude Tests should have a place as an aid to teachers and counselors and not as a stumbling block to students.

You might be happier at Ætna.
We think we might have what you're looking for. Something 27 million people depend on for security and a better life.
We'd like you to consider taking a sales management position with Ætna Life and Casualty. We have hundreds of broad-gauge management positions, both in the field and in the home office, that pay substantial salaries right from the start. They all take creativity and hard work. But the rewards can be very high. To yourself. To others.
If the insurance business is still the Overlooked Profession to you, it's probably because you haven't heard the whole truth about it yet. How fast-changing it has become. Or how sophisticated. Or that it is where the greatest variety of job opportunities are—today, insurance probably takes more college graduates than any other profession.
We have jobs in all divisions of our company. If you'd like face-to-face contact with people we have many positions that will give you immediate contact with the public. If you'd rather deal with your co-workers and other professionals, we have those, too. Tell us your preference, and we can work it out between us.
A brochure called "The Whole Truth" goes into the specifics on sales management as well as other opportunities. It'll tell you how Ætna works, what it does, and how you can become part of it. It's an honest picture of an honest business. Why not stop in at your placement office and read it.
Today, one out of six Americans looks to Ætna for insurance protection. You might build a successful career helping us help many more.

NEW YORK (AP)—Fran Tarkenton tossed two touchdown passes in the fourth quarter Sunday, giving the New York Giants a 20-6 National Football League victory over the stubborn Buffalo Bills.

The Giants, battling to overtake first place St. Louis in the National Conference's Eastern Division, snapped a 6-6 deadlock early in the final quarter when Tarkenton floated a nine yard scoring pass to Clifton McNeil.

Tucker Frederickson scored the insurance touchdown on a four yard flip from Tarkenton with 6-1/2 minutes to play as the Giants brought their season record to 8-4.

But the perfect test, in the minds of most people, still awaits Ali-a title fight with Joe Frazier.

Such a fight could come in February and not only would it answer the question of who is the king of boxing, it also would be a promoter's dream. Estimates of an Ali Frazier gross begin at $7 million.

"Bonavena is the perfect test for me," said Ali on the eve of his first fight in New York since he knocked out Zora Folley in his final fight as champion March 22, 1967, in the old Garden.

Angelo Dundee, Ali's trainer, agrees that the fight should answer a question left unanswered when Ali stopped Jerry Quarry after three rounds in Atlanta six weeks ago in his first fight since being stripped of his title for refusing induction into the Army.

Frosh Hoopsters Win, 64-52 Dartmouth Is Victim

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

HANOVER, N.H.—Last Thursday, on the strength of a second half spurt, the Little Redman hoopsters downed the Dartmouth frosh, 64-52. After a touch and go first half, the freshmen performed impressively in bringing their record to 2-0. On the losing side, the home team Indians, who won their contest by some 40 points, were the owners of a 1-1 mark.

After trailing 30-29 at halftime, the Little Redmen settled down, and overcame a game-long Dartmouth press to outscore their opposition by 13 points in the final 20 minutes.

The visitors held the lead only once in the first half, and that for a mere 30 seconds. A tip-in by Al Skinner, off of an errant foul shot, resulted in a 2-0 lead for UMass. But the next five minutes were all Dartmouth.

Greg Hannah, playing the backcourt for Dartmouth, started pumping in the points, scoring six of his game-high 23 to put the Little Green ahead, 9-4.

UMass was headed towards foul trouble, and the Dartmouth press was giving the Redmen problems. But what hurt the Redmen most was the fact that offensive rebounds were not being turned into baskets, and if not for Skinner's eight points early in the game, it might have been a different story.

The foul problems cleared, as the Redmen were called for just five personals in the last 33 minutes. But the scoring difficulties lingered on. Four separate times UMass crashed the boards, and had two or three shots from in-close, only to be denied. UMass was getting their share of rebounds, as indicated by their 55-43 edge at game's end, but the missed tip-ins were hurting them dearly.

As the half ended, Peter Trow hit for two quick hoops, and the five point lead that the home team enjoyed for most of the first half had been cut to one, 30-29.

Basket trading was the name of the game as the second half began. Then with 15:39 left on the clock, Rich Pitino hit Trow with a scoop pass, and Trow connected, putting UMass ahead 35-34. The lead was short-lived though, as Billy Raynor, Dartmouth's star guard, came back with a three point play. But Raynor's play was to be the Indians last moment of glory.

A Trow hoop tied it at 37, and a Pitino pass to John Olson saw Olson score his biggest two points of the night, putting the little Redmen on top for good. The lead grew as a blocked shot by Skinner, and then a Skinner steal resulted in a basket by Art Levine, on a great second effort.

With Dartmouth pressing madly, the lead grew to 50-41. Then with a little over seven minutes left UMass moved into a four corner offense, one that is designed to hold the ball for long stretches of time. Although the Redmen used this offense often in the waning moments of the game, they did not use it for more than a minute at any one time. Coach Broaca explained the reasoning behind this, saying, "The four-corner offense is extremely effective, but we have to be careful that we don't lose all notions of scoring, as can happen if it is used extensively. When you lose sight of the basket, that's when you can really get into trouble."

Six straight Dartmouth points closed the gap to 53-48, but that was the closest they were to get. Switching back into man to man defense, one of many defenses they were to use against the Indians, UMass stiffened, as Redman after Redman went to the foul line for crucial one and one situations.

Nine foul shots later, one by Pitino, two by Olson, and six by Skinner, gave the Redmen a 62-48 lead. The game ended on a fitting note, with Skinner making two more from the charity stripe for a 64-52 UMass victory.

The freshman's play appeared to be of a much higher quality than of that displayed in their first win. Said Coach Broaca, "Anytime a freshmen team plays away from home it is very tough. Subsequently, a win away from home is quite difficult. Taking that fact into consideration, and the fact that this win came against Dartmouth, this was a very satisfying victory."

Broaca was pleased with his team's performance, and Skinner, who scored 19, and shipped in with 11 rebounds, drew this remark from his coach, "This was by far the best job that Skinner has done for us."

Looking past Skinner's six of nine, and Trow's nine for fourteen, the team shot rather poorly. But on the whole they looked a bit smoother than in their opening fray. Said Broaca, "I thought that Pitino, Trow, and Olson all had a good game, and if we can just get steady performance's out of these boys we should do quite well."

Frosh Skaters Beaten

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Playing what seemed like two different games, the UMass freshman hockey team lost its season opener, 7-4, at Orr Rink Saturday night to a powerful (so what else is new?) Boston College squad.

In the first period, the Little Redmen appeared to be completely outmatched as the Eagle frosh ran up a score of 5-0 before UMass' Jim Connors put his team on the scoreboard at 14:10 of the period.

UMass finally answered back when Connors, a center who played well all night, took a pass from Jim Coleman and put it by Eagle goalie Tom Murray, who had sprawled out of position.

In the opening stanza, the Redmen were completely outskated and out-checked and were continually guilty of fatal lapses in front of goalie Chick Rheault as the defense failed to clear the puck time and time again. This enabled BC to score many of their goals on rebounds.

The second period had UMass looking like an entirely different team. They skated well, played their zones well, and all-in-all appeared to be the better team. The solid play in the second period culminated on a goal by right wing Coleman at 13:38 on a pass from Connors. Connors had control of the puck in front of the BC cage and waited until he saw Coleman unguarded on the left side. He slipped a perfect pass to Coleman who had the whole left side of the net open and tipped it in easily. This tally by UMass remained unanswered and the score at the end of two was 5-2.

It appeared as if the home frosh might be on their way to a miraculous come-from-behind victory when Coleman scored his second goal of the night, unassisted at 4:50. He threw the puck in front of the cage into a maze of players and it deflected off of a BC defenseman by Murray.

It was not to be, however, as the Redmen reverted to their first period lapses that resulted in three BC goals.

The first came at 5:35 when Fidler blasted a rebound past Rheault after the latter had stopped Hayes on a breakaway. A little over a minute later, John Monahan benefited on a similar situation as he took a rebound off of a Dunn shot and, uncovered in front, put it past the fallen Rheault.

UMass retaliated at 18:34 when they put excellent pressure on Murray which resulted on a goal by Jim Riley. Assists went to Jim Lynch and Joe Kiah.

It came much too late, however, and the game ended with the Redmen on the short end of a 7-4 score.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Throughout the history of the United States, only one Gemini has become President. He was John F. Kennedy. There have been only two Presidents born under Aries: Thomas Jefferson and John Tyler. There have been two Leo Presidents: Benjamin Harrison and Herbert Hoover. There have been more U.S. Presidents born under Scorpio than any other zodiacal sign. The total is six: John Adams, James Polk, Franklin Pierce, James Garfield, Theodore Roosevelt and Warren Harding.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Some agreements, partnerships are subject to abrupt change. Exercise independence without appearing arrogant. Change with the times. Display natural leadership qualities.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): You may find that you have greater freedom than imagined. Period of confinement ends. You are able to fulfill some desires. Key is not to rock proverbial boat. Take sure, steady steps.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): You seem intent on getting involved. Have fun without needlessly complicating current situation. Romantic inclinations are emphasized. Forces are scattered. Social activity dominates.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): You shake free from lethargy. You find ways of dealing with older individual. Key is to be meticulous about details. Check goals motives; review desires. You may get promotion.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): You could start in one direction but quickly change course. Tendency is to lose valuables in transit. Guard against careless packaging. Relative's advice may lack substance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Strive for greater harmony at home. Accent on settling financial accounts. Seek area of agreement with mate, partner. Unorthodox approach could result in solid gain.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Moves are quick. Your reactions will have to be swift. People respond. Opportunity is present, but you will have to sift through tinsel to strike it rich. Much excitement on agenda.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Subtle approach brings most constructive results. Don't betray a confidence individual who holds key to profit for you is observant. You only fool yourself by any attempt at deception.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22 - Dec 21): You get favorable report which enables you to fulfill some innermost desires. Break free from oppressing situation. Don't brood about what might have been. Aim toward future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Security may appear threatened. But this may merely be due to some quick changes. Property is involved. You are called upon to uphold community, family integrity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Short journey may end as a wild-goose chase. Key is to have vital information at hand. Don't trust to chance. If prepared, current project could lead to prestige, real gain.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): If flexible, gain is indicated. Otherwise, you may have to retrace steps. Specifically, make some concessions in order to make major gain. Money situation fluctuates.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you give of yourself, you seem instinctively to know meaning of love. Many are drawn to you with their problems. Try to understand that you cannot carry every person's burden. This applies especially during current period. You soon will have opportunity to make progress in new field of endeavor.

Matmen Shutout Tufts In Season Opener

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The UMass wrestling team, boosted by four pins and two Tufts forfeits, rolled to a 42-0 victory over the Jumbos on Saturday afternoon at Boyden.

The win was the 11th straight regular season win for the Redmen and the point total was one of the largest in UMass wrestling history.

Leading the Redmen in the shutout victory were juniors Clay Jester, Kent Mignocci, Chris Hodson and Dave Reynolds. Each netted five big points with pins that provided UMass all the points it would need for victory.

Jester had the quickest pin, dropping the Jumbos' Cherniak in the first period to give the Redmen a 21-0 lead at the time. Transfer Dave Amato opened the scoring with a forfeit victory in the 118 lb. class. Reynolds took a 5-0 lead into the third period before pinning Georgian in the 126 lb. class.

Junior Barry Godowsky got three more points for the Redmen with a close 3-2 decision over Pike of Tufts. Pike opened the scoring with a takedown but Godowsky escaped and got a takedown to lead 3-2 after the first period. The score remained the same for the rest of the 134 lb. match as neither wrestler could take advantage of the other.

At this point victory was assured and the only question was how big the margin would be. Kent Mignocci scored a third period pin over Yost after dominating most of the match and heavyweight Hodson polished off his opponent in the second period. The other Redman victories came from Ed Carlson with a 4-0 win over Scalia at 190, and a 4-3 win by Tom Andrews at 177. Andrewes and Labuz were tied 3-3 at the end of the match, but Tom had one minute of riding time to give him the margin of victory.

UMass Teams Eke Out Wins Over UVM In Overtime

Hoopsters Scared, 79-68

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

BURLINGTON, VT.-After getting the scare of its basketball life, the UMass basketball team came from behind to tie an upset-minded Vermont quintet in regulation time and then went on to down the Catamounts in overtime 79-68, before an "official" attendance of 2540 fans here at Patrick Gymnasium. The Redmen are now 2-0 on the year while Vermont slipped to 0-3.

Who would have thought that this highly-rated UMass team would have any trouble with a bunch of Catamounts that had lost to Maine by fifteen points? But this Vermont unit gave the Redmen all they could handle, and sometimes more, behind an aggressive defense and a well-disciplined offense that at one point had the home club on top by thirteen points. UMass, on the other hand, was harassed into playing a sloppy floor game and shot a poor 38% in the first half.

Mike Pagliara

Heroes for the Redmen in this heart thumper were Julius Erving, Mike Pagliara, Rick Vogeley, Billy Greeley and Bob Dempsey. Erving, though bothered by fouls the entire contest, netted 27 points and pulled down 14 rebounds, both game highs. Although he experienced a cold first half, he heated up in the late going and it was his steal and layup that finally put the Redmen ahead with 1:50 left.

Pagliara was immense in the overtime period as he scored nine of the team's fifteen points in that span. With backcourt mate John Betancourt out of the game on fouls, Pagliara became the floor leader and helped to settle down the offense in the hectic closing minutes.

But it was the bench strenth of the Redmen that was the difference in this one. When Chris Coffin fouled out with 5:20 left in regulation play, Vogeley came into the game and nabbed seven big rebounds as well as poured in seven points. In the overtime period he grabbed two rebounds which were turned into crucial Redman hoops.

Called upon to fill the gap left by Betancourt's departure, Greeley and Dempsey filled the void more than adequately. Greeley, though the smallest man on the court at 5'8, snared one of the game's biggest rebooms when UMass was ahead by one in regulation time. Dempsey came in in the overtime period, utilizing his ball-handling ability to break the Vermont press, and the senior guard netted four charity tosses to ice the verdict.

The game started slowly as UMass committed turnovers the first two times it had the ball. This was to be indicative of the Redman's play throughout the first stanza. Vermont took the lead at 16:48 on a Ray Ortiz jumper from eighteen feet, 5-4, and as it turned out the Catamounts would not relinquish their cushion for about 35 minutes.

Vermont started building on the lead, scoring mainly on the baseline jumpers of 6'9 John Deibert. Operating against Erving, who was saddled with his third personal at 10:57, two of which were of the offensive variety, Deibert was able to move towards the hoop against the careful Erving.

During this period, UMass was having trouble getting organized and began playing Vermont's slow down style. This adjustment hurt the generally fast-moving Redmen and seemed to throw them off a bit. None of the Redman sharpshooters could hit from outside and the bulk of the UMass scoring was done on tap-ins and rebound shots by Coffin, Erving and Ken Mathias.

Rich Trela hit a layup at 4:21 of the half to give the Cats their biggest margin of the evening, 28-15. UMass then began to move as Erving hit a fifteen footer and a free throw and Betancourt netted five straight points to close the gap to 28-23 with just over two minutes left.

Trela hit two more layups which were answered by a Pagliara jumper and a Coffin tap-in with just under a minute to go. Then, with time running out, Erving intercepted a Vermont pass and raced the length of the court for an uncontested hoop to end the scoring for the half. UMass trailed, 32-29.

After Pagliara hit another jumper to open the second half, it appeared that UMass was back on the track. But the Catamounts were not about to give up so easily. With Mark Miller rebounding and scoring inside for the Catamounts and Erving starting to hit for the Redmen, Vermont was able to maintain its lead for most of the second stanza.

With 15:14 remaining, Erving was hit with his fourth personal foul, once again an offensive call. This severly limited his mobility and the 6'6 co-captain did not score for the next six minutes. During this span, Vermont upped its lead to ten 49-39 behind the scoring of Miller and captain Tom Clay.

In the last ten minutes of regulation play, the game got extremely tight. UMass scored three straight hoops on rebound shots by Erving and Vogeley and an Erving layup from a Betancourt steal. With 9:13 left it was 54-51.

Rick Vogeley

Redmen started to move. Spurred on by a good-sized and spirited UMass contingent of fans, the Redmen came from a 60-55 deficit to knot the count at 60-60 with 4:11 to go. All five points were by Erving on a fifteen footer, a rebound and a charity toss.

Once again, however, Miller scored from inside to put the Cats on top. Mathias hit a clutch jumper from the top of the key to tie it again at 62-62 with only 2:45 to go. Then, for the first time since the opening minutes of the game, UMass took the lead as Erving once again stole a pass and scampered downcourt for the hoop. But there was still 1:50 on the clock.

When Greeley pulled down the rebound of a missed Clay shot with a minute and a half to go, it looked like the Redmen could hold on to win. But nothing was going as planned for UMass. The Redmen missed some crucial free throws and with but 0:36 on the clock, Jim Ducey hit his only hoop of the night to make it 64-64. Bob Dempsey's desperation shot from 25 feet hit the rim at the buzzer and the game that was supposed to be an easy one for the Redmen was sent into overtime.

The extra period was all UMass. Erving won the tap and Pagliara was fouled and made the free throw.

The lead grew to three when Mathias tipped in a Vogeley attempt but the Cats came right back as Miller hit two more layups to put Vermont ahead, 68-67, with 3:40 to go. But the Catamounts would not score again.

Pagliara netted a pair of fifteen footers and two free throws to put the Redmen up by five, 73-68, with only 1:29 left on the clock. The Catamounts were forced to foul and Pagliara made two more free throws and Dempsey added four charity tosses to finally put the game out of reach, 79-68. What looked like an early end to the Redman season was finally turned into a precious victory.

The game, however, should serve as a good lesson for the Redmen. They can ill afford to take anyone lightly as everyone will be taking aim at the New England champs. As Coach Leaman said, "They scared us to death. Thank God for such guys as Vogeley, Greeley and Dempsey."

Amen.

BASELINE BANTER-The officiating was nothing short of atrocious though it should be noted that the referees showed no favorites. They called them terribly both ways...

Brian Sullivan

Pucksters In Upset, 3-2

by STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

The UMass hockey team thrilled an overflowing crowd Saturday night as the Redmen tipped Vermont 3-2 in overtime. The win gives the Redmen a season opening three game win streak and a 1-0 Yankee Conference Record.

The win did not come easily for UMass in an extremely close game. The Redmen were ahead for most of the game 1-0 and then 2-1, but the Catamounts pulled a late rally and dramatically tied the game at two with just three seconds left.

In the first period UMass finally got its power play working as Pat Wright of Vermont was sent off the ice for tripping. Just a minute later Al Nickerson scored the Redman's first goal when his shot from the left point was deflected off a Cat defenseman and past goalie Dave Reece. Don Riley and Bob Bartholomew got assists on this goal that came at 17:37.

The second period was a better time for the Cats and they would have been ahead one or two goals if it were not for P.J. Flaherty's acrobatics.

At 7:50 Brian Sullivan went off the ice for a tripping penalty and Vermont unleashed a great attack. Flaherty made a great split save to stop the Cats once, but he couldn't recover in time as Wright poked in a rebound just as the penalty was up. Bob Marks had taken the initial shot from 15 feet and Flaherty stopped that one, but the rebound came right out to Wright and it was an easy goal.

The third frame was one in which UMass scored early and then tried to hold off the Catamounts. The UMass goal came at 2:29 when Pat Keenan was on the spot to collect Sullivan's shot. Jack Edwards also got an assist, on a goal that the Vermont goalie stopped three times before surrendering.

With UMass up a goal, Vermont finally came alive and completely dominated the game. With seven minutes left, Wright hit the cross bar after Flaherty had made two great saves. And with six minutes left Bob Hodde and Tom Crane broke in all alone on Flaherty but somehow the junior goalie got his arm on what looked like a sure goal.

Things quieted down for a few minutes, but in the last minute and a half all hell broke loose. Vermont started things by pulling its goalie to create a 6 on 5 advantage. With the Cats swarming all over the UMass zone the Redmen lost Keenan on a penalty and Vermont had a two man advantage, and then UMass lost Eric Scrafield with just 29 seconds remaining.

With just three men on the ice for the Redmen to stave off six Vermont forwards UMass was looking just to ice the puck and let the clock run out. Vermont, however, won the face-off and meticulously passed the puck around until Wright connected from about three feet away with :03 showing on the clock. Sam Simmons and George Minarsky got the assists on the goal that grabbed victory away from the Redmen.

The overtime period started cautiously and the big crowd started chewing on what fingernails they had left. Vermont got one shot away, but it was saved and the Redmen started a break. Sullivan and Dennis Grabowski came in on Reece from the right side. Sullivan got off a weak shot on the net, Reece saved it, but Reece fell down and the puck slipped under him and trickled into the net to the utter delight of 98% of the people in Orr rink.

The winning goal came at 1:11 of the sudden-death period, and the tensely fought contest was suddenly over.

Redmen Down Penn, 6-4 As Reidy Nets Winner

The game was an extremely close checking affair, as both teams like to use their size and control the puck in the other's zone. UMass simply out hustled Pennsylvania but credit must be given to Flaherty who was absolutely tremendous in net coming up with 35 saves.

Pennsylvania scored first when Dietrich Gyetko's shot from the right corner skipped over Flaherty's pads at 3:27 of the first period. The Redmen appeared to be a bit flat during the opening minutes but came back to life and dominated play for the final twelve minutes of the period. With Chris Larson out for elbowing at the nine minute mark the Redmen began to pressure the Penn defense.

UMass finally tied the score at 12:01 when Lonnie Avery took a pass from Mike Waldron and let one fly from the left side. The shot beat the Penn goalie Tom McQuiston high to his left.

At the eighteen minute mark, Keenan stole the puck and broke down ice on a breakaway. The Wildcat defender managed to overtake Keenan and pull him down. UMass kept the puck in the Penn zone with aggressive forechecking. Keenan let a shot fly pulling McQuiston to his right, but Edwards was able to get the rebound and put UMass ahead, 2-1.

The Redmen came out in the second period the same way they finished the first, flying. While Penn was taking needless penalties, UMass kept hustling and outskating the Wildcats. Don Riley increased the UMass lead to 3-1 when he stole the puck and quickly put one past McQuiston at 2:44. After the goal UMass seemed to falter. Penn narrowed the score to 3-2 when the Redmen had trouble clearing the puck from their zone. Senior Tim Cutter intercepted an attempted clearing pass and beat Flaherty at 6:36.

Flaherty kept the Redmen in the game during the second period with his alert netminding. No scoring was done and the period ended with UMass hanging on to a 3-2 lead.

Pennsylvania continued to dominate play in the third period as they scored two early goals to go ahead of the Redmen, 4-3. At 5:29 a UMass defenseman was caught up ice and Penn had a 2-on-1 breakaway. Tom Davis took Bill MacBonell's pass tying the score at 3-3. Two minutes later, on the power play, McNamee let a blast go from the right point. Sam Gellard managed to get his stick on it and tip it by Flaherty giving Pennsylvania a 4-3 lead. The Redmen refused to quit. Scrafield dug a loose puck out from a pileup on a power play and scored the tying goal at 11:25.

THE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION may have to impose a two-year ceiling limit on the number of student teachers it can handle. So, for the next two years, only 900 undergraduates per year will be absorbed into the program. Some of the student teaching is done at Mark's Meadow School, right next door to the School of Ed. Student Teacher Freeze Predicted for '71-'72

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Staff Reporter

A freezing of the number of undergraduates admitted to the "Ed Block"--student teaching--at 900 per year for the next two years, and efforts to better allocate resources and responsibilities for the program have been proposed by the School of Education's Teacher Education Policy Committee (TEPC).

In addition to the 900 student teacher per year freeze, the TEPC recommended a reduction in undergraduate education requirements for majors, and/or a "reinterpreting" that would permit more courses to fulfill the requirements, the development of a non-certification major in education, and the abandonment of formal courses in favor of an individualized modular approach to teacher preparation.

The proposals will be described to the School of Education's Assembly in an open meeting this Thursday between 11 AM and 1 PM in the Education Building's Auditorium. The recommendations will then be submitted to the policy-making School Council for a vote that will probably take place before Christmas.

The TEPC also urged the establishment of a Teacher Preparation Program Council, oriented toward undergraduate teacher training, and the reorganization of the School's Teacher Education Center into a Center for Teacher Educators--directed primarily toward graduate students.

Other recommendations made by the TEPC include the admission to teacher education programs decided directly by the School, a staff increase in the School's Office of Undergraduate Affairs, a School handbook and other written material, volunteer advisors of faculty and doctoral candidates, development of reciprocal relationships with the State colleges and public schools, and that a "committment to undergraduate education be made a major consideration in the recruitment of new faculty members".

The TEPC's recommendations were based on four points:
——"A very small proportion of the total resources available to the School of Education -- personnel, space, facilities, equipment -- is currently allocated to teacher education.
——"A large number of undergraduate students -- perhaps more than 2,500 -- are being channeled into a small number of courses in a few centers to fulfill requirements. The result is a shrinkage of options available to them, class sizes that mitigate against individualized leaving, and massive student loads for a few faculty members.
——"In effect there is no program in teacher education at present. Characterizations of what we are now doing in this area range from "shoddy" to "plain bad".
——"Contact with the School of Education under the arrangements that now prevail has resulted in massive disaffection among under-graduate students."

Should the School of Education fail to accept the responsibility to undergraduates "genuinely and enthusiastically", the TEPC said that its recommendations would not "make sense", and it would "reluctantly" support the reduction in the number of undergraduates in education from the present 900 per year to 200-300 per year. It added that it believed that the School of Education should accept the responsibility to undergraduates "not because the situation demands it of us, but because the education of those who will have direct contact with children in learning environments ought to be our reason for being....We do not wish to see the University of Massachusetts perpetuating the fallacious but self-fulfilling bifurcation of 'teachers' and 'leaders'."

Thatcher House Up For Renovation

By ELAINE JOHNSON
Staff Reporter

Thatcher house is getting its face lifted, and soon. The residents, who had enjoyed the novelty of being one of the only two male dorms in the Northeast Quad area up until this semester, are now going to have a modernized and beautified place to call home.

The renovation of Thatcher is scheduled to start during the spring semester of '71, at which time the residents will be moved temporarily to Cashin, one of the new Northeast high rise dorms.

The residents, who were originally to be scattered around the campus, voted to move as a group, and come back to Thatcher when their home is completed in the fall of '71.

The higher cost of living in the new high rise dorm will only be partially felt by the individual Thatcher residents. They will pay approximately thirty dollars more per semester than what they presently pay at Thatcher, and the remaining cost, about forty dollars more per student, will be paid for out of a fund from parking fines.

The residents have formed a renovation committee of some fourteen members who will represent and promote the wishes of the entire Thatcher "family", consisting of about 145 people. Lenn Whitten, president of the dorm, and Mark Doherty, who is chairman of the renovation committee, will meet with the Advisory board to represent the wishes of the dorm members, in terms of the specific changes to be made.

Aside from the usual structural renovation, which includes new furniture, phones in the students rooms, and the like, there will be much attention given to design and decoration. They hope to achieve the type of harmony and decoration evident in Lewis House, the last building in the quad to have been remodeled.

Mark Doherty and his committee will have a major role in this remodeling project. They will meet on Wednesday to discuss their ideas for color schemes, furniture styles, and other problems of relevance to the project. Mark feels that this project will be a co-operative effort all around. He and his committee work in coordination with the Advisory board, and also in co-operation with the wishes of the entire population of the dorm.

"This is not just a small group effort," Mark explained. "All of the proposals are voted on by the house." In this way everyone has the opportunity to share in the planning.

The project seems to be well planned, and the residents of Thatcher seem quite optimistic about making the temporary move to Cashin at the slightly higher price, in order to fix up their "home."

With all this careful planning, though, has anyone given any consideration to the future plans of Thatcher's ghost? It seems not.

Dickinson Loses, Antenna To Go Up

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

WMUA's transmitter and antenna is going up on Emily Dickinson House, according to Glenn Elters, President of the Student Senate.

He resolved to have an open discussion with members of the dormitory after he met with Dr. Randolph W. Bromery and representatives from WMUA and Dickinson yesterday morning in Bromery's office.

"They'll have to decide for themselves whether to move or to accept the fact," said Elters of those dormitory residents opposing installation of the equipment.

Most members of the house are resigned to the fact that the decision has been made and will finally be carried out after four years, he said.

"If I hear pressing arguments of reasonable principles that would give cause to investigate, I will, "Elters added, "but so far there have been no reasons of substance, just personal objections."

No other findings were uncovered in addition to the engineering report sponsored by WMUA previously.

It was again brought up, however, that the transmittor probably would cause interference and Orchard Hill would not be able to receive other stations.

Southwest Hit By BombScares

By ROBERT SCHEIER
Staff Reporter

The week got off to a bad start early Monday morning for many Southwest residents when bomb scares hit six dorms in the residential area, following an earlier wave of threats coming early Friday morning and Saturday.

The first scare came at 4:45 A.M., at J.Q.A., followed by scares at Patterson, Crampton, Washington, Adams, and Cance houses. Although police through the dorms encouraging the residents to leave, not all of the affected students decided to forsake their warm beds for the pre-dawn chill.

The current epidemic of incidents-which has hit Patterson, for example, with seven scares in the last four days- has stirred interest in a possible solution.

Steve Herman, head of residence in J.Q.A. Upper, says that "the general consensus of opinion seems to be to keep a low key about the entire thing. For the present, we don't know what else to do." Other universities, such as B.U. and Northeastern, have tried plans such as leaving it up to the students to decide whether or not to leave a threatened building. However, as Mr. Herman says, "the more these schools do so, the worse the problem gets."

Boycott Planners Collect 600Signatures

by BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

Meeting late last night in a Southwest apartment, the organizers of the "boycott of mandatory meal ticket" payments disclosed that approximately 600 signatures have already been gathered in support of the boycott.

The organizers yesterday set-up tables in the three Southwest dining commons and began distributing fact sheets to the residents of Southwest and letters, which will be sent home to parents, in an effort to gain widespread support for the action, which would delay payment of the Board rates until at least January 27, 1971.

According to one of the co-ordinators of the action, "The administration has already seemed to react very strongly to the boycott...They are seriously attempting to find constructive proposals to deal with the student's grievances," he added.

The fact sheet being distributed describes how the mandatory board payments limit the "Free expression of varying lifestyles."

"This is a chance for students to really do something instead of just complaining about the quality of the food" said one of the students organizing the boycott.

The fact sheet informs students that "the University can't touch you until registration day January 27, 1971. That is two months they will be out of your much needed money...After that the risk depends upon the then present state of affairs and the number of people involved."

Allen Davis, Head of Residence in Washington Lower and one of the Co-ordinators of the boycott, told the Collegian late last night, that "the worst that can happen if the student withholds his payments and the boycott ensues for the two months, will be that the students will have to pay a late fee to register."

He stressed that students "will not be removed from the University for non-payment."

The fact sheet and the letter being sent home to parents asking for support of the boycott will be passed out in dormitories today. The dining commons' petition tables will continue gathering signatures today and Wednesday.

3 Lot To Get Stuck

The parking lot in front of Herter Hall, affectionately known as "3 lot," disappears within a week. Someone is sticking a building up on the lot and you can't park there is that's going to happen. So from now on, all those with 3 lot stickers will park in Haigis Mall and 12 lot. And if you don't have a 3 sticker and if Ferriter finds you where you aren't supposed to be, you'll get towed.

New Community Paper Springs Up In Valley

Out of the fertile imaginations of two former staffers of the Amherst Student has arisen a new community newspaper called The Valley Review.

According to Bob Nathan, one of the paper's co-founders and former executive editor of the Student, the Review is aimed at the Five Colleges and their host communities.

He said the Review is an attempt to get people to "talk back and forth about their mutual interests."

Published monthly, the Review features regular movie, book, restaurant and record reviews. It also contains a number of major features. This month's issue contains a story on Science fiction as a literary genre.

Nathan likes to think of his publication as a "magapaper." It has the format of a newspaper and the content of a magazine. He said it is kind of Nathan and his partner Henry Bromell are seeking material for the Valley Review. Any manuscripts intended for publication can be sent to them at 119 Bay Road, So. Hadley.

Defense Demands Mistrial In Calley Court Martial

In legal arguments after the court martial jury had been sent from the room, prosecutor Capt. Aubrey Daniel said of Calley:

"His intent was to kill anyone that was there."

The testimony from Thomas W. Turner, 24, a University of Nebraska student, was calculated to bolster the government's contention that Calley premeditated themurder of 102 unarmed Vietnamese civilians at My Lai March 16, 1968. The maximum penalty upon conviction is death.

"I think it's devastating. I think it's the type of testimony that's critical to a man...if that evidence is permitted to stay, the impact of that evidence is very, very prejudicial."

Latimer said Turner was testifying for the first time that groups of Vietnamese were exterminated by Calley over an hour and a half period. Moreover, the defense lawyer said, the witness had refused to submit to defense interrogation before his witness stand appearance.

Turner's testimony involved a drainage ditch at My Lai, where he estimated that 90 to 100 Vietnamese came under the sights of Calley's M16 rifle at intervals during the 90 minute period. This appeared to forestall any defense claim that the shootings were a spur of the moment, unpremeditated sequence.

Earlier, Calley's former GI radio operator at My Lai said a white robed monk in a posture of prayer was among the lieutenant's final targets that day.

The witness, Charles Sledge, 23, Sardis, Miss., clasped his hands in front of his face, pointed upward, finger tip to finger tip to illustrate how the unidentified monk prayed for his life.

"The priest was saying, 'No Viet Cong,' and holding his hands like this," Sledge testified. "Lt. Calley asked him a few more questions, then hit him with the butt of his rifle in the mouth."

Q. What did the priest do?

A. He started falling back, doing this with his hands (again illustrating). Lt. Calley took his rifle, and fired point blank into his face.

Q. What happened?

A. His head was blown off.

On cross examination, Sledge said it was possible the victim could have been disguised as a monk, and could have had weapons concealed on his person that he might have been reaching for while seeming to gesture in prayer.

Farmer Resigns HEW Post; Cites No Disillusionment

WASHINGTON (AP)—James Farmer, most widely known Negro official in the administration, resigned Monday in a manner obviously intended to discourage speculation that there had been any break with the President despite some past criticisms of Nixon policies.

The outgoing assistant secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, met for 26 minutes with President Nixon at the White House. Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler then made public an exchange of letters and told newsmen Farmer is leaving "on a very, very good basis" in his relations with the chief executive.

Farmer's letter of resignation said he wants to leave his post, effective Dec. 21, because of personal considerations and added "I greatly appreciate the opportunity I have had during the past year and a half to further this administration's efforts on behalf ot the American people, particularly blacks and other minorities."

Nowhere in his four paragraph letter did Farmer indicate any disillusionment with Nixon racial policies and, in conclusion, the founder and former head of the Congress of Racial Equality, told the President "I am available for whatever service my future commitments will allow."

In his "Dear Jim" letter Nixon said he is accepting the resignation with deep regret, praised Farmer's work and said his counsel has not been limited to HEW "but has been drawn upon and respected throughout the administration. Although you are leaving the official family, I look forward to continuing to rely on you for advice and assistance in the years ahead."

Farmer did not have a major voice in shaping administration racial policies and was not involved in civil rights enforcement. His post at HEW concerned department management and child development programs.

Union Threatens Railway Strike, Nixon Powerless To Intervene

WASHINGTON (AP)-Union leaders told President Nixon they will shut down the railroad industry in a nationwide strike Thursday unless they win their dispute over wages and working conditions, informed sources said Monday.

The four AFL—CIO unions in the dispute will be legally free to strike at 12:01 a.m. Thursday and said in a letter to Nixon that unless they reach a settlement, "We will exercise that right."

Sources said virtually continuous negotiations are getting nowhere.

A nationwide rail strike would quickly cripple transportation of passengers and goods including the annual flood of Christmas mail. The Post Office Department already has advised Americans to mail early because of the strike threat.

Nixon has no further delaying power under current labor law. Some 400 union lobbyists plan a major campaign on Capitol Hill starting Tuesday to try to talk members of Congress out of intervening with a special law. Congress has enacted such laws three times since 1963 to halt similar nationwide rail strikes or strike threats.

The four unions representing nearly 500,000 railroad clerks, trainmen, track maintenance workers and dining car employes have rejected the biggest wage offer in rail history, which industry negotiators have said is final.

Railroad negotiators, headed by John P. Hiltz, adopted the recommendations of a president emergency board in offering a three year package of wage hikes averaging some 37 per cent, or $1.32 per hour on top of current average wages ranging from $3.45 to $3.60 per hour. The offer also includes work rule changes demanded by the railroads for more efficient operation.

The unions demanded bigger wage hikes plus cost of living pay, improved vacations, holidays and other benefits. The only fringe benefit offered by the industry is insurance improvements.

Union leaders said also the work rules changes demanded by the industry would eliminate thousands of jobs, speed up work for all employes and force many to move from cities where they have lived all their lives.

Swiss Envoy Kidnaped

RIO DEJANEIRO, Brazil (AP)—Terrorist commandos shot a bodyguard and kidnaped the Swiss ambassador Monday in the 15th political abduction in the Western Hemisphere since September 1969.

Residents who saw the two minute commando operation on a quiet residential street said seven men and a blonde woman took part.

Police threw up roadblocks around this seaside city and announced hours after the abduction they had picked up a man driving a car identified as one of those used in the operation. He was not identified and further details were not reported.

The witnesses said Ambassador Giovanni Enrice Bucher apparently was not harmed, although the boydguard, federal agent Helio Carvalho de Araujo, was wounded by three gunshots.

In Bern, the Swiss government said it sent a note to the Brazilian government demanding immediate steps to obtain the release of Bucher, a 57 year old bachelor and one of the most popular members of the diplomatic corps in Rio de Janeiro.

He is a member of a family that owns a large resort hotel chain in Switzerland and Italy.

Leaflets left at the scene of the kidnaping identified the commandos as members of the National Liberation Alliance which carried out three previous kidnapings in Brazil. Its leader, Joaquim Camara Ferreira, collapsed and died of a heart attack while being taken into custody last month, police said. With the loss of Ferreira the organization was believed to have fondered and officials said then they expected no more political abductions in Brazil.

The alliance staged the first of what turned out to be a rash of kidnapings in the Americas, with the seizure of U.S. Ambassador C. Burke Elbrick on Sept. 4, 1969. He was freed in exchange for the release of 15 political prisoners.

In three of this hemisphere's political abductions three victims have been killed. Others have been freed, including Elbrick, for the release of a total of 83 prisoners. Two victims remain in the hands of kidnapers since midsummer.

Fed. Reserve Chairman Issues Call For Anti-Inflation Measures

LOS ANGELES (AP)- Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur F. Burns said Monday night strong new measures, ranging from compulsory arbitration of big labor contracts to a price wage review board, may be needed to fight inflation.

Burns, in a speech prepared for a "Great Issues Series" at Pepperdine College, said President Nixon's bid to role back oil price increases was constructive but the Fed. chairman added:

"If further steps should prove necessary to reduce upward pressures on costs and prices, numerous other measures might be taken to improve the functioning of our markets."

Burns reeled off eleven possible steps government could take in trying to keep prices and wages from going up. He said the President and the Congress could determine best what will be needed.

Burns said the nation needs to recognize the government now is dealing with the twin problems of persistent inflation and high unemployment and "that the classical remedies may not work well enough or fast enough in this case.

"Monetary and fiscal policies can readily cope with inflation alone or with recession alone. But, within the limits of our national patience, they cannot by themselves now be counted on to restore full employment, without at the same time releasing a new wave of inflation."

Although the board is independent, Burns and Nixon often confer on economic strategy. Burns has been one of the strongest supporters in the government of direct federal action to influence wage and price boost.

He said liberalization of import quotas on oil and other commodities might be needed, as well as vigorous enforcement of antitrust laws, more federal training programs to increase the supply of skilled workers, and creation of local efficiency councils.

Burns said a situation might call for "compulsory arbitration of big labor disputes in industries that vitally involve the public interest.

"We might bring under an incomes policy, also, the establishment of a high level price and wage review board which, while lacking enforcement power, would have broad authority to investigate, advise and recommend on price and wage changes."

An incomes policy is a general phrase covering use of direct government pressure on wages and prices. Up to last Friday, Nixon has avoided even mild application of such a policy.

Burns suggested tax breaks for industry to stimulate plant improvements, suspending a federal law establishing the prevailing wages in the construction trades, and changing minimum wage laws "in the interest of improving job opportunities for teenagers."

Vietnam Troop Cuts Announced

SAIGON (AP)-Reports from Cambodia Monday indicated the possible capture of a district headquarters by Communist led forces. There was virtually no fighting in South Vietnam and fresh American troop cuts were announced.

The U.S. Command in Saigon said 11,800 men would be cut from the troop rosters by the end of the year, reducing American strength in Vietnam to 344,000.

The first reduction of 6,100 men already has gone into effect, giving soldiers with more than 10 months service in Vietnam a chance to be home by Christmas. Those with less time in country have been reassigned to other units, thus reducing the number of replacements being sent to Vietnam.

There were no reports of significant ground action involving American or South Vietnamese forces since Sunday's Viet Cong attack on government units in the U Minh Forest, South Vietnamese soldiers repulsed that attack, killing two enemy at a cost of four wounded.

The Cambodian command reported losing radio contact with a battalion of government troops defending the district capital of Peam Chikang, 37 miles northeast of Phnom Penh. Contact was cut off after a day of fighting, and it was feared the Cambodian battalion had been overrun by Viet Cong and North Vietnamese units.

Communist led forces also tightened their control on Highway 4, running south from Phnom Penh to the Gulf of Siam, and engaged Cambodian government units in a 9 1/2 hour battle at Prek Thnot Dam on the Thnot River 40 miles west of the capital.

Late Night Pests Plague Talk Shows

NEW YORK (AP)-Network concern over disruptions and uninvited guests on late night talk shows has resulted in the posting of extra guards when controversial guests are booked or when trouble is suspected.

"You always have that fear-that someone is going to jump onto the stage from the audience," sud one talk show spokesman. Another said, "We have to have guards. It takes a lot of bread to stop taping or cancel a show."

Every network talk show has had interruptions or uninvited guests. Two such events in the past few weeks illustrate their concern.

Opposing factions of homosexuals threatened to break up the Dick Cavett show the Friday after Thanksgiving. A leader of one faction had been booked as a guest on the ABC show and a leader of another faction had not been.

Members of the second group threatened in advance to breakup the show unless they too were heard.

A compromise was reached at the last minute and both sides were represented on the show.

"We had no problems," said a Cavett spokesman, "but we did have plenty of studio security and policemen were on call in the vicinity."

On a talk show a few weeks ago a comedian walked onto the stage and complained on camera that he couldn't get a booking on the show.

Instead of having guards hustle the man offstage, and erasing it from the tape before air time, the talk show host let the man give part of his comedy routine. It was then passed off as a planned stunt.

All three network talk shows were interrupted by black jazz musicians who contended they were being excluded from television.

The David Frost show, which is taped here by Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. for syndication, reported no trouble. But in London about 20 persons including American Yippie leader Jerry Rubin took over Frost's live show there Nov. 7. The youths shouted obscenities and forced Frost and a guest into another studio to complete the show.

Afterwards, Frost said, "I suspect this has turned out as the most powerful commercial ever for law and order."

IRS Claims Losses To Crime

SWANSEA, Mass.(AP)—The acting director of the Internal Revenue Service in the Boston district said Monday that $1.075 billion in untaxed money was funneled nationally by organized crime into legitimate businesses this year.

Elmer H. Klinsman made the statement to a tax practitioners' forum sponsored by the Southeastern Massachusetts Chapter of the Society of Certified Public Accountants.

He said the money comes from such activities as loan sharking, naracotics, prostitution and untaxed liquor and goes into 159 types of legitimate business from real estate to night clubs.

Saving The Railroads

Washington--The question of what to do about American passenger railroads is still very much on the Administration's mind. There is no doubt that the railroads are losing money on passenger business. If they had their druthers, they would just stay with freight. At the same time, the public's need for passenger trains, particularly commuter trains, is great.

What is the solution? Professor Heinrich Applebaum, who holds the Casey Jones chair of railroad philosophy at Pullman University, has come up with a radical idea that could save both the railroads and the needed passenger service.

Prof. Applebaum says the solution to the problem can be found in large aluminum containers which are now being used for freight.

These containers are placed on trains already packed, and unloaded the same way. This saves companies money in freight handling, loss due to pilferage and breakage, and also saves time.

Applebaum claims there is no reason you can't use the same containers for people.

This is how it would operate: Let us assume that 150 people are going to take the 7:30 a.m. from Greenwich, Connecticut. When they arrived at the platform, they would be placed horizontally in the containers. (This would give everyone an extra hour's sleep to New York.) The container would be insulated as well as air-conditioned.

When everyone was squeezed in the container it would be sealed. Then a freight train going through Greenwich would stop and the container would be hoisted on board a flatcar.

The same thing would happen all along the way. Commuters in containers at Portchester, Rye and Larchmont would all be waiting to be picked up by the Freight train.

When the train arrived at Grand Central Station, the containers would be taken off by cranes and opened on the platform, and everyone could go to work.

The reverse would happen in the evening, Applebaum said, except in this case, to break the monotony, the commuters would be loaded in vertically.

The beauty of the plan, says Applebaum, is that by using containers, railroads could cut the cost of a ticket from Greenwich to New York by $3.50.

They could also profit by the fact that they would not have to build new passenger trains, and they could eliminate the bar cars.

Psychologically, they wouldn't have to worry about customer relations, as the commuter service would be run by the freight department.

The big advantage of this is that once the railroads were able to legitimately treat passengers as freight, they would improve their service rather than try to discourage people from using the railroads.

Applebaum says that, at the moment, the container idea would only be practical on short runs, but he felt that as time went on a method could be developed for long runs to freeze people in refrigerator cars and then thaw them out when they reach their destinations.

The Department of Transportation, which is trying to find a solution to the passenger train problem, has expressed great interest in the Applebaum plan. A spokesman for the department said:

Brent linger's Guerillas

This semester's political activity has been a far cry from that of last semester. Last year there was significant anti-war activity throughout most of the year, and in the spring UMass took part in the nationwide student strike. When school resumed in September, there was a markedly different atmosphere on this campus. Although the rhetoric of the strike had it that we would stay on strike until the three demands were met, no one realistically expected a continuation of the strike this fall. The first major gripe anyone had concerned registering for courses, an unmistakeable return to business as usual.

There is one group on this campus which has of late been attempting to arouse the community out of its political sleep. The guerilla theater group, organized out of one of John Brentlinger Philosophy classes, has begun to give presentations. Their first took place in conjunction with the appearance of a Dow recruiter on campus. The second occured this past weekend. when John D. III came to the Five College Community with his offer of $25,000 for an environmental project. (Both presentations were pictured in the Collegian.) These guerilla performances have been good thus far, although the group's inexperience has shown through in the area of audience participation, but in general their shows must be reviewed as well done.

Aesthetic quality aside, however, the presence of the guerilla theater is encouraging. In sharp contrast to a rally of radical zealots screaming "Off the pigs, all power to the people, right on," guerilla theater is entertaining, not alienating. Guerilla theater is a desirable alternative to the narcissistic rituals we all went through in the old days.

The guerilla group does not want the community to forget that the vague generalities of our "troubled times" touch our lives. They try to show the interrelations of the problems and the problemmakers. Industrial pollution is an inherent problem in an industrial society. If the system creates problems by its very nature, one cannot expect that same system to solve these problems. In addition they are trying to battle the feeling of frustration felt by many in the face of an overwhelming power structure. Everyone has been told that you can't fight City Hall; now, when it is so necessary to question all the City Halls of 1970 America, it is still as frustrating as it ever was. Guerilla theater is good for the spirit; the spirit needs all the allies it can get.

Some people are reacting unfavorably to the Guerilla Theater group. Personally I enjoy their performances, feel they are filling an important void, and cannot help but thinking that they are good for UMass. Let me explain this last.

Saturday night I went to the Underground movies in Herter. During intermission the Guerrilla Theater Group performed in the lobby. The ambiance of the Herter lobby Saturday night was one of the most pleasant sensations I have ever felt on this campus. There was life there, life, something which is in short supply around here. They are vital, they are real, they are doing something, they are an asset. Agree with their politics or not, can you disagree that this dead campus does not need people who practice life? I salute the Guerilla theater group. Peace.

Harvard Supports UFW

By STEPHEN HOLT,
Globe Correspondent

Harvard Administrative Vice President L. Gard Wiggins has announced that Harvard dining halls will stop purchasing all lettuce except that picked by the United Farm Workers.

The announcement came in response to a recommendation by Harvard's Committee on House and Undergraduate Life. That committee, made up of students, faculty and administrators, made its recommendations last week after a student-organized boycott against non-union lettuce virtually closed down three Harvard dining halls for several meals last month.

Wiggins' statement said that "the migratory farm workers' plight-too long neglected - is a matter of intense human and social concern. This is in no sense an ordinary collective bargaining dispute.

"Migratory farm workers do not enjoy the legal protection for selforganization and collective bargaining available to American workers generally, nor the legal remedies for securing recognition and resolving questions of representation."

Senior John H. Petrey, a member of the student group which organized last month's boycott in support of the United Farm Workers, said that he was "very pleasantly surprised" by Wiggins' statement.

"It's very important for an institution such as Harvard to take a positive stand on an issue like this," Petrey said. "This is the first time Harvard has committed itself in this way on a matter of economic policy. In addition to its direct economic effect on the lettuce boycott, the move will free people who have been working on this issue at Harvard and allow them to spend more time working in the non-student community."

Come Back, Rocky!

For those of you who haven't heard, the Five College community had a distinguished visitor on Sunday. Yup, it was none other than John D. Rockefeller III and his checkbook full of surprises. It seems that Rocky is on a national mission to "close the gap between youth and the Establishment." In his opinion, a few bucks for a progressive cause, such as Ecological research, will strike a mortal blow at the polarization which, as we all know, is pitting father against son, mother against daughter, with the octogenarians and infants standing in the sidelines calling each other dirty names.

Well, as expected, the Five College Committee to Protest the Defiling of Academic Virginity by Rockefeller Dollars was out in full force to tell Rocky where to go. The UMASS Guerilla Troupe, which tickeled us pink when the folks from DOW dropped by the other day, presented another theatrical jolly. Led by John Clayton, of the UMASS English Dept., and John Brentlinger, of the UMASS Philosophy Dept., both of whom are talented thesbianic moralists, the troupe histrionically refused to accept Rocky's money, which is sort of unusual, because Rocky was planning to donate the money to ENVIRONMENTAL research, not to English or Philosophical research.

Subsequently, the virtuous people from the Five College Interim Planning Committee rejected Rocky's offer, because, as every schoolboy knows, he aquired his money by exploiting and oppressing the "Third World" (so what else is new?). I wonder if the environmental researchers who were to utilize his money had any say in the matter.

Poor Rocky. Back to his Bar Barbor retreat he goes, probably to repent for all of his sins. Meanwhile, the Connecticut River will get even more polluted, and the "Generation Gap" will expand into a civil war which will inevitably destroy Western Civilization.

I do hope Rocky will reconsider his offer. I have s me friends at the Craftsmans Guild who would be simply overjoyed if Rocky offered them 25,000 dollars. If the moralists don't want to get their hands soiled, they should at least give the ungodly the opportunity to do so.

No Way To Get Back

Soft, silent snow slowly swirled and fell, burying the bare, brown earth. A solitary figure trudged across the field by the pond, his footprints weaving an erratic line that was quickly covered by the drifting and billowing snow.

Earlier he had been in a room lit by a dim candle, the fragrant smell of jasmin rising from a small brass burner pervading the atmosphere and stamping itself indelibly on his brain.

Now he was alone and cold and he was shivering underneath his coat. Alone.

Twenty-two stories in the air he had stood arm in arm with a person he loved and they looked out and say the gray sky suddenly vanish in a veil of white. Laughing, they lay side by side in the quiet room and listened to the wind howling.

Now the wind was howling in his ears much louder and the swirling white was blinding him.

She had stood by the door-frame with tears in her eyes, whispered I'm sorry. And he nodded, looking at the floor, and barely able to speak, it's okay, it's okay.

His mind wandered over the thousand little things they had done together, how they had walked by the pond in the spring and watched the ducks and then went and sat on a hill and watched the sun go down. And later in each other's arms they lay in bed and talked and listened and finally fell asleep, in each other's arms, but those two crazy guys across the hall went out and banged on the window to wake them up.

His throat began to tighten and hot tears queezed out of the corners of his eyes. Damn, what had happened? I loved her.

Elevators weren't made to cry in. People use them too much for them to be that private. They gave him a strange look and shrugged it off. Stick around here long enough and you see one of everything, I guess.

But he had to cry or burst. Even if the elevator was full of people. What had happened?

The weatherman had predicted snow and it gave him a cozy feeling, sort of. Back when he was a kid and it began to snow, he would get up and press his nose against the window and watch. The snowplows with the extra headlights would come down the street, but he couldn't hear them over the wind. And the next morning was always clear and bright and his father would wake him up to go and shovel.

It was really blowing hard and the snow had frozen to ice on his scarf. He had forgotten his gloves back in that still, still room. No way to get them back now. What had happened?

They just lay there and listened and then it was time for him to leave. Leave the room and leave her life. He knew it was coming before he ever went over there. Why did he even bother? That's the way it always goes. Too bad.

Snow, goddam snow. By the end of a week it will be black and ugly. Then it will melt and make mud. Everything's made out of mud, not this pure, white snow.

He didn't live far from that peaceful room where he had left most of his feelings, but it would have been a long walk anywhere that night.

Book Review

A Man for Our Times

The Godfather
Mario Puzo

The Godfather, a Fawcett Crest Book by Mario Puzo, introduces the reader to an ordinary, 1945 type man known as Don Corleone. The Don lives in New York, has four children, runs an olive oil import business and is a member of the Mafia. And it is this last fact which totally prohibits any normalcy within his life. His daughters wedding ceremony is turned into a business meeting and attendance is of friendship to the Don. The deathbed visit of a friend is a matter of compulsion and compliance with the unwritten laws and taboos of the Mafia. Any degree of normalcy is destroyed by the Don's position in the Mafia.

The novel introduces its readers to a very powerful and well developed character-Don Corleone. We see him living, dying, killing, deciding, planning, scheeming, and he wins our respect with every move. Puzo has been careful to win our simpathy by showing us a Naturalistic excuse for the Don's involvement and position in the Mafia. We are all too ready to accept what he is doing is justified and therefore acceptable. Much of the interest in The Godfather comes through admiration and interest in the Don. His style, his emotions, when they are expressed, his power are all qualities to be envied and worshiped by the reader. Minor characters like Johnny Fontane and Sonny are of little value to the reader except when they enteract with the Don to whom the emphasis is always shifted. A great personality development emerges and it is this quality (like in John leCarre's novel Small Town in Germany) that provides the page-turning effect throughout the novel.

However, Puzo uses a highly descriptive and forceful style in his writing. Unfortunately, this is not a style that can simply be "turned-on" or "turned-off" at the author's discretion. Consequently, passages that are in need, and benefit, from this style are successful but sections that are more effectly left to the imagination are destroyed by the style of the author's reporting. For example, the account of the death of Kartoum, a $600,000 horse whose destruction served as a warning to a Hollywood producer that Johnny Fontane deserved a movie part, would have been more effective had Puzo expanded his skill as a fine author, which he is, and utilized a less descriptive stule of writing.

Also, Mario Puzo, in an obvious attempt to expand his audience of readers beyond those interested in historical fiction and the Mafia chose to insert various passages most familiar to those readers of The Love Machine and Valley of the Dolls type stories. This was an almost tragic mistake by Puzo in an attempt to provide a wider interest range for his novel. The section on Johnny Fontane is almost completely destroyed by Puzo's insertion of The Love Machine type trash.

Despite its faults, and despite the mistaken attempt for an audience expansion, The Godfather can, and will, offer any reader an enjoyable and profitable experience.

Campus Comment

Save The Bay!

Dear Friends and Fellow Students,

Our campus sits alonz the northwest edge of Escambia Bay, which empties into the Gulf of Mexico at Pensacola, Florida. So far this year, Escambia Bay has suffered over 60 major fish kills, each one of close to or more than a million fish - food fish, sport fish, 'commercial fish', you name it.

These kills have been traced to industries and municipalities just north of and on the bay, which have been using the Escambia River and the bay for a dump. One such industry is Monsanto Co., which, as of January, 1970, was dumping into the river, and the bay, the following wates:

10,000 lbs/day 5 day biological oxygen demand
3,900 lbs/day total organic carbon
1,875 lbs/day TKN
1,331 lbs/day nitrite nitrogen
1,104 lbs/day ammonia nitrogen & nitrite
421 lbs/day total phosphate
264 lbs/day ortho phosphate

One of Monsanto's most advertized and ecologically deleterious products is Astro Turf, an artificial grass; some of its other products are Arochlor (1250) compounds and herbicides. Because our public officials have been tragically slow to respond, and because citizen initiated 'pollution control' legislation is being successively weakened and stifled, and will have only moderate 'success' if ever passed, we have concluded that only economic sanctions can force the industries involved to recycle their wastes and quit using the Escambia River - the public domain - for a dump.

We intend to take sanctions against all industries, of which there are six locally, dumping into the Escambia River and the bay. To establish our effectiveness, we have decided to begin by calling for a boycott of Astro Turf, the Monsanto product that depends most heavily on the college market. We desperately need your support. There is nothing less at stake than the bay itself - the bay which is a integral part of our biosphere, is essential to a balanced environment.

It doesn't take much thought to realize that Escambia Bay is about as important to you as it is to us. By supporting our boycott you not only deny revenue to an enemy of the bay, you also help assert, for once, that our waters and our skies are not dumps, and that even large industries must be held responsible for their wastes.

- We ask that you put up with natural grass for a good while longer
- We ask that you compell your friends and local industries not to buy Astro Turf and other Monsanto products
- We very respectfully and urgently request that you obtain, through your student government and alumni associations, a binding, official promise not to purchase Astro Turf until Monsanto quits dumping its wastes into Escambia River and Escambia Bay.
- We recommend that before you or your college administration buy any other sort of artifical grass, you determine that manufacturer is not, like Monsanto, using the environment for a dump.

We need your active responses to this appeal, even if you have no need at your institution for Astro Turf. Your support is urgently requested. Please send us notification of your administration's primise not to purchase Astro Turf as soon as it can be obtained.

Redirected Priorities

To the Editor:

A concern for the wasteful spending of the American economy today has initiated a nationwide college campaign to reorganize spending priorities. The ultimate goal of this organization, Perspective on Priorities (POP), is to rechannel those needlessly spent funds into a field which there has always been a desperate lack of money - that of cancer research. This is not a fund-raising drive, as the money collected may be sent directly to any organization concerned with cancer; the main idea behind POP is that the nation's finances will be redirected toward an area other than those connected with defense industries, the space program, etc.

The Christmas season is the appropriate time for this national movement, now that consumers and manufacturers both are spending massive amounts of money to promote a "spirit of Christmas" that has no meaning for those children who are slowly dying of cancer. POP asks that students and adults all over the country take a second look at Christmas, and give their gifts to others in the form of a donation to a local cancer chapter. This widespread redirection of consumer spending will hopefully force both private industry and the government to form a new "perspective on priorities."

Volunteers are needed on all campuses immediately to coordinate the publicity for POP in their respective areas. For more information, contact.

DVP To Bring LSD Researcher Here

By C. R. HAMBERG
News Editor

Dr. Jean Houston, Director of the Foundation for Mind Research in New York City and pioneer LSD researcher, will arrive at UMass tonight for a full schedule of lectures, discussions, and teaching during her one-day stay.

Sponsored by Room To Move Drug Drop-In Center and the Distinguished Visitors Program, Dr. Houston's visit will include an open coffee hour tomorrow afternoon from 2:30 to 4:30 in the Colonial Lounge and a DVP lecture entitled "Evolution Now" tomorrow night at 8:30 in the Student Union Ballroom. Her lecture will deal with some of the mind research currently being done to explain the expansion and development of man's natural capacities.

In addition, Dr. Houston is scheduled to participate in a Psychology 391-591 course on "Altered States of Consciousness" this evening, an informal training session on psychedelic drugs at the Drug Drop-In Center tomorrow morning, and speak on "The Use of Trance in Education" at the Center for Humanistic Education tomorrow afternoon.

She will also speak to a five-college faculty seminar on "The Role of the Teacher as a Spiritual Guide" tomorrow evening.

Dr. Houston received her B.A. from Barnard College and Ph.D. from Columbia University. She has taught on the faculties of religion, philosophy, and psychology at Columbia, Hunter College and Marymont College, and The New School for Social Research.

On the basis of her LSD research she co-authored with her husband Robert E.L. Masters two books, The Varieties of Psychedelic Experience and Psychedelic Art, as well as many shorter writings on mind-altering drugs.

She is currently doing extensive research in altered states of consciousness without drugs, evoking mind-body potentials, creativity, accelerated learning, subjective time, the psychology of genius, eidetic imagery, visual thinking, and the laboratory induction of religious-type experiences.

Recent articles in the New York Times and Time Magazine have examined Masters and Houston's work on "altered states of consciousness" making religious and psychical experiences possible to ordinary people. Using a variety of non-drug stimuli such as guided meditation, multi-sensory sound and light environments, and electrical stimulation of the brain, these altered states have been observed in hundreds of laboratory experiments.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Drop II - S Now

By Gilbert J. Salk

Ramblings...

If you're interested in draft resistance, you've probably heard of Father Daniel Berrigan. He and his brother joined seven other priests in destroying Selective Service files in Catonsville, Maryland about a year or so ago. After the trial, Dan went underground for a while. During that time, he was scheduled to give a sermon at Smith College. Instead, he sent a tape of what he planned to say. He talks about the Christian necessity of resistance, and about being underground. A copy of the tape will be played and discussed in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union at Noon Wednesday, Dec. 9. There will be free coffee, tea, and donuts....

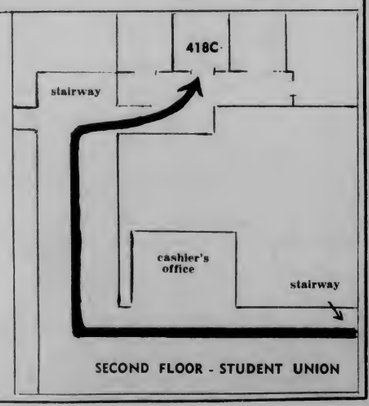
Is your lottery number over 195? Were you born before Jan. 1, 1951? If you can answer yes to both questions, you have won the first round of the lottery game. You should write immediately to your local board and tell them that you wish to give up your deferment and be reclassified I-A innediately, if not sooner. Upon receipt of the letter, the board is required to place you in this year's eligibility pool, which ends Dec. 31. Send your letters Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested, and keep a copy. When the receipt comes back, staple it to your copy and save it. You will be SAFE. Don't let paranoia stop you from doing this new. It's for real....

If, on the other hand, you have a low number, don't give up your deferment. If your board has passed your number, you get stuck in something called an extended liability pool, and you'll get called before they start calling people in the new year's pool. See a draft counselor for advice....

What about the future of student deferments? Let me exercise my own paranoia for a moment and put myself out on a limb. In April, Dick Nixon will stage another Cambodia, or something equally stupid. This will result in campus demonstrations, disruptions, and riots across the country. The Nixon Administration will use these as an excuse to take away from students their draft-refuge. I predict that in June 1971 Richard Nixon will announce that the Selective Service System will give no new II-S classifications....

Did you know that there is a special deferment for some elected officials? 'Tis true! All State and Federal elected offices carry with them an automatic exemption from the draft. Of course, most are far too old to fight in the wars they send their sons to anyway, but it is interesting to note that that their exemption is guaranteed by law. If you have no other way to beat the draft, run for Congress or for State Rep...

Christmas is coming, in case you haven't noticed. Don't forget to send a card to each member of your local board reminding him (sorry, Women's Lib, but there are almost no women on draft boards) that the word is peace on earth, good will to all men--even if their skins are yellow, red, brown, or black. A picture of a Vietnamese peasant on a cross might be appropriate. (They say that Christ is in all men.)....



Peace.

Hughes Alive And Well, In Full Control

LAS VEGAS (AP)-Billionaire recluse Howard Hughes was quoted Monday as saying he has fired two of his top executives and is in full control of his giant industrial and financial empire. Hughes reported he is feeling well, on vacation on the Bahamas.

Gov. Paul Laxalt and Dist. Atty. George Franklin said they spoke to Hughes in a predawn telephone conversation and that he said he personally ordered the firing of Robert Maheu and Jack Hopper, the two top executives in his $300 million Nevada gambling, real estate and mining operation.

"He said he felt fine and had just gone there for a vacation," Laxalt said of his telephone conversation with Hughes. "He was very concerned about speculation he had been kidnaped and was not going to return here."

Laxalt, who has talked to Hughes several times in the past, said there was no question in his mind that he was speaking with Hughes.

"He is in the Bahamas at the Britannia Hotel," said the governor. "He even joked about being on the ninth floor again."

The telephone call apparently ended a corporate struggle that surfaced Friday when officials of the Houston based Hughes Tool Co., parent firm of his $2 billion empire, fired Maheu and Cooper.

Maheu, 53, a former FBI agent long acquainted with Hughes, was hired four years ago as chief executive of Hughes Nevada Operations. He had refused to be fired last week, saying: "Hughes wouldn't do that." Saturday, Maheu obtained a court order prohibiting anyone from interfering with his control of Hughes' Nevada properties. The order was still in effect Monday, with a hearing set for Dec. 14.

Franklin was asked if he felt Hughes was still boss of the organization. "Absolutely," he said. "He's merely firing a couple of people that were working for him."

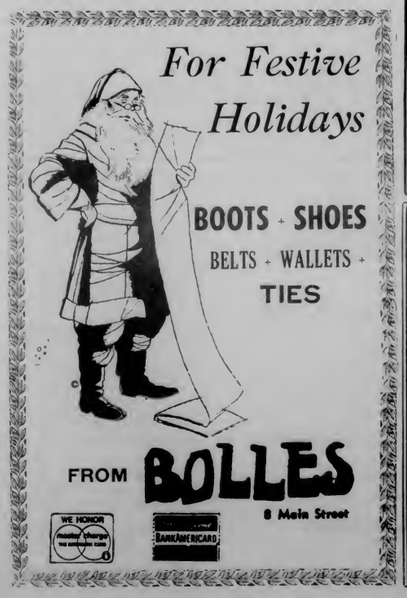
Laxalt and Franklin said Hughes called them at 1:30 a.m., Nevada time, and talked about an hour.

"He initiated the call. He indicated he wanted to talk to us," the governor said. "He just wanted to clear up the misunderstandings that have arisen in the press."

Chancellor Signs Treaty With Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP)-Chancellor Willy Brandt of West Germany signed Monday a historic pact that recognizes the Oder Neisse line as Poland's western border, giving this Communist country 40,000 square miles of former German territory.

He then told West Germans in a radio and television address from the Polish capital: :"The treaty should mark an end to the evil past, full of pain and suffering.



"...Nothing was lost that had not been lost long ago, lost not by us who carry now and have carried the public responsibility, but lost by a criminal regime-National Socialism."

The pact is aimed at normalizing relations between West Germany and Poland, which lost six million citizens to Nazi aggression.

Brandt said the treaty should "build a bridge between both states and nations. It is to open the way to reunification of families. And may the frontiers divide us less than before..."

Wladyslaw Gomulka, Poland's Communist leader, looked on as Brandt and Polish Premier Josef Cyrankiewicz, a survivor of Auschwitz, signed the treaty at a 17th century palace in downtown Warsaw.

Brandt commented that such names as Auschwitz will long remind both nations that hell is possible on earth and added: "Today nothing is more important than the creation of peace. There is no alternative. Peace is not possible without European solidarity."

Amherst Gets New Admissions Dean

Amherst College has announced that Edward B. Wall will succeed Eugene S. Wilson as dean of admission when Dean Wilson retires June 30, 1971. Mr. Wall has been associate dean of admission at the College since 1968.

A native of New York City, Dean Wall is a graduate of The Phillips Exeter Academy and Yale University where he obtained an A.B. in English in 1956. Entering the Marine Corps after graduation, he emerged with the rank of captain in 1959.

After a year of teaching at Searing School, Somers, N.Y., Dean Wall rejoined The Phillips Exeter Academy as Admissions Officer for five years. In 1965-66 he was assistant director of Admissions at Cornell University, then became director of Admissions at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wisconsin, until accepting the Amherst post.

Amherst has a student body of 1283 from 46 states, three U.S. possessions and 19 foreign countries. Two-thirds come from public secondary schools. As Amherst dean of admission Mr. Wall will administer a program that aims to achieve a diversity of interests, abilities and backgrounds within a small college community.

The dean's wife, the former Mary Francis Jameison, is a 1960 graduate of Mount Holyoke College. The Walls have three children.

Berrigan 'Underground' Tape to Be Played

Father Daniel Berrigan, one of the Catonsville Nine, is now in jail after being underground for the several months. A tape he recorded while being underground will be played in the Cononial Lounge of the Student Union at Noon tomorrow.

In it, Father Berrigan explains why he helped trash the Catonsville, Md., draft board. The tape takes the place of a sermon he was scheduled to deliver at Smith College, but was unable to give because the FBI was waiting to arrest him.

All those who feel that there is a dichotomy between Christian conscience and the practice of the Church will find it interesting to hear how Berrigan sees a revolutionary imperative in the Gospels.

The tape will be discussed, with discussion to be led by Gil Salk. It will be

Campus Center To Host Nursing Seminars

The Division of Continuing Education at UMass will present six weekend seminars beginning in January for administrators of nursing homes.

Each will begin Friday afternoon and run through Saturday afternoon, with sessions at the Campus Center. Participants completing all six sessions will receive a certificate from the Division of Continuing Education.

The first will be Jan. 15 and 16 on "Effective Management for Nursing Homes," given by Joseph Litterer, Taher Moustafa, M. King Deets and Victor Buell of the UMass faculty. On Jan. 29 and 30, a seminar on environmental health factors for nursing homes will be given by Prof. and Mrs. Warren Litsky and Prof. Barbara Turner. "Personnel Practices and Labor Relations for Nursing Homes" will be given Feb. 19 and 20 by Harvey Friedman of the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center and Jack Walsh of the UMass personnel office.

UMass Department of Public Health Chairman William Darity will lead the discussion of "Rights of Patients" March 12 and 13; the fifth seminar on April 2 and 3 will cover "Community Relationships and Nursing Home Legislation" and will be led by Dr. Jerome Peterson, western Massachusetts regional health director. Prof. Charles Eshbach of the UMass department of hotel and restaurant administration will direct the final program on April 23 and 24 on "Food Management and Dietetics for Nursing Homes."

Registration for individual programs will be accepted but those registering for the six seminars as a block will receive preference. The maximum enrollment is 30. The registration fee includes all program expenses, meals, lodging and parking. Further information is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, UMass, Amherst, 01002.

Legalization Of Grass Urged

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.,(AP)—A Harvard University Medical School professor has called for the legalization of marijuana for persons over a certain age, to be sold as alcohol is, with a specific potency so the buyer knows what he is getting.

At a luncheon on Thursday announcing the publication by Harvard University Press next spring of his book, "Marijuana Reconsidered," Dr. Lester Grinspoon said legislation would immediately put an end to "to the costs and harmfulness of the present legal approach" of enforcing anti-marijuana laws.

"If we allow the legalization of marijuana," he said, "there would be no demand for hashish a stronger form of cannabis."

Alves, Calheno, Cerniawski Named To All-YanCon Team

Yankee Conference soccer champions, UMass, placed three men on the All-Yankee Conference soccer team, as voted by the Conference soccer coaches this week.

Redman halfback Lindo Alves was the lone unanimous choice for the coveted all-star team. Joining Alves were two of his teammates who helped the Redmen to their finest soccer season ever, halfback Augie Calheno and fullback Joe Cerniawski.

Alves led the Redmen in scoring this past season with ten goals and seven assists for seventeen points. At the end of this past season he was elected along with Calheno to co-captain the soccermen next season.

Cerniawski was the heart of a UMass defense that was considered to be one of the best in the region.

Three more Redmen were given honorable mention by the Yankee Conference coaches. These were goalie Bill Leary, a sophomore, Rick Matuszczak, a senior, and Duane Brown, also a senior.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Taurus is associated with the throat. Natives of this sign must guard against abuse of the voice; excessive shouting, talking at singing. When a Taurus person becomes tense, the first symptom usually appears in the neck. Many natives of this sign learn to control the voice and use it as a musical instrument. Some famous Taureans include Perry Como, Ella Fitzgerald and Kate Smith.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cycle is high; your natural qualities of leadership shine. Welcome contacts, challenges, opportunity to be more independent. Don't lean on others. Assert yourself.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may find yourself working with group promoting charitable project. Some self-sacrifice is necessary. But long-range gain is the result. Know this and respond accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on fulfillment of personal desires. Psychic income becomes important. Means doing what you do to best of ability is more important than actual cash. Consider this when making decisions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on career, standing in community. Co-operate in civic activities. Be open to suggestions for meaningful changes. You are due to receive accolade from one in authority.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 23): Good lunar aspect stresses journeys, publishing and advertising. Your message gets across to more persons. There is added responsibility - but also greater results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Concern with financial matter could come to head. Involves mate, business partner. Be willing to analyze. Dig deep for information. Discard the superficial.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Spotlight on marriage, binding agreements, special relationships. Opportunity may be present, but be sure you know how far you want to venture. Protect future interests.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A work assignment nears completion. In personal area, a relationship may run its course. Key in all areas is to hold long-range view. Keep motives, goals, ambitions in proper focus.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on dealings with children, others who may have ideas of their own. Important to be young at heart. Show that you are not wedded to past. Look to future. Be original, dynamic.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Attention is drawn to domestic arrangements, property. Conclusion of important affairs is indicated. Best to finish rather than to begin important projects. Secure position.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Welcome chance for better communication with close relatives. Recent misunderstanding can be clarified. May be necessary to make some concessions. Sense of humor helps.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent on finances, personal possessions. Key is to be aware of details. What appears unimportant could prove pivotal issue. Be a shrewd observer. Let others reveal their motives.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY when you do something, you do it with big and grand gesture. There is nothing petty about you. Organizing comes naturally. Your view is large in scope. You can perceive potential and take positive steps to reach it. You have embarked upon new project. Some details have been troublesome. But sparks of love and life have ignited and you are now very much aware - and alive

UCLA's powerful Bruins, riding the crest of 23 straight victories and four national collegiate championships, were overwhelming favorites in The Associated Press' first major college basketball poll of the 1970-71 season.

Sports writers and sportscasters, in the voting announced yesterday gave coach Johnny Wooden's team 21 first place votes and 456 points to reaffirm the preseason balloting.

The Bruins, No. 2 South Carolina, and No. 15 New Mexico State, all 2-0 this season, are the only teams in the AP's Top Twenty to hold on to their preseason spots.

LIVERPOOL, England (AP)- Bill Shankly, manager of the Liverpool team, has told his players that soccer and marriage don't mix.

"Don't get married in the soccer season," is his advice to the team. "Anyone who does isn't behaving professionally as far as I am concerned."

Eight Liverpool players have been married during the last 12 months. The team, which was runnerup in the English championship last year, is currently eighth in the standings.

Gymnasts Have Potential For Contender's Roll

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity gymnastics team will open its 1970-71 season with a dual meet against Southern Connecticut State College on Saturday, Dec. 12, at Southern Connecticut. According to head coach Erik Kjeldsen, "this years squad has the talent and experience to make for a strong team." Led by co-captains Scott Stover and Tony Vacca, the squad shows promise of becoming the best gymnastics team UMass has ever produced.

Last season the Redmen compiled a 5-3 record, finishing second in the New England Championships behind undefeated Springfield College, and placing fourth in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League behind champion Springfield College and perennial powers Penn State and Temple University. Once again, Penn State and Temple appear to be the League powers.

Although Springfield has some outstanding competitors returning this year, they will have a problem with depth, as they graduated a large senior contingent last year. However, they are still a formidable team that can challenge any team in the League. This year the UMass squad, with a nucleus of talented, experienced gymnasts has the potential to be a strong contender for the League title.

Returning from last years squad, UMass has two all-around men, Norm Vexler and Tony Vacca, who were honored by being chosen as members of the New England Elite team, which recently defeated the Canadian Elite team in an exhibition meet at the New England Gymnastics Clinic by a score of 260-244. Vexler took third place in the still rings event against stiff competition, while Vacca could not compete due to a shoulder injury.

This years squad will be without the services of Joe Reed, Frank Dean, Joe Godwin, and former co-captain Mike Kasavana, all of whom performed well before graduating. Despite these losses, the team has a number of outstanding competitors.

Due to a new League ruling, there has been a change in the all-around event. Formerly, each team entered two all-arounds and three specialists for each event. With the new ruling, each team will enter three all-arounds, with the remaining two spots being filled by specialists. The all-around candidates for the Redmen are led by Vexler and Vacca. Depth in this grueling event is provided by junior Len Aubrey, sophomore Danny Spier, and freshman Rich Seikunas.

With Kasavana and Godwin graduating, vacancies have opened up in the floor exercise event. Candidates to fill these spots include senior Bob Nelligan, junior John Calabria, and sophomore Jack Berner.

In the sidehorse event, senior Rick Riley and Vexler should be particularly strong. A solid third score in this event will depend upon the performances of Aubrey, and sophomores Steve Scuderi and Steve Nelson.

The still rings event should prove to be a strong one for UMass. Vexler and Vacca both have solid routines. The performances of Aubrey and sophomores Jay Aronstein and John Oliver will provide good depth in the event.

The long horse vault should prove to be one of UMass' strongest events. The Redman vaulters will be led by Vacca, and seniors Bob Henry and Ken Perkins. Co-captain Stover, who is recovering from a knee operation, may rejoin the vaulters second semester, as will Steve Cary, who is an outstanding competitor in both the long horse and parallel bar events.

All of the Redman all-around men have strong parallel bar routines, and will form the nucleus of this event. Additional strength will be provided by senior Bob Henry, and juniors Dave Genest and Doug Salisbury.

The horizontal bar, the final event, as well as the most spectacular to watch, will be strengthened when Stover returns. Stover, along with senior Tom Myslicki and Vacca will provide the core for what should be a strong Redman event. Doug Salisbury will provide the necessary depth for the event.

This years squad has the talent, experience, and depth to become the best team to ever represent UMass. If they fulfill their potential, and pull together as a team, they can win the League title.

After Southern Connecticut, the Redmen will host Army in their first home meet on Saturday, Dec. 19 at 3 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. Following this the team will have a home meet against Syracuse on Friday, Jan. 9, an away meet against Pittsburg on Friday, Feb. 5, an away meet against Penn State on Saturday, Feb. 6, a home meet against Springfield on Friday, Feb. 12, an away meet against Navy on Saturday, Feb. 20, and will conclude their dual meet season with a home meet against Temple on Saturday, Feb. 27.

The New England Championships will be held at Boston State College on Saturday, March 6. These will be followed by the EIGL Championships to be held at UMass, March 11-13. Finally, the NCAA Championships will take place April 1-3 at the University of Michigan.

Ali KO's Oscar In 15th

NEW YORK (AP)—Unbeaten Muhammad Ali came alive in the waining minutes of the 15th round and stopped crude but strong Oscar Bonavena on three knockdowns in an amazing finish at Madison Square Garden Monday night.

This immediately ended the fight under the three knockdown rule at 2:03 of the final round. The fight had been astonishingly close until Ali's sudden thunder brought it to a wild end.

Ali, who had held the heavy weight title under the name of Cassius Clay, had predicted he would stop the cocky Argentine in the ninth round.

"In nine he'll be mine," boasted Ali.

But at the end of nine, it was he who seemed weary and worried.

Ali, weighing 212 pounds to Bonavena's 204, had started fast, boxing rings around the broad, muscular 6 to 1 underdog.

Through the first seven rounds he had piled up a big lead over his plunging, charging shorter rival. Bonavena was warned five times for low blows by referee Mark Conn and also hit low with several other punches apparently unnoticed by the referee.

Conn took the first round away from Bonavena for two low blows although Ali had won the round handily.

In the sixth round Ali followed a left handed miss by a left hand of his own that buckled Oscar's knees. That was the best punch of the fight until the wild finish.

Bonavena appeared to have won the fourth round with his chops to the body and head, and nothing much more until the eighth.

Then the chunky 5 foot 11 underdog began to score readily with thumping lefts and rights to the body and occasionally clubbing right and left hands to the head.

Ali, who stands 6 foot 3 and has six inches in reach, had been punching with good combinations earlier but now couldn't hold back Oscar with singly thrown jabs and hooks.

From the eighth on, Oscar dominated the tiring ex-champion. Ali jabbed and held and tried to tie up Bonavena, but the Argentine kept coming.

Ali, who had talked constantly to Bonavena earlier in the fight, cut the chatter as Oscar kept coming forward.

The crowd of about 19,000 for the international and nationally televised fight had given Ali a tremendous ovation and had cheered him in the early rounds.

But in the late rounds, the cheers were for "Ringo" and there were boos for the grimacing Ali.

The explosive finish put Ali in line for a showdown title fight with champion Joe Frazier.

It will be a million dollar bout.

Practice for the co-recreational swim meet will be available Tuesday evening from 7 to 9:30 p.m. in the Boyden pool. The co-rec meet will be held Wednesday in Boyden pool starting at 7 p.m.

For those fans who won't be able to make the trip to URI Thursday for the UMass-URI game, channel 10, WJAR—TV will be carrying the game live and in color from the University of Rhode Island.

Pucksters "Shoot" For Number Four

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

The Redmen, hoping to extend their unbeaten streak to four games, travel to Williamstown, Massachusetts tonight to tangle with Division II rival Williams in a 7:30 encounter. During the weekend UMass won two big games, defeating Division I powerhouse, Pennsylvania, 6-4, and last year's E.C.A.C. Division II champions, Vermont, 3-2 in overtime.

P.J. Flaherty

Goalie P.J. Flaherty was instrumental in both wins. He consistently came up with the big saves and proved to be the consistant leader on the ice that the Redmen lacked last year.

Offensively, the Redmen appear to be a much improved unit. Coac. Canniff has three solid lines, that are capable of scoring and playing an aggressive forechecking game. The lines consist of sophomore Pat Keenan, who already has eight goals, centering for Dan Reidy and Jack Edwards.

Defensively, the Redmen may be a bit thin in the depth department. Al Nickerson, who had just returned from a knee injury, suffered a slight muscle pull Saturday night and may not be 100 percent. Bob Bartholomew, Nickerson's defensive partner, has played a consistently steady game every time out, something that has been Bartholomew's trademark throughout the last two years.

Spelling Nickerson will be sophomore Bob Shilalie. The other defensive tandem has junior Brian Sullivan and sophomore Don Lowe. Sullivan has been the Redmen's most effective puck carrier to date, as he consistently is able to clear the puck from the Redman zone.

Lowe is an aggressive checker and very adept at digging the puck out of the corner from the opposing forwards.

Dennis Grabowski

Williams is a fast team that plays an extremely tight defensive game. So far this year the Eplimen have defeated RPI, who defeated Cornell and lost to Bowdoin College, 3-1, currently ranked the number one team in division II.

Grad Senate Probes Student's Death

By ROBERT S. McDONNELL
Grad Senate Reporter

The tragic auto death of one of its members prompted Graduate Student Senate discussion of a suitable memorial and traffic safety on campus at its meeting Mon. evening. In conjunction with the Sociology Department, the senate is developing plans to honor the memory of Mr Frederick Drexler who represented that department as a senator. In addition the senate expressed its concern for enforcement of speed limits, increased lighting, and the development of long-range programs to prevent recurrance of this type of incident.

The opening of the Day Care Center, originally planned for February, is now going to be delayed because of refusal of the administration to act on the matter. The Day Care Center committee made up of both undergrads, graduate students and faculty members had developed specific proposals and the various legislative and class bodies had allocated sufficient funds, but the matter has been bottlenecked in the office of David Clay. It is not known why this opposition has occurred, but many student parents now will not have use of this service.

The parking problem on campus again came up for discussion and again little was resolved. It was noted that the new garage is doing poorly and that it will do better as new buildings replace parking lots. The senate was advised that state funds andnot student funds should be used to provide security for parking areas and that this is why parking fees are to be raised in the future. Lastly, the residents of Lincoln Apartments registered complaints against commuters who park their cars in that area.

The senate was told of the progress of secure welfare rights for eligible students. Publicity is soon to be given to qualifications and benefits and if necessary what legal action individuals may take to secure their rights.

The senate housing committee reported on the development of a standard lease for the North Village complex. Deficiencies in the present proposal were noted and the committee was unanimously instructed by the senate not to accept any lease until changes demanded are met.

Dr. Robert Gage addressed the senate on the quality of health care, insurance coverage, and dental facilities, as well as other topics. Extensive publicity for these subjects is planned for the future.

To develop a continuing line of communications between the senate and the graduate student body, funds were allocated to start a monthly newsletter. Plans now call for a first issue to be mailed around second semester registration time and to contain information of concern to all graduate students.

In its last action of the evening, the senate passed a resolution calling for the establishment of a joint faculty-student committee to establish guidelines and disciplinary procedures to deal with faculty members who misappropriate research of students for their own use. Specific instances of plagerism were noted and it was the feeling of the overwhelming majority of senators that this was unjust and hypocritical in view of the high standards for which students are held on the originality of their work.

Bromery D.C. Plan Slammed Boycott Still Scheduled

By KAREN DEGRACE
Staff Reporter

The Southwest Assembly last night rejected an administration response to their call for an end to mandatory meal tickets in that Residential College, and again voiced its support for a planned Dining Commons boycott next semester.

UMass Business Manager Gerald Grady, representing Vice Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, told the Assembly that the administration would offer Southwest students a series of dining options.

They are:

1. Ten meal tickets with a la carte breakfast.
2. All meals a la carte.
3. A la carte, or compulsory, options.
4. Additional "special foods" lines.
5. Revision in exemption policies (current exemptions based upon: senior; age 21; academic; employment, etc.).
6. Expanded use of dining commons.
7. Alternative ways to finance payments to the Building Authority and the Commonwealth (currently about 15% of the budget).

Grady also brought the students an administration statement explaining why meal tickets are necessary in the overall payment scheme of the residential complex.

It maintained:

Our policy changes are limited and guided by such factors as "mortgage payments", some type of food service for about 10,000 students, changes in other University policies, legal obligations of bond agreements and law, and student requests. During the past years, there have been many changes, most of them as a result of student participation in the decision-making process. We pledge our co-operation in continuing this policy."

Southwest Master John A. Hunt, speaking in behalf of Bromery, told the students that they could not realistically expect mandatory meal tickets to be abolished completely. And the students, in response to this, issued the following statement:

"The Southwest Assembly informs Vice Chancellor Bromery that it finds that the committment of Mr. Grady's letter does not meet the needs of the students as presented; and further that the assembly re-affirms its stand as presented (that the mandatory meal ticket for all Southwest students be abolished beginning the second semester of the 1970-1971 academic year) to support those students currently organizing a broad fee boycott of the second semester board fee until the University recognizes that the compulsory board plan is no longer acceptable to the students who are forced to purchase it; and further that the University commit itself to a dedicated effort to work out a plan which is feasible both financially and otherwise to bring about the implementation of an optional meal plan as soon as possible."

SST GETS Second Wind

WASHINGTON (AP) -The House gave the hardpressed supersonic transport program at least a temporary new lease on life Tuesday when it refused to accept the Senate's rejection of funds for the 1,800 mile an hour aircraft.

It voted 213 to 174 against instructing its conferees to accept the Senate action in striking from a Transportation Department appropriations bill a $290 million item for construction of two prototype models of the much disputed plane.

The House passed version of the bill includes the money so the matter must be resolved in the conference.

The size of the favorable vote cheered SST proponents who have been saying that a 20 vote margin would put the House conferees in a strong position in their argument with the Senate conferees, whose chamber voted 52 to 41 to delete the money from the $2.5 billion bill.

Senate conferees still will be under strong moral, possibly irrevocable commitment to insist on the deletion.

Fusia Resigns From Coaching Job

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Victor H. Fusia resigned yesterday as head football coach at UMass after a decade which saw his teams compile a record of 59 wins, 31 losses, two ties, and four Yankee Conference championships.

His resignation was received by Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education and Director of Athletics, late yesterday morning. In accepting the resignation, McGuirk said that Fusia will stay at the University and will assume administration responsibility within the department of athletics.

Dean McGuirk said, "Vic Fusia has contributed immeasurably to the University's stature in football, compiling an admirable record in the past 10 years. After 25 years in the rigors of coaching, he has decided to move into a positon where he can have more regular hours and spend more time with his family."

On the subject of a new coach McGuirk added that a screening committee will be formed immediately to search for a new coach.

When Fusia was reached for comment he had little to say but disclosed that he would tell more about why he reached his decision and what his new position will be this afternoon.

"The new position hasn't been completely defined," he said, "but it will have a greater range. I hope I can contribute to the whole

Milt Piepel, Fusia's defensive backfield coach for the past three years, has a quick measure of what role Fusia played in the building of the UMass football program, saying, "An awful lot!"

Fusia is a native of Pittsburgh and graduated from Manhatten College in 1938, where he was an outstanding tailback for the Jaspers.

He bagan his coaching career at Rankin High School (Pa.) in 1946 where he lost only two league games in two years. He then moved to Indiana High School (Pa.) and climaxed three successful seasons with an undefeated team in 1950.

In 1951 he began a four-year stay at Brown University were he served as backfield coach. In 1955 he moved to the University of Pittsburgh to serve as backfield coach and first assistant.

During his six years at Pitt, the Panthers were rated as one of the top independent college teams in the nation and Fusia was accorded much of the credit for the team's success.

Consistant success has marked Fusia's 10 years as Head Football Coach at UMass. His overall record is the best percentage wise of all UMass football coaches.

It didn't take him long to build UMass into a New England power. His third year, 1963, saw an undefeated 8-0-1 team, followed by 8-1 in 1964 and a berth in the NCAA Tangerine Bowl.

He was voted New England Coach of the Year in 1964 and the Redmen were selected as New England's top major team.

During the first seven years of his coaching at UMass, his Redmen were perennial League contenders, compiling a 38-6 record over the period including a record 15 consecutive league victories from the second game in 1965 to the middle of the 1968 season.

In 1968 his squad stumbled to a 2-8 mark, however, he rebounded his team the next season to the tune of 6-3 slate.

This past season his Redmen recorded a 4-5-1 record but he commented so many times that he didn't feel that he was coaching a team with a losing record.

C.E.Q. Meets, Plans To Insure Life Of Environmental Groups

by ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

A meeting of the Coalition for Environmental Quality held last night in the Campus Center decided that CEQ's main function would in the future be to exist as a resource center for facilitating projects planned by groups of interested individuals.

The meeting, chaired by CEQ president Quint Dawson, was called with the formal purpose of the "preservation of environmental action groups."

Led by Dawson, the small group of approximately forty people debated upon the accomplishments and directive purposes of CEQ. A tone of despair and disgust prevailed which was instigated by a discouraging news letter written by Dawson which spoke of the seeming futility of the CEQ movement. According to Dawson, "Students have been apathetic this semester. We never got a firm grasp on that feeling of common purpose, the feeling that together we could accomplish something worthwhile."

However, some of the present members were not as pessimistic as Dawson. Pointing out the many worthwhile accomplishments of CEQ in the past, one concerned student said "CEQ is what CEQ has done."

The group then moved into discussion of the extent to which CEQ should be an active RSO organization. According to Guy Ross, "Some of us are interested in learning to live an ecological life style. However, this may not be where you are all at. CEQ should be a personal direction more than a legislated group activity unless interestees warrant group actions."

The meeting then broke up into small groups discussing various ecological projects to be pursued by concerned students individuals.

CEQ will continue to operate as an umbrella organization to advise, finance and guide independent projects. Although discouraged, President Dawson feels that perhaps goals will solidify and the organization will once more have a purpose and a meaning.

Red Tape "Hassles" Force Noodle's Closing

By IMELDA ROJAK
Staff Reporter

The Noodle, the student macrobiotic restaurant, is closing down Friday, December 18 after a short existence. A board meeting was held last night to discuss the future of the place.

Demian, the manager, complained, "I'm sick and tired of red tape. It took two and a half months to get people committed to the restaurant; some still aren't committed. I want to handle the whole thing without having to go through R.S.O. S.U.G. is giving only half as much money as we asked for. We still don't have use of the washing machine or the frying machine. I've been working here twelve hours a day, six days a week. I suggest we cut down the number of days the Noodle is open and have a cooking class the other days."

Someone suggested "Why don't we run a macrobiotic lunch line in the dining commons?" "Do you know what it's like trying to cook a vegetable dish in a kitchen full of chops and meats?" countered Demian. Others agreed there would be too much hassle.

Running the Noodle as an off-campus restaurant was discussed. "We've already gone through the off-campus thing.," replied Bob, one of the Noodle staff. "The rent is like $350 a month. Besides there isn't enough space in Amherst."

The final decision reached by the people of the Noodle is to close it Friday, December 18. The food will be free until then, but donations will be accepted to help pay the staff. "We can't have salaries so we can't operate, "said Demian. "The whole reasonwe're closing is the bureaucratic hassle; we can't operate as human beings."

Astronauts Meet Moon Creature

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - The Apollo 14 astronauts had a visit from a "moon critter" Wednesday - an armadillo that strolled onto a make believe lunar surface while the spacemen were collecting rocks.

The creature provided several laughs near the end of a long, tedious training session.

Alan B. Shepard Jr. and Edgar Mitchell were rehearsing for their February walk on the moon in a field carved with craters and littered with dust to simulate the surface.

Suddenly, the armadillo wandered out of nearby brush and moved boldly toward the astronauts.

"Hey, there's a moon critter," shouted Shepard as he bent over in his spacesuit to retrieve a rock.

"You wouldn't believe this, Houston," he laughed. He and Mitchell were tied in on tthe Mission Control Center in Houston via a communications link.

The armadillo darted about as Shepard and Mitchell went about their rock collecting, with photographers gleefully snapping pictures.

Mitchell noted one of their jobs on the moon will be to collect a football sized rock and suggested the armadillo was about the right size.

"Will it fit in the bag?" he asked.

But the training crew already had a real football in a crater and the astronauts packed that in a bag and contented themselves with photographing the creature as if it were another rare moonrock.

Later, a television news crew moved in to take a closeup of the armadillo and Mitchell quipped, "how the hell do you interview an armadillo?"

The incident occurred near the end of a four hour session in which Shepard and Mitchell practiced the first of two excursions they plan on the moon. Most of the first walk will be devoted to setting up a nuclear powered scientific station.

"No Cease Fire As Long As U.S. Remains"-Viet Cong

BOSTON (AP)-The Viet Cong "cannot accept a kind of cease fire which will justify the prolongation of U.S. occupation in South Vietnam and...the existence of Thieu Ky Khiem administration," a spokesman for the revolutionary guerrilla government said in a TV interview Tuesday.

"To propose a cease fire is only to justify such an unequitable situation," said Ly Van Sau, a member of the Paris Peace Talks delegation of the Provisionary Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam.

The interview and a number of filmed portions were taped in Paris recently for the Advocates program and broadcast over the Public Broadcasting Service.

The first in a two part program, which includes interviews with Viet Cong, other South Vietnamese and American diplomats, addressed the question, "Should the United States agree to a coalition government in Saigon?" The second part will be broadcast Dec. 15.

Sau claimed the U.S. bombings of North Vietnam on Nov. 21 and 22 aggravated "the stalemate at the conference, and threaten seriously" the work of the peace negotiations in Paris.

Filmed segments of the show included interviews with Xuan Thuy, North Vietnamese Minister and his country's chief delegate to the negotiations, and Mme. Nguyen Thi Binh, foreign minister of the Provisional Revolutionary Government PRG and its chief negotiator.

The PRG is the political arm of the Viet Cong.

Interviewed on film by Richard Falk, Milbank Professor of International Law at Princeton University, Xuan Thuy said, "We have never stated that we are opposed or we accept international supervision of elections" that would be held by a provisional government.

"We are only opposed to the U.S. demand that this Thieu, Ky, Khiem administration be allowed to organize general elections in South Vietnam," Thuy said, "because such elections will bring about another puppet administration."

Falk appeared on the program as the chief advocate for the position that the U.S. should accept a coalition government. Kenneth Young, former U.S. ambassador to Thailand, argued against coalition and the Communists' demand that the U.S. repudiate the current Saigon regime led by President Thieu.

Ambassador Young, given the opportunity to question Sau, attempted during a lively exchange to have the PRG delegate identify particular South Vietnamese groups with whom the Communists would be willing to work in a coalition.

Sau named only Troung Dinh Dzu, a peace candidate of the 1967 election now in jail, and the debate was cut short by the moderator as Young pressed Sau for more specifics.

Also appearing on the program were Ngo Con Duc, a deputy in the Saigon government's lower house and publisher of a Saigon newspaper; Don Luce, an American Newspaper correspondent in Saigon; the Rev. Robert F. Drinan, Massachusetts congressman elect who advocates immediate U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam, and Eqbal Ahmad, a Pakistani political scientist currently at the Adlai Stevenson Institute in Chicago.

Ahmad called President Nixon's Vietnamization policy in the war "the American euphemism for mechanization."

Long Range U.S. Asia Plans Asked

WASHINGTON (AP) - Members of a Senate appropriations subcommittee demanded Tuesday that the Nixon administration disclose its long range plans in Southeast Asia before receiving an added $1 billion for foreign aid.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers said U.S. economic aid to South Vietnam and Cambodia will continue even after the Vietnam war ends but "we have no intention of slipping into the mistakes of the past" by becoming more heavily involved in Cambodia.

Rogers and Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird insisted that congressional approval of $155 million in new U.S. aid for Cambodia would make possible further American troop withdrawals from Vietnam after next Spring. But they failed to satisfy Sens. Clifford P. Case, R-N.J., and John O. Pastore, D-R.I.

Rogers and Laird asked for early approval of an administration request for more than $1 billion in additional aid this fiscal year - including $500 million already authorized for credits to Israel and $535 in new assistance for Cambodia, Vietnam and South Korea.

Rogers specified that U.S. aid plans for Cambodia involve air attacks on Communist supply lines and other assistance but "not military advisors or ground troops."

Both secretaries said approval of the $255 million for Cambodia -$155 million in new military and economic aid plus $100 million to reimburse earlier assistance - would make possible future U.S. troop withdrawals from South Vietnam after the current target level of 284,00 is reached next May 1.

Rogers said, however, he sees no reason why the United States should announce to the enemy what its intentions are after that date.

But Case said the policy of withholding such information is wrong.

While President Nixon may be able to mystify the enemy by withholding future U.S. plans, Case said, "he is mystifying at the same time the American people. He is mystifying at the same time the countries in Southeast Asia.

"We have got to have more sharing of information with the Congress and the people. I just can't accept the idea - don't ask us these questions."

"I don't think we should tell the enemy our plans," Rogers said. "No reason why we can't tell the Congress.

Rail Leader Pledges Strike Still Slated

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rail union leaders cheered a colleague's pledge Tuesday to strike no matter what Congress does before the walkout deadline of 12:01 a.m. Thursday.

"These are promises, not threats. There is going to be a national rail strike," said President C.L. Dennis of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, largest of the four unions which represent 500,000 workers in the wage dispute.

To cheers and applause at a union session Dennis added: "If I'm thrown in jail, I think you fellas will keep the ranks firm."

In the Capitol both houses began rush consideration of President Nixon's request for legislated 45 day strike embargo.

On the Senate floor Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and Republican Jacob Javits of New York joined in urging Nixon to summon management and union negotiators for another, nonstop try at reaching a settlement without a strike.

At the White House there seemed to be no immediate interest in the senators' suggestion. Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said that if Congress passed the 45 day extension and the unions defied it, the matter would be in the hands of the courts.

Dennis was leaving no doubt for the moment that the legislation, if passed, would be defied. "We wouldn't be any further along in 45 days in the issues that affect us. Railway people have not had a raise in 18 months and that was two or three per cent. The railways brought about this crisis. We did not. They brought it about by their stalling," Dennis said.

Nixon, in asking for the postponement, said he would ask for another if the first 45 days moratorium did not work.

"This only encourages delay on management's terms," Dennis said. "It shows this administration is clearly on the side of profit taking railway management."

Dennis is reinforced in his strike position by AFL CIO President George Meany, who called on legislators to reject the President's request.

Three times in the past seven years Congress has halted nationwide strikes or strike threats with such special legislation after exhausting remedies of the Railway Labor Act. This is the first time a union has said it would violate such a special law.

Even so, in a parallel effort, Dennis and other union leaders, some 100 in all, trod Capitol corridors asking congressmen to reject Nixon's proposal. If they did a strike would be legal.

Appropriation Bills Top Year End Senate Schedule

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

Several measures of campus-wide interest are on the agenda for the final two Student Senate meetings this semester. Among the bills to be considered tomorrow are two appropriations totalling $10,500 and five motions dealing with: 1. a revamping of the Fine Arts Council; 2. institution of University Special Credits; 3. development of a better system of running major concerts; 4. scheduling of a 12-week summer session; and 5. the ending of restrictions on housing; to be considered in that order.

Bills scheduled to go onto next week's agenda include ones on the tax deductibility of tuition fees, students being allowed to remain in dorms over vacations, and firearms on campus.

$2500 of the requested appropriations will go to the Birth Control Booklet Committee, if approved. The money will cover the cost of publication of a booklet to be distributed throughout the college community to counteract what it considers to be mass ignorance within the student population concerning contraception, abortion, and venereal disease.

Another bill moves the appropriation of $7,950 to the Room to Move organization. This money would be used to continue the operation of this drug drop-in center run for students with drug-related problems.

Dissatisfaction with the make-up of the Fine Arts Council as it is presently constituted is expressed in a motion sponsored by Treasurer Richard Verrochi. It resolves that the Senate request that the Board of Trustees reconstitute the Council so that students have more voice on it or else call for the faculty and administration to make a contribution equal to that of students, to pay for the program.

Students currently provide all the funds for this cultural program which gives a disproportionately large voice to members of the faculty, according to the resolution.

The Academic Affairs Committee of the Senate is sponsoring a bill instituting a system of awarding special credits for academic work. Credits would be given for such things as independent study off-campus, work at solving campus problems, and short reading sections. Fifteen units of Special Credit would amount to one regular University credit.

Senators John Hogan and Leo Clark have placed a bill on Wednesday's agenda charging two Senate committees with seeking a workable alternative to the present system of running major concerts on campus.

The committees are to work out a more efficient and economical system, to be reported to the Senate on or before February 24, if the proposed bill passes.

In response to the University's plans for only one 8-week summer session this year, Senator Mary Silveira will move Wednesday that the Senate recommend to the administration that it expand the session to 12 weeks so that summer students can carry a full semester's course load. Silveira proposes this because "numerous students have counted on a full session to complete their academic work."

Senator Lee Sandwen will resolve that the Senate demand that the Chancellor, through the Housing Office, end all restrictions on where students choose to live. Sandwen wants restrictions dropped so that anyone can live off-campus who desires to because, as the bill reads, "'in locus parentis' should have died 20 years ago" and because "the University is supposed to supply its students the opportunity for an education and not imprison them."

Due out on the agenda for December 16 is a resolution of President Glenn Elters recommending the tax deductibility of tuition fees up to the amount of $500 in any tax year. Elters cites the financial handicap education places on students, the majority of whom work to pay for their education and the essentials of life. Such a tax deduction would further Elters' aim of universal college education.

Also on that week's agenda will be an amendment to the act which concerns usage of dorms during vacations, which would resolve that any dorm wishing to remain open during any vacation for only its residents would be allowed to do so.

Such a plan would be contingent upon majority consent of the house residents and presentation of a security proposal acceptable to the area government and the area coordinator.

The Senate will request that the Chancellor allow the Flying Redmen Drill Team to store and use their deactivated rifles on campus, if a bill sponsored by Senator Robert Hall is passed at next week's meeting.

Hall's bill considers these rifles to be tools, not firearms, and states its opposition to the presence of any firearms on campus, recommending that the administration work toward the gradual elimination of even the firearms carried by the University police force.

The motion further resolves that the Chancellor obtain an off-campus storage area for the weapons of the University and Stockbridge Rifle Teams.

UAW Approves Ford Pact; Strike Averted

DETROIT (AP)—Representatives of 166,000 members of the United Auto Workers at Ford Motor Co. Tuesday put their stamp of approval on a new contract with Ford. The nation's second largest automaker promptly announced a third price increase for its 1971 cars.

Ford announced late Tuesday it had hiked the average increase in the suggested retail price by an additional $15, bringing the total increase over 1970 models to $187.

Ford announced an $158 increase in September and added $14 last month.

UAW President Leonard Woodcock said only three of 183 members of the UAW's Ford Council voted against recommending the acceptance of the new Ford pact.

The council acted after a five hour session, which came a day after Ford and UAW bargainers announced a tentative settlement. The pact now goes to the rank and file for ratification, with a deadline on local voting set for Dec. 15.

The proposed agreement could raise the average wage at Ford by roughly $1 an hour over three years. One source said the pact would cost Ford about $1.2 billion over the same time span.

The contract followed closely the pattern setting agreement won by the UAW at General Motors after a 10 week strike this fall.

The union now turns its sights on writing a new contract with Chrysler Corp., smallest and weakest financially of the Big Three automakers.

Douglas Fraser, vice president and director of the UAW's Chrysler Department, said he would return to Chrysler Wednesday to resume serious bargaining on a new pact for 120,000 union members.

Chrysler and Ford were given temporary immunity from a strike when their contracts with the UAW expired Sept. 14, while the union struck GM to win a pattern contract.

Fraser said he believes a new contract at Chrysler can be wrapped up by the end of next week. No strike deadline has been set against the naton's No. 3 car producer.

Like the GM contract, the Ford pact will provide the average worker with a 51 cent hourly raise in the first year and a 3 per cent raise in each of the last two years. The current average hourly wage in the industry is $4.02.

The worker also will have his wages increased or decreased according to the rise or fall of the Consumer Price Index, and there is no top limit to the amount of money he can receive in this cost of living allowance.

The contract will allow a worker who has 30 years' service to retire at age 58 at $500 a month, effective Oct. 1, 1971. That person's early retirement benefit would drop to $450 monthly at age 62 and to $189 at age 65, when Social Security goes into full effect.

The biggest snag in the Ford bargaining was the question of retroactivity of the basic pay increase. The union wanted it all to be retroactive to Sept. 14, when the old contract expired.

The final compromise plan will make 26 cents of the 51 cent first year raise effective Sept. 14, with the remaining 25 cents retroactive to Nov. 2.

Woodcock said that "in the insurance field particularly" the union had picked up a "most important item" that it had not won at GM.

The union was not successful in getting a company aid, dental care program at either GM or Ford, but it at least got a toe hold on such a program at Ford.

Ford agreed to collect insurance payments from workers paychecks and to pay the insurer from them, if the worker voluntarily join-surance program.

The current hospital medical surgical insurance plans at the Big Three, which are financed completely by the companies, started the same way-as voluntary, worker financed programs-almost 30 years ago.

Workers at Ford also became the first of the Big Three to get a paid Christmas vacation, from Dec. 24 to Jan. 4. Ford workers will get that time off this year, but GM workers won't get it until 1971.

Just Gotta See Me Through Another Day

I've seen fire and I've seen rain
I've seen sunny days that I thought would never end
I've seen lonely times when I could not find a friend
But I always thought that I'd see you again.
James Taylor

I was singing "Fire and Rain" when I left my house yesterday. As I crossed the street near SBA a minute later, I heard a girl singing the same song. The coincidence made me think one more time about the song. Not only the lyrics, but the circumstances under which it was written.

James Taylor and Suzannah were once lovers. They had been separated for some time; he did not know where she was or what she was doing. She died without him knowing it. When, after a time, he found out, he wrote the song. That's the song's background.

The lyrics strike me as particularly beautiful. He expresses feelings I've personally felt many times. I have seen sunny days that I thought would last forever. Lying lazily on the beach with my girl, secure in the warm sun and the soft sand and the expansive beach, secure in the knowledge that we loved each other. Lying there, it's impossible to believe that there is even the slightest chance that anything will ever go wrong with the essential ingredient, the love between the two people. Back then, I thought it would be forever. Now even the memory is somewhat faded.

I've also seen lonely times when there seemed to be no one to whom I could turn. Times when I couldn't take being by myself, and there was just no one with whom I could be. When life's most important asset, people, seemed out of my reach. Those are the lowest times I know, when I can't quite see any reason to go on.

Won't you look down on me Jesus
You gotta help me make a stand
Just gotta see me through another day.

So begins the second verse Sometimes Jesus can help; Jesus doesn't seem to me to be enough though. And a lot of people don't have any Jesus to turn to. Sometimes there are only memories. Sometimes there is nothing to give hope.

I've felt that way at times. Something has always happened to bring me back. Once this fall it was the knowledge that someone enjoyed what I wrote. Sometimes memories have convinced me that things would get better. The feelings have been real however, and I wonder if people ever stop to think what a genuine struggle it can be, just to make it through the day. Peace.

FEEDING, HOUSING CONCEPTS REVISITED at Louisiana State, according to a page one piece in THE DAILY REVEILLE. They're talking about eliminating compulsory housing and food plans and at the same time, bless their ole Women's Lib hearts, the student Committee on Campus Environment is also seeking to equalize the rules for both men and women students.

A huge hurdle to overcome in the matter of housing is that the dorms have bond issues to pay off, which means that sources of income other than student rents must be found before any thawing of compulsory on-campus housing.

It's a beginning, we say. How about converting dorms into classroom or office space which the University will rent from the Building Authority, instead of construction of new ones with the taxpayers' money?

The newspaper quotes UCal Prexy C.J. Hitch as saying he expects an "easing" of the p. or p. policy, with implementation of new policy that calls for increased emphasis on teaching undergraduates.

"Publish or Perish" is defined as the practice of requiring prospective tenured faculty members to publish scholarly research.

The policy has been enthusiastically denounced by faculty and students at many institutions, and just as enthusiastically implemented by administrators at status-seeking campuses (Umass included).

NIXON AIRPORT SHOW RIGGED is the headline on an editorial in the Florida State FLAMBEAU. The editors charged that police and Secret Service people screened out students "who looked the slightest bit anti-Nixon were herded off into a specially roped off section at the rear of the crowd" during a visit to Tallahassee to campaign for former Gov. Claude Kirk (who lost the election, last month).

THE FLAMBEAU pointed out that at his airport speech, Nixon said he did not believe there was such a thing as a "second class" citizen.

ABORTION ADS ABORTED AT BRIDGEPORT. The editorial and advisory boards of THE SCRIBE, student newspaper at UBridgeport, Conn., last week decided to suspend ads for abortion referral services.

The action came after the University Attorney said that "in his opinion" the ads violated Sec. 53-31 of the state's General Statues. The student boards are now seeking an opinion from the state's Attorney General.

The same action was taken at the University of Massachusetts, last month, when the legal counsel retained by Student Senate volunteered the opinion that such ads are in violation of Massachusetts law.

AND AT VERMONT TECHNICAL COLLEGE, Craig Forrest wrote an article which appeared in PIONEER, titled "Writing Is Dead."

He says that "Writing is the root of all evil - provides publicity for cultists, propaganda for revolutionaries, information on abortions, mail-order catalogs for guns, paper from paper mills that pollute, etc. etc."

And paper for writing comes from trees in the forest, eh Forrest?

New England Towns

The economic plight of the town of Palmer, where the biggest industry may soon fold up, is discouraging. The closing of the steel mill with its 650 jobs would be felt by all. Yet Palmer is not the only upcountry New England town which has seen better days.

Long ago the rural town was nearly self contained. Hard working farmers and their sons–for free labor–were its underpinning. There were blacksmiths, wheelwrights, coopers, tanners and sawmill workers. Each little water power source tended to have its small factory.

The prosperity of many places, if prosperity is the word, came to a peak about 100 years ago. One may still see the dates on the brick fronts of the "downtown village buildings. 1869, 1871, 1882. But by then the small industries had withered away, the young people were leaving for the cities, and most local agriculture had been unable to compete with that of the Middle West.

Textile mills kept many towns going, but a time came when the textiles went South. Only a few weeks ago it was announced that the textile mills of Harrisville, N.H. only industry of a small village, would close.

Now, alas, too many places in upcountry New England have a distinctly seedy look. The 1880 business block has been refurbished a little, perhaps, but it has not been replaced. The railroad tracks have vanished. The water power is unused. A traveler driving through is struck by the number of buildings which need paint.

This is particularly depressing, because the back country of New England should naturally be one of the best places in the world to live. It has woods, water, fish, game, skiing, scenery and clean air. The only catch is that it tends to lack industries to provide wealth.

The blight is by no means universal. The college towns are bright and bustling. Some places have attracted manufacturing, some modern houses are springing up among the Victorian mansions and it's a poor place which hasn't a modern shopping plaza. The quietness is attracting many who seek retirement homes.

With all that scenery and fresh air, there should be a greater measure of material prosperity, too.

Again, Academic Freedom

Riddle: When is a university free and not free at the same time?
Answer: When its the University of Massachusetts.

There are those who claim that UMass enjoys academic freedom. Certainly no one will deny the claim that the University is more free than the universities of the Middle Ages, Nazi Germany, Stalinist Russia, or even our own McCarthy Era. But having more freedom than these particular models can hardly be called being free.

The supposed academic freedom of the University is said to be contained in the right of students to pursue any course of study they choose. But that choice is obviously limited by what is offered. The University has two full departments offering courses in the military defense of the status quo but does not see fit to have a department offering courses to examine and challenge the basic assumptions of that status quo. There is clearly more interest on campus in radical critiques of society than in military science. That being the case and if UMass has academic freedom with the right of students to pursue any course of study they choose, then why doesn't the University have a Department of Radical Studies?

However the question of how much academic freedom UMass has is really a moot point. The University could have complete academic freedom and still be the same old place: training military officers in counter-insurgency techniques, doing research for the Military-Industrial Complex, and producing replaceable parts tailored to the specifications of America's giant corporations. The University could have complete academic freedom and still continue to be held in trust by the "wise" elders of the State of Massachusetts instead of being self-governing.

Academic freedom is a vacuum that is filled by whoever has the power to fill it. In the United States power is wielded by giant corporations (100 of these corporations own nearly half of all U.S. industrial assets), so the content of academic freedom becomes the needs of corporate America. Under the guise of academic freedom, the University trains the officers of the American military machine which protects the foreign assets and markets of these industrial giants. In corporate America, academic freedom is little more than an ideological cover under which corporations buy and control the university and its faculty and student body.

UMass is free and not free at the same time. But why expect anything else? America is free and not free at the same time. Anyone can run for office but only the rich get elected. (I think it was Will Rogers who said "The U.S. Senate is the best that money can buy.") Everyone can vote but not to vote for the Democratic or Republican Party is to throw your vote away. All have free speech but some own television stations and newspapers and others only soap boxes. Herein lies the sham of free America and the free University.

Julius Erving

To The Editor:

In writing this, I am running two risks; one, of rewriting an old song sung by many people in many places, and, two, of downgrading or hurting some very good, close friends of mine in the basketball world.

My credentials are meagre. As a student at Holy Cross, I played Frosh basketball, thirteenth man on a twelve-man squad, and only because I had the coach on corridor. Despite me, the squad made its mark in becoming the first undefeated Freshman team in Cross history.

However, as a long-time faculty member of the college, I was privileged to have been a contemporary of some of the greatest players of all time. I am speaking, specifically, of George Kaftan, Holy Cross' first All-America, and of Joe Mullaney, Bob Cousy, Togo Palazzi and Tommy Heinsohn.

Four of the above were bonafide, 1st. team All-Americans, having played during the Cross' Golden Age of Basketball, during the late Forties, and Fifties. Their teams played the country's best, phenomenal schedules, to crowds so large that home games were played in the Boston Garden, thousands travelling forty miles down the Pike to see them play.

Kaftan coached at C.W. Post; Mullaney is with the Lakers; Cousy coaches Cincinnati; and Tommy Heinsohn is with the Celtics. All four, including Palazzi, were at one time or other members of the Celtics. At this point I repeat: all good friends of mine.

There is no doubt in my mind that Julius Erving is gifted, and best all-around player I have ever watched. Simply, because he does everything well, has it all, and does well with it....CONSISTENTLY. Analytically, he seems to have Kaftan's great spring, Mullaney's ball-handling, Cousy's wizardry, Pallazi's spirit and determination, and Heinsohn's gunning eye, which made him high scorer with the Celtics and of the NBA.

Other than that, I can't say more for Julius. Better Players will come along, they always do, but it will not be for a long, long time. UMass, consider this a great gift, having him around for a while.

Hats off to the team, they have brought the Bit-Time to the "country". Hats off to Leaman, good coach, with all the intangibles.

Student Teaching

To The Editor:

If you plan to get teacher certification, you have to student-teach; and if you want to student teach, you better show up Thursday at 11 o'clock at Mark's Meadow Auditorium, School of Education. If you don't, the odds are that you will not get the chance to student teach.

The School of Ed. is planning to freeze its teacher training programs for the next two years. Varied reasons are being given for this freeze, and not all of them are so above board. For instance, M.E.T.S., an elementary teacher training program with the emphasis on self-discovery is one of the programs in danger of being killed. The M.E.T.S. program guarantees placement for its students, something the regular placement program has been unable to do. M.E.T.S. is in danger of being terminated because of personality conflicts between the field office and the men running M.E.T.S., not because it is a bad teacher training program. Everyone I have talked to in the program is more than satisfied with it. M.E.T.S. is just the kind of program that the School of Ed. should be aiming for; yet, the program may be ended, cutting down by 50 to 100 spaces the number of people that will be able to student-teach next year.

Don't take it for granted that what is going on at the School of Ed. this Thursday is for the benefit of undergraduates, and to better the School of Ed. It just might be, that if you stay home this Thursday, you will be the one to get screwed. Please show up, for your own sake.

Rockefeller

To the Editor:

Reading the account of Five-College students and faculty rejecting John D. Rockefeller III's offer of $25,000 for an environmental project, I was reminded of G.B. Shaw's Major Barbara who advocated refusing money offered to the Salvation Army by Undershaft and Bodger, munitions and liquor magnates. She does not want the support of "drunkenness and murder" for her good cause. Later in the play, however, she is forced to observe:

I was happy in the Salvation Army for a moment. I escaped from the world into a paradise of enthusiasm and prayer and soul saving; but the moment our money ran short, it all came back to Bodger: it was he who saved our people: he, and the Prince of Darkness, my papa. Undershaft and Bodger: their hands stretch everywhere: when we feed a starving fellow creature, it is with their bread, because there is no other bread; when we tend the sick, it is in the hospitals they endow; if we turn from the churches they build, we must kneel on the stones of the streets they pave. As long as that lasts, there is no getting away from them. Turning our backs on Bodger and Undershaft is turning our backs on life.

Written in 1905, Major Barbara is an attack on the problem of organized charity. Obviously it still speaks to us today. I am pleased to be directing it for University Theatre this coming semester.

Sincerely,

Doris E. bramson

Jesus Christ, Superstar

To The Editor:

I would like to comment on Bob Graham's review of JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR which appeared in Monday's MDC. Mr. Graham's writing shows a comprehension of the work's literary basis - however musical criticism is definitely not his forte. First of all, he claims that the music is not new and inventive but merely borrows from established musical forms. The originality inherent in this music is not necessarily melodic, as Mr. Graham seems to imply, but lies in the asymmetrical meters and unusual orchestration. As for claiming that the composers "had to write a 'rock opera' " and hance, many passages end up sounding operatic - that's the name of the game, Mr. Graham. Another complaint is that the work has no integration of musical forms - what Mr. Graham calls a "hubrid". An examination of superstar 9and by this I mean more than one or two listenings) shows this statement to be highly inaccurate. There is almost a Wagnerian use of leitmotiv throughout the work which provides a most vivid musical continuity. By being aware of various themes and their alterations one can follow the story without any literary references.

Mr. Graham goes on to say: "The performances range from fairly good to prettybad." In thw November 9 issue of Time, Mr. William Bender states: "Just imagine, listening to rock and understanding the words too....Mary Magdalene has been etched in memodically with Puccini-like tenderness, and the rollicking minstrel beat under the Apostle's chant...is a cakewalk of pure joy. The swinging gospel-rock music sung by Judas brings him brilliantly to nagging, skeptical, near-paranoid life."

Mr. Graham also takes offense to the vocal "screeching" of some of the performers. It should not have to be pointed out that in a work that is as well thought out as this, nothing is left to chance. By this I mean that whatever "screeching" does exist was specified by the composer. (An example of this that comes to mind is that of Mime's screaming in Wagner's Siegfried.)

As for judging the entire work by the medium on which his review copy presented itself, I can only say that Mr. Graham has made a serious mistake.

My final remarks are directed toward Mr. Graham's closing statement that SUPERSTAR "....though not original and inventive, is still entertaining." Whether or not this work is entertaining should not be a criterion for criticism of it. This is not the ordinary run-of-the-mill rock record aimed at the teeney-bopper consumer, but rather a serious attempt to create a musical and artistic experience utilizing the medium of rock. Follow the libretto and listen to it again, Mr. Graham!

Apology

To The Editor:

Last Wednesday an unfortunate incident occurred in Moore; a homosexual was harassed by a group of students. This letter is an apology. The names below include people who were involved directly and indirectly, and people who weren't involved at all. The act involved no forethought, so the development of the incident is a hard thing to describe. What started out as a very uninvolved, impersonal (but admittedly unjustifiable) phone call developed into a situation where an individual was ridiculed before a crowd for being "different". The original call should never have been made and the incident should never have occurred. We are sincerely sorry for what happened. We extend a personal apology to the student involved, and hope he will accept it.

Sisterhood: A Growing Bond

A real friendship is developing among women who are involved in Women's Liberation. Women started meeting for mutual support a year and a half ago and the people and meetings have continued to grow stronger. Sisterhood is more than a utopian ideology; it is an actuality.

There are many groups of people who are working together for the humanization of this society, and many good things are being done, but too often just actions or analysis are argued about and real friendship, trust, and acceptance does not develop out of the action oriented movement groups.

I feel that Women's Liberation is different from other groups because its advocates are deeply concerned about developing true friendship between women, and in destroying competition against each other. One of the tremendous aspects of Women's Liberation is that everyone does not think the same. People are not ostrasized for talking, acting, or believing different ways. People really try hard to accept differences, to share their opinions, emotions, and to act together. This is why sisterhood is happening now.

Women's Liberation people are trying to get better organized and be more available to people who may be interested in finding out more about it. Since news coverage is generally confusing, new ways of communicating are being tried. One of the ways of communicating is the new Women's Center which has just opened up in Northampton (above Pierce's Art store). When you walk into it, there is an overwhelming feeling of love and happiness – also work and concern – and tension at times. It is a unique place because it is open for women to come, relax, read, think, talk, or do whatever they like, by themselves or with others, (call 586-2011).

Another way of communicating to people is through conferences. The all-night Teach-In on Women's Liberation this Saturday and Sunday (1 p.m. Sat. Dec. 12 to 9 a.m.

Another way of communicating to people is through conferences. The all-night Teach-In on Women's Liberation this Saturday and Sunday (1 p.m. Sat. Dec. 12 to 9 a.m. Sun. Dec. 13) is a chance for women to meet other women. There will be workshops concerning the myth of female inferiority, alternative lifestyles, natural childbirth, Third World Women, and Gay Liberation. Films, slide shows, poetry reading, and a natural foods breakfast are also happening. A Day Care Center will be set up for the conference.

Men and women are questioning the sex roles that they have been taught. Some of the aspects of the traditional female and male roles are good -- some are bad. Women's Liberation is attempting to examine what it means to be human – and developing friendship is a big part of that process.

Milton Speaks On Alaska Tomorrow

John P. Milton, Deputy Director of the International Programs division of The Conservation Foundation, will speak on "Alaska: The Last Wilderness Battle" tomorrow in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Milton's address, which begins at 8:00 p.m., is being sponsored by the University's Coalition for Environmental Quality and other co-operating groups.

Milton has made ecological surveys throughout Africa, Mexico, Central and South America, the Galapagos Islands, the Azores, Nepal, and Indonesia. He acted as Executive Secretary in 1965 of The Conservation Foundation's "Future Environments of North America" conference, and co-edited the volume of its proceedings which was later published by Doubleday & Company. In the fall of that year Mr. Milton worked as Technical Specialist and Secretary for the Organization of American States in their conference on Renewable Resource Conservation. He has also served as a member of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences Research Council Subcommittee on Conservation of Ecosystems for the International Biological Program.

One of the recognized authorities on Alaska, Milton led in 1967 an expedition across the section of the Arctic Wildlife Range. His journal of the journey–Nameless Valleys, Shining Mountains–was published by Walker & Company last June.

"High School" Featured Monday As Preview To New Film Series

As an introduction to next semester's film program, Free University is sponsoring a documentary film, High School on Monday night, in the Campus Center Auditorium. Before the film there will be music performed by the New Music group. There will also be one or two shorter, experimental films.

High School was produced and directed by Frederick Weisman, and details the current state of our school system. Admission will be one dollar.

This film program will be run in the spring semester, hopefully three nights a week and will provide a permanent outlet for experimental films, as well as for progressive music and live entertainment.

The goal is to offer a platform for anyone with talent, while also showing the possibilities of film as art. Anyone interested in working with this group may get further information at Free U, located in the old Bookstore in the Student Union.

UMass Gives X-Mass Gift To W. Mass Boy Scouts

Boy Scouts in several Western Massachusetts communities are getting a holiday present of fresh Christmas trees as a result of a UMass-Holyoke Water Power Company research project.

The presents over 2200 fresh-cut Scotch pine trees grown on HWP powerline right-of-way in a research project directed by Prof. William MacConnell of the UMass forestry and wildlife management department.

The research seeks a way to utilize and beautify the largely wasted land under power transmission lines by growing Christmas tree crops on it.

"There are hundreds of thousands of acres of such land in New England and up to now it's been mostly wasteland," Dr. MacConnell explained. Christmas trees not only produce revenue, they make the land more attractive and provide food and cover for wildlife, he said.

UMass forestry researchers planted 68,000 trees on 68 acres of HWP powerline right-of-way in Chicopee, Holyoke and South Hadley in 1963. They planted 12 varieties and this year about a quarter of the Scotch pine trees are ready for harvesting and were made available on a cut-your-own basis to Boy Scout units in the three communities.

Seven Scout units took advantage of the offer, cut the trees under close UMass supervision over the Thanksgiving vacation, and are offering the trees for sale in their communities with all proceeds to benefit Scout projects.

In addition, the UMass forestry honorary society Xi Sigma Pi has harvested 800 trees and is selling them at lots in Amherst and Hadley. Proceeds will go to a forestry scholarship fund at UMass.

Clouds, Nutcracker Make Holiday Fare

Ballet in January

The Boston Ballet Company will perform with the Smith-Amherst Orchestra, William Wittig, conducting at the Center for the Performing Arts, Theatre 14, Smith College, Northampton, Mass. on January 6, 7, 8, and 9 at 8:30 p.m. There will also be a matinee on the 9th at 2:30 p.m.

Two ballets from the repetoire are featured in the program. The NUTCRACKER (Suite) and PETER AND THE WOLF set to the Serge Prokofieff score.

Tickets for the performances are available at the Smith College box office.

FINE ARTS

. . . Freewheelin' With Aristophanes

The Clouds–a pre-Socratic comic revel, with music–will be presented by the UMass Theatre on December 16, 17, 18, 19, in Bartlett Auditorium at 8:30 p.m.

The Clouds by Aristophanes was first performed in 423 B.C. in Athens and, as Aristophanic comedy generally, prefigured freewheeling comic forms such as Roman Mime, Italian Commedia dell'arte, British music hall and American Burlesque more than the situation and character comedy of playwrites like Plautus, Shakespeare, Moliere, and Neil Simon. The emphasis is on broad farce, gross satire and often obscene buffoonery.

The Clouds is a good-natured but penetrating attack on intellectual pretention. Socrates, Athens' number one intellectual, is portrayed as a humbug fool whose major academic preoccupation is the intestinal tract of a flatulent gnat. The Gods (Goddesses) are capricious and more than a little dotty. Even the so-called normal types–who hunger after sophistic and philosophical learning–are decidedly sub-human, preoccupied more with cheating, lying and obscenity than with intellectual achievement.

This production is making every attempt to capture the essential high spirits and ribaldry that was the hallmark of Old Comedy. Direction is by Gary Stewart, choreography by Janet Craft, music by Jay McAuliff, setting by Jeff Fiala, costumes by Liz Weiss, and lighting by Nicholas Scott.

Tickets for The Clouds may be purchased at the University Theatre Box Office, or by calling the box office (545-2579). Admission is $1.75.

Drug Drama Friday

A Readers Theatre production entitled "SHOT DOWN: The Grand Magic Vitamin Experience" will be presented this Friday and Saturday evenings at 8 in the Studio Theater, South College.

This production is adapted with permission from a NEW YORK Magazine article by Gail Sheehy entitled "Speed is of the Essence". It is the grim, true story of a girl's involvement with East Village drug scene.

Directed and adapted by Vincent Brann of the Speech Department, the drama is a honest, analytical look at the serious use, some ways more dangerous than heroin, of amphetamines by many in the emerging counter-culture.

The article is also being made into a film by MGM currently being shot in New York with Jacqueline Bisset. In a sense this Readers Theater production is a sneak preview of an interesting new film.

Campus Groups Sponsor Films

The CBS—T.V. documentary "Hunger in America" will be presented Wednesday evening, December 9th, at 8:00 in Tompson 106.

The film is a muckraking study of America's poor and the conditions under which they live. It not only paints a very realistic picture of intolerable living conditions, but vividly depicts the gruesome aspects of hunger and disease as suffered by poor people. Testimony by the poor further demonstrates the general ineffectiveness of federal anti-poverty programs.

"Hunger in America" is being presented as part of the Committee on Poverty's campus education program. The showing will be open to the university-community, free of charge.

The French Corridor of the University of Massachusetts is sponsoring the film "A Man and a Woman" by Claude Lelouch, which will be shown in the new Campus Center ballroom Friday, December 11 at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m.

It will be the french version of "A Man and a Woman" with English subtitles for the cultural enrichment of those who want a taste of exquisite French theatrical production; in fact, the New York Times called it "A beautiful and sometimes breathtaking exposition of visual imagery. A free, vigorous cinematic style. Incidents that have poignancy and charm."

Poetry Today

A poetry reading featuring Rosellen Brown, a National Council on the Arts Selection award winner for 1970, and Donald Junkins, director of the Master of Fine Arts Program in English at the UMass will be held Wednesday, Dec. 9, at 4 p.m. in Herter 321.

Rosellen Brown will read from her newly published award winning volume, "Some Deaths in the Delta," which she wrote after three years working with the civil rights movement in Mississippi in the 1960's. Donald Junkins will read from his new book, "And Sandpipers She Said," which was published last month, along with "Some Deaths in the Delta," by The University of Massachusetts Press.

Mr. Junkin's other poetry books include: "The Sunfish and the Patridge" (1965), the "Graves of Scotland Parish" (1969), and "Walden, 100 Years After Thoreau" (1969).

The program is open to the public without charge.

Education

Several Services Offered To Students

By CHUCK HALLBERG
Staff Reporter

Free Dope, There, I finally got your attention. I mean it though. This is where you can get free dope- on education. If you are an avid follower of this column, you will remember that in my last article (also my first), I stated that anyone with any questions about anything on education was invited (urged? requested? begged??) to send them in. I am reminding all you out there in UMie land that this invitation is still open- even if you just want to try and stump our resources. Also of course, any group or individual engaged in any sort of educational project is likewise invited to use the column to explain the purpose and goals of your endeavor to the community. Catch this- we even do the typing.

I do not have any questions to answer this week. However, there are two projects that are hopefully coming to maturity in the near future which I would like to acquaint you with. One is the Course Evaluation Program and the other is the University Special Credit Program.

First, the Course Evaluation Program. Over the past eight months an evaluation form, consisting of twenty-four questions with optional answer space provided for department and faculty use, has been developed for use beginning this Fall semester. The evaluation will be administered in classes at the University between December 9 and 23rd. The program is voluntary on the part of the faculty; however, preliminary signs indicate that more than 50% of all courses will be evaluated.

After the administration of the evaluation, a computer analysis will be used to report the summary data. The report will be returned to instructors after the final exam period. A publication of the results, along with faculty comments, will be available for students at that time.

An important note is that students must bring pencils with them to class since they cannot be provided. All responses to the form will be anonymous, so expression of true opinions can more easily occur. Enquire about and encourage your professors to have your courses evaluated. The more courses that are covered the better able the program will be to help the community.

The second project you might be interested in is the University Special Credit Program. This will be the first University-wide program to provide credit for different educatonal experiences that would not be adequate for the semester system. The Student Senate (that hallowed body of lascivious legislators) is scheduled to consider this program during its meeting on December 9, 1970 and it is expected that it will support the proposal and urge its implementation by the Academic Year 71-72.

The proposal itself outlines three types of educational experiences that it feels the program can cover: reading credit, activity or laboratory credit and topical seminar credit. It is my opinion that the proposal has outlined a program broad enough to suit students' needs while at the same time remaining purposeful to the University. The proposal notes that the program, which invites the participation of faculty as well as students, increases the flexibility of educational experiences open to members of the University community and it encourages the development of a close student/professor working relationship. Further, the proposal points out that a catalogue of special experiences could be published to add to and broaden the area of knowledge in the University.

Every student senator should have a copy of the proposal. Check with him if you want to read it in its entirely

Well folks, that about wraps up another excitement packed article on the education scene at UMass. Keep those questions rolling in to the address below:

If you care enough, maybe you can meet the Paulist challenge...

It isn't easy, being a Paulist. Bridging gaps between young and old, black and white, past and future. But it is a challenge.

The Paulist mission is to people... individually and in all the societies in which they live ... to discover Christ wherever he is acting ... to be attuned to the needs of the present, yet to form a vision of tomorrow's world.

If you are interested in finding out more about the Paulist priestly challenge, write to:

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Libra persons usually create a private world of fantasy. On the positive level, this world is expressed in art and literature. Without fantasy, Libra is incomplete. Libra persons can be found in the theater, in publishing in areas where beauty is highlighted and the creative life is dominant.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Hold on to money. Avoid acts based on impulse. You may be scattering your forces. One close to you presses in competitive manner. Key is to maintain even, steady pace.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): You may feel put upon, taken advantage of, even persecuted; this is but temporary. Key in to act in mature, steady manner. You now have much in common with Aries.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Confine activities to routine which helps promote long-range interests. Put ideas to work. Improve relations with those who perform basic services. Much of what you seek is available.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Events move swiftly. Best to stick to familiar ground. Don't fall prey to some who disparage your family. You actually receive needed support from those who really are at home base.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): One who jolts you into action may be ill-informed. It would be unwise to irritate one in authority. This is not the time to press your luck. Best to wait and observe. Gather second wind.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Think through situation which has created dilemma. Running away will not provide solution. Fulfill obligations. Keep communication lines clear.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Assertive actions now could be costly. Check facts. Protect valuables. Finish rather than begin projects. One who has been taking advantage of you makes vital slip.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Head-strong action could defeat purpose. Seek new avenues of expression. Stop trying to oppose one who welcomes a battle. Use brain rather than brawn — then you make progress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Work with material at hand. Obtain hint from Scorpio message. Some attention is directed to health. Remember recent resolutions. Avoid excess. Stick to plan.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): You could lose a friend if flippant about affair of heart. Means be considerate. What appears funny on surface could have serious undertones. Know this — act accordingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Some in authority may want to put you to test. Expect some pressure. Avoid panic. Deal with facts, not speculation. Delay final settlement on property affairs.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Some ideas need further development. Steer clear of argumentative relative. Change of scenery would be beneficial. You know where you want to go, but path is likely to be blocked.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you always are willing to give benefit of knowledge and experience. You are the opposite of selfish. A recent relationship is developing. Give it time. Concentrate on your own goals. One you have been carrying is capable of going it alone. Respond accordingly.

Profiling Vic Fusia The Coach

His Record Speaks For Itself

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

What can be said about the UMass football coach who won 59 games in ten years here, losing 31 and tying two? His accomplishments speak for themselves. Four Yankee Conference championships and all that.

He built UMass into a winning football school. He resigned from his head coaching post yesterday. In his ten years, he coached but two losers; the latest of which was this past fall's 4-5-1 aggregate. But having eight winning teams in ten years is what he'll be remembered for, especially when one considers that there were only two winning Redman teams in the ten years before Fusia came upon the scene and only two winners in the ten years prior to that.

To say he pulled the UMass football program up by the bootstraps is an understatement. Football was the king on campus and gridiron heroes were greatly admired during the first several Fusia years. Over the past few years, the image of Redman football has been a less awesome one here at UMass, due to various factors.

In the past three autumns, chants of "Goodbye Victor" have eminated from the stands at Alumni Stadium whenever the team wasn't playing quite up to the high expectations of the experts in the audience.

It was easy for them to make Fusia the target of their frustrations, because it is easy to forget what a man has accomplished in the past, it is and always has been the fashion to expect a proven winner to never falter.

Fusia did falter. He and his 1968 UMass team had a horrible season; they won two games, they lost eight. Goodbye Victor?

Not quite. He forged a comeback for the Redmen in the following year as he bounced UMass back from a 1-2 start to a 6-3 finish, that third loss a 35-30 heartbreaker to Boston College.

Even in that winning campaign, which was marked by the fourth YanCon title, Goodbye Victor catcalls were heard, in the second game against the University of Buffalo. The Redman won their first game of this year, 49-7, over Maine, and the fans expected UMass to also fare well against Buffalo. But it was hard to measure the club's strength despite the big romp over Maine, and it should have been taken into consideration that Buffalo was a legitimate eastern football power, a team UMass would never have been on the same field with had not Fusia pepped up the grid program. Anyway, despite the cynics, the Redmen only lost by ten points, 16-6.

No more Goodbye Victor's were heard for the rest of that season; after all the team started to win football games. A few, yes a few, farewells were sung during this year just past, but the spirit of this team was catching, and the defense was great, and the fans generally liked the team despite its losing record.

But they didn't really like Fusia. In the fast pace that the American sports world has gotten itself caught up in, they didn't like his conservative, grind-'em-out approach to the game. They wanted the Redmen to be more wide open in their offensive approach to the game. Fusia didn't. He often called this type of football, "Mickey Mouse football", and he was the coach, and so the team played it his way and won 59 games, lost 31 and tied 2.

Judge not Coach Fusia by his outlook on the game. He should be judged by his record. He was the head coach. He was getting paid for the job. It was his worry. He had to map the strategy to be used against all the opponents, and in what other way could he do it but his own.

Sure the great majority of students at UMass at the present time will remember him for two losing seasons in the last three years. But students of past years, of classes already graduated, will remember him as the man who brought Redman football out of obscurity and into three Conference championships, into the Tangerine post-season Bowl in 1964, into the number one position among major New England colleges also in '64, as the coach of Jerry Welchel, of Milt Morin, currently one of the best tight ends in all of professional football and of Greg Landry, who at last count had pulled the Detroit Lions out of a mid-season slump, by quarterbacking them to three victories in their last four outings. And is there any reason why these fans from the past are less able to judge Fusia's ability than those of the present? Of course not.

His ability to win is still there; he almost guided the Redmen to big upsets over this year's two best N.E. teams, Dartmouth and B.C. Hopefully he will always be remembered as a winner, not only by his closest contacts, for that is assured, but more importantly by the casual observer and the average sports fan.

Redman Hockey Team Stops Williams, 6-3

By EDWARD BRYANT and DAVID WILLIAMS

WILLIAMSTOWN—Three quick goals in a three-minute span provided the winning margin as a flat Redman sextet downed Williams College, 6-3, here last night. The victory left UMass undefeated after four games.

The game, sloppily played by both teams, was highlighted by the sparkling play of UMass goalie P.J. Flaherty. Flaherty made 24 saves in preserving the victory for the Redmen, many of them brilliant.

Both teams played sluggishly from the outset. For the first ten minutes, they exchanged the puck without scoring. Williams got on the scoreboard first at 10:29 when Doug Morell, assited by Bob Schmidt, banged one home.

The Redmen went ahead on Dan Lowe's goal at 17:55. Mike Waldron got the assist. Pat Keenan ended the scoring for the first period, tallying at 19:08 on a pass from Jack Edwards. The score was then UMass 3, Williams 1.

UMass had the advantage during this loosely-played first period, peppering Williams' goalie Jim Munroe with 17 shots. Flaherty was called upon to make just five saves.

The Ephs outplayed the Redmen in the second period. Williams got on the scoreboard only once however, thanks to the great play of Redman goalie Flaherty. At the other end of the ice Munroe had only eight stops, none of them too difficult. Williams' goal came at 8:47 with John Coleman and Morell assisting Mike Segall. This made it 3-2 with one period to go.

In the final period UMass came on to play its best hockey of the night, which isn't saying too much.

After Dave Polk tied it up for Williams at 6:50 on an unassisted goal, the Redmen exploded for three quick goals, one of them a fluke, to put the game on ice.

Don Riley's shot at 9:07 deflected in off the skate of the goalie to put the Redmen up at 4-3. Two minutes later, Edwards drove home his own rebound while falling. Dan Reidy picked up an assist as the Redmen upped their lead to two. Twenty-two seconds later, Don Riley tucked home a behind-the-net pass from Bob Shea to close the scoring for the night.

The final ten minutes were an exercise in futility for Williams as the Redmen were content to just clear the puck. Both coaches emptied their benches in the game's final minute, and UMass escaped with a lucky victory in what was an off-night.

BLUELINE BANTER—Commenting on the victory, head UMass coach Jack Canniff said, "We had one of those nights in which we were fortunate. If it hadn't been for F.J. we wouldn't have won."....Flaherty had 24 stops for the night, to Munroe's 30....Looking ahead the Redmen face a tough Middlebury team on Friday...The game takes place at 8 p.m. at Orr Rink....UMass is going to have to play a much better game against Middlebury if it is going to remain undefeated...Today the UMass freshman hockey squad travels to Yale for a 4 p.m. contest against the Yale frosh....(Editor's Note: Many thanks to the two guys who wrote this story for coming through in the clutch in a desperate situation.)

Dr. Houston: Midst of Consciousness Crisis

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

"We are in the midst of a crisis of consciousness that we have been warned is coming" began Dr. Jean Houston in a talk given last night in the ballroom.

Dr. Houston, Director of the Foundation for Mind Research in New York City and Associate Professor of Philosophy at Marymount College, spoke on "The Evolution of Consciousness Now".

We are faced with manifold problems, and many scientists say there is a 20 per cent chance that we will see the year 2000, she said. "I would give you a 50 per cent chance." There is no vision of the future, and the response to this is despair and primitive regressions, she continued.

There are those who are speaking out on a vision of an authentic new consciousness, a state of creativity, and a "turned on" world without drugs. "If the new techniques become realized, our own grandchildren will look down on us as neanderthals". "Consciousness is like a small, visible tip of an iceberg, most of it is down out of sight".

Dr. Houston spoke of a council held in Kansas in April of 1969 which was attended by yoga experts, zenmasters, hypnotists, mystics, and spiritualists and others. All were interested in expanding human consciousness, and they lived in isolation.

"Man has always regarded himself as "homo labori"--man the laborer", she said. As a manipulator and an exploiter he ultimately brings ecological disaster on himself, she continued, but there is hope that he is moving toward being creative, or "homo ludens"--man the player.

The way is becoming clear for new images, new definitions of reality, and the ability to infuse new, richer meanings and structure in man's life, she said. "There has been a tremendous leap in the study of brain research and psychopharmacology", that is, probing the capacities of the mind and finding the best ways to put them to use, said Dr. Houston. "Eighty per cent of the blue-collar jobs today will be obsolete in the next twenty five years", she said.

"Through physiological feedback training, people can learn very quickly, and brain waves can actively be controlled, she continued. Dr. Houston told of how the brain in experiements emits beta waves, but some parts of the beta wave can physiologically correlate with alpha waves, which create deep relaxation and lack of anxieties. She said the feedback can allow for heartbeat, skin temperature, and pain response control. "Some yoga experts are able to endure sub-freezing temperatures and not suffer discomfort or frostbite", she said. A use of trance states can improve concentration, and it can accelerate the mind to much faster thinking processes, she stated. In a learning situation such as in music, what might take years of practice would take only a few minutes because of time distortions in the mind, she continued.

Imagery, creativity, and motivation are all combined in genius, however, she said. "It is impossible to state what man's limitations are, in self-healing, escaping time, in creative ability, memory extension, and harmonious relationships", she stated. "We need a psychonaut program, she said, to put the first man in "inner space".

Dr. Jean Houston spoke last night in the ballroom on "The Evolution of Consciousness Now". In her speech she said that man is not only a homo labor but a homo ludens.

Ski Club Holds Raffle

The UMass Ski Club is sponsoring a raffle all day today in the Student Union lobby. First prize in the raffle is a pair of Kneisel Magic 77 skis, second prize is a $25 gift certificate to the Ski-In shop in Three Rivers, and third prize is a pair of all day-all night lift tickets to Glen Ellen.

All proceeds go to the Ski Club and will be used to finance ski trips. Ski movies and equipment are being shown at the raffle table. Raffle chances are 25 cents each, five for one dollar.

At its bi-weekly meetings the Ski Club presents fashion and equipment shows, guest speakers, and movies. The club offers free transportation and reduced rates on lift tickets for one-day, overnight and vacation trips. Club members also receive a Newsletter, a free one-year subscription to Ski magazine, inexpensive equipment rentals and discounts on at local ski shops.

'Radical Man' Author to Speak

The Government Department is presenting another colloquium today. Speaking will be Charles Hampden-Turner, the author of a provocative book, Radial Man.

Mr. Hampden-Turner is a professor at Brandeis University and director of the Cambridge Institute, dedicated to the psychological uplift of the ghetto. The University community is invited to listen to Mr. Hampden-Turner speak on "Radical Man as Democratic Man," in room 164-165 Campus Center at 4:00 p.m. on Thursday, Dec. 10.

New DC Plan Next Semester

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

The institution of a ten meal plan with breakfast a la carte and the availability of meat on a cash basis at breakfast starting second semester were the results of the Dining Commons questionnaire completed last week by students.

Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services stated in making these announcements that the ten meal plan "is feasible and will undoubtedly be instituted in September 1971." He stated that this would be in response to the questionnaire in which a majority of students indicated that they would like to see breakfast made optional on a cash basis.

He also stated that board rates have not been fixed which include this new plan but that these rates will be recommended to the Student Senate no later than April 1st. He stated that this rate would in all probability all within the $240 category stated in the questionnaire.

Other responses to questionnaire matters were generally that students:

-do not consider freeloading a problem
-do not consider cutting in line a problem
-desired that cold plates be placed back on the menu
-did not care for the preparation of hamburgers, toast, griddle cakes and scrambled eggs
-were not enthusiatic about the quality of preparation of food
-did not consider environment to be much of a problem except in Worcester Commons
-felt that the service was good
-desired some revision in the preparation of tossed salads

Stoneham stated that in the cases of cold plates and salad preparation that the service had already taken steps to comply with student requests. He also stated that student opinions concerning the frequency of some food items appearance on the menu would be taken into serious consideration in the planning of future menus.

Stoneham stated that the ten meal plan with a la carte breakfast would be offered to the entire campus including Southwest. He stated that this across the board policy was necessary rather than having separate policies for each area of campus. He also went on to comment on the fact that the change over the past 7 to 8 year period from a compulsory 21 meal seven day meal ticket through to the forthcoming ten meal plan indicates that "we are working to satisfy the needs of the students." He went on to comment that the Food Services Committee is working for the good of all students in residence and expressed praise for the student members of his committee who are making a sincere effort to help solve the problems of their fellow students. His only regret was that an estimated 70 per cent of the students in residence do not realize that the committee exists to serve them.

Assemblymen To Meet

Southwest Assembly President David Stanton and members of the Dining Commons Boycott committee will meet this morning with Vice Chancellor Randolph Bromery in an attempt to secure what Stanton referred to as a "further University commitment" regarding the compulsory board plan currently under protest by members of the Southwest community.

Stanton went on to explain in a statement for the Collegian yesterday that the proposals contained in a letter from UMass Business Manager Gerald Grady as read at Monday night's meeting of the Boycott Committee were an "insufficient commitment." He also stated that the students would not be satisfied until "the University commits itself to a dedicated effort to work out a plan which is feasible financially and otherwise to bring about the implementation of an optional board plan as soon as possible."

Installed At Boston Ceremony

Wood: Must Solve Poverty, Ignorance, Discrimination

BOSTON - Costumed in scarlet and purple robes, Dr. Robert Coldwell Wood was installed as the 17th President of the University of Massachusetts yesterday in simple ceremony at the Statler Hilton Ballroom.

Wood, who is the first president of the entire three campus system, told the assembled students, faculty, and dignitaries that the University "must play a major role in solving the problems of poverty, ignorance, and discrimination" emphasizing that traditions of scholarship, public education and service are the "strength and salvation" of the University.

The ceremonial, gold medallion, symbolizing the office of president was presented to Wood by Chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees, Joseph P. Healey, directly after Gov. Francis Sargent greeted the former Chairman of the M.B.T.A. commenting on the "awesome mandate" for higher education in Massachusetts.

Following the reception and luncheon at the Statler Hilton Wood traveled to Worcester to be received at the Worcester Foundation by the Head of the new UMass Medical School, Dr. Soutter, and local dignitaries including Mayor Welles of Worcester.

In Worcester, Wood said that because of the scarcity of funds "both private and public.....the entire national education system is in trouble."

He pointed to the Carnegie Commission report which ranks Massachusetts "among the lowest ten states in terms of the relationship between public expenditures for medical education and per capita income." He warned that the present number of medical schools "cannot provide enough physicians of higher quality that this state deserves."

At the luncheon in Boston, Wood spoke briefly of the importance of the urban university particularly in its relationships with the surrounding communities.

Julian Bond, State Representative in the Georgia State legislature, addressed the luncheon audience of invited guests saying that the "intellectual and physical" violence will "flourish until the universities develop curriculum that stifles war, racism and poverty" rather than one that "programs people to control their own social oblivion."

Bond, who gained national fame at the 1968 Democratic National Convention was invited to take part in the discussion concerning the future of UMass in Boston. Wood had to leave the discussion early for his trip to Worcester.

The charismatic Bond scored the original goals of higher education commenting that "it was hoped that (education) would lead the way to national power." He warned that Universities became the "national screening place to put people in their places" instead.

Calling upon the wisdom of the late W.E.B. DUuBois, Bond called for education which would not just include "techniques" rather education which will produce students who "can appreciate the higher spiritual life of the world."

"Mobilizing university resources of knowledge and skilled manpower to change the way things get done is the best way to create effective social change" Wood explained during his installation speech, calling the knowledge and skills that exist at the University of Massachusetts, "one of the State's great natural resources." He warned against wasting or losing this capability.

To assure effective solutions to domestic social problems, the university "can work with public agencies to define critical issues and develop realistic proposals," he told an audience of 900 persons at the Statler Hilton, Boston.

President Wood cited several areas in which the University of Massachusetts is already involved in community assistance: public housing, drug rehabilitation, education, mental retardation, consumer protection, environmental control.

He revealed that the University is developing a joint research proposal with the Department of Mental Health; is working with the Department of Public Health on a child health study; and has taken the first step toward an urban library program. Other areas of University concern and commitment are correctional systems, government affairs, labor relations and economic development.

Admittedly pre-disposed to the "old-fashioned idea of pluralism in education as in politics," President Wood declared that "Contemporary theories to the contrary, I aspire to no monolithic establishment, no rule by an elite, or counter-elite, no single pattern of institutional excellence."

He went on to point out that "Within the universe of higher education there are a variety of valid tasks to be done that demand the very best of human wit, and energy and will.

"The idea that you're either Harvard or a trade school has had no real foundation since the emergence of the great universities of the West and Midwest," he stressed. "It is completely gone today."

President Wood said the nation and the university community have been in a period of what might be called "a volunteeristic approach to change -- from painting in Harlem to Earth Day on campus. "These exercises owe much in spirit to the inspired use of non-violent resistance to destroy the remnants of public segregation in the South.

"But," he emphasized, "as applied to the stickier dilemmas of how to end the war, preserve the city, or upgrade the environment, this approach hasn't really worked."

President Wood called for an "institutional approach" as the real hope for change.

"The university as an institution that represents both knowledge and change, can work with other institutions that need knowledge and are receptive to change. This process -- properly undertaken -- can feed back to, and strengthen, the university's own educational and research capabilities," he said.

"As a land-grant university, we inherit an historic commitment not only to public service but to equality of opportunity," President Wood asserted.

He asked that this commitment be retained and that the power of education be used "to break up the old foundations -- poverty, ignorance, discrimination -- that prevent the genuine greening of America."

Dr. Wood announced the appointment of a President's Committee on the Future University, under the chairmanship of Vernon Alden, Chairman of the Boston Company, Inc., and former President of Ohio University.

The Committee will be a "major source of help, perspective and guidance in our endeavors," President Wood said. Its membership will consist of students and faculty of the three campuses, alumni, the public, labor and business, the professions and the academic community.

Wood Welcomed AtCC Reception

President Wood was formally welcomed to the Amherst campus of UMass last night at a reception in the Campus Center Auditorium.

In introducing Wood, Chancellor Oswald Tippo said, "If this were not such a formal occasion, I think I might throw up my hands and say that we made a terrible mistake because we can't keep up with this man."

He was referring to Wood's busy schedule during the day, a schedule which saw him make major addresses in Boston and Worcester.

Wood's remarks centered around a $150,000 contribution by the Ford Foundation to the CCEBS program. He said efforts will be made to obtain funding for CCEBS on a regular basis from the state legislature.

Wood stressed that the program is good because it reflects the responsibility of the University and its willingness to help those who most need a college education.

Welcoming Wood on behalf of the faculty, Professor Charles Page of the Sociology Dept. remembered a younger Robert Wood as a man with great energy. He pledged the support of the faculty to help Wood in his duties.

Student Senate president Glenn Elters charged that the faculty of UMass has been unresponsive to much-needed reform in education. Claiming that the University's first responsibility is to the students already enrolled, Elters said, "For too long students have been frustrated by unpardonable resistance on the part of the faculty in educational reform." He also called for the adoption of an open enrollment policy.

Parliamentary Maneuvering Makes 2 Meetings

Senate Considers Appropriations

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

In a brief meeting last night, the Student Senate considered, and then postponed, a motion to appropriate $7,950 to the "Room to Move" Drug Center. This was the only major piece of business at what was technically two separate meetings, the second of which adjourned at 8 p.m. to allow the Senators to attend the reception for President Wood.

"Room to Move" would use most of the appropriation as salaries for 18 staffers to be added to the program. Currently, nine people on the staff are running the operation with limited hours. With a staff of 27, the drop-in center could then be open on a 24-hour basis seven days a week, according to the organization. These paid staff members would have participated in a three-month training program.

The funds for "Room to Move" now come from the University administration, the U.S. Department of Education, the Class of 1973, and others. The center, used mainly by University students, is open to anyone who contacts it.

Debate on the motion will continue at next week's meeting. Some Senators question whether the Senate should expend funds to pay salaries in an RSO group.

It was parliamentary maneuvering which led the Senate to hold two separate meetings. The move to make the budget changes necessary has to be brought up at one meeting and then considered at the next. In order to consider it tonight, the Senate had to adjourn itself and then reconvene. This action followed the reading to the Senate of a letter of resignation from a Senator who had become completely disenchanted with all this maneuvering and inaction of what she called "wishy-washy liberals and hard- hat conservatives".

Longshoremen End Walkout

NEW YORK (AP)-Longshoremen who dislike the way a computer system is handling dock job assignments tied up the ports of New York and Puerto Rico on Wednesday, but agreed to return to work today.

The walkout idled 54 freighters throughout the port here and in New Jersey, but the "rank and file action," as the union termed it, ended with an agreement to submit the computer problem to negotiation. The shippers called the walkout an illegal strike.

The port here employs about 20,000 men.

The walkout had begun on a small scale Monday at Ports Elizabeth and Newark on the New Jersey side of the harbor. It spread Tuesday to 10 Brooklyn piers and San Juan.

There were no picket lines, so three West Indies cruise ships were able to dock and sail without interference.

Supervisory employes helped carry the baggage of more than 1,500 passengers of the Nieuw Amsterdam, Victoria and Homeric.

Because taxi drivers were already on strike in New York, shipping lines chartered buses to take passengers to and from the pier and rail and air terminals.

The portwide walkout wws precipitated by management reaction to a partial walkout by checkers- ILA members who handle pier paperwork-earlier this week.

The dockers were protesting a new hiring system with a computer deciding which pier in New York or New Jersey they must report to - the next day.

Mayors Lobby For Passage of Employ. Bill

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)-Eleven big city mayors, concerned about unemployment among returning Vietnam veterans, agreed here Wednesday to mount a personal lobbying campaign to head off a threatened presidential vote of the $10 billion manpower training bill.

A House Senate conference committee approved a version of the bill Tuesday which would provide $200 million immediately direct to city governments for hiring the unemployed in public service jobs.

The total funding would be spread over three years with the money split between public service employment and job training. The bill is expected to win final approval in both houses shortly.

John Gunther, executive director of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said the move by the big city executives was the first step in a new effort to push federal urban legislation.

Rail Workers Strike

WASHINGTON (AP) - Picketing began Wednesday night in a nationwide railroad strike.

The first pickets appeared while Congress and the White House still worked on emergency legislation they hoped would halt the walkout. The first report of picket lines was at Huntington, W. Va. Union officials in sseveral other cities said they would start striking at 12:01 a.m. Striking began before Congress completed action on the proposed strike delaying measure, which included an immediate 13.5 per cent pay hike for nearly 500,000 rail workers. A House Senate conference committee worked on the legislation.

With President Nixon waiting at the White House to sign a no-strike law, the Senate bill was rushed across the Capitol for another vote by the other chamber.

The House early in the day passed a proposal extending the deadline to March 1, hiking the pay of 500,000 railroad workers 13.5 per cent immediately.

But the Senate version, which hit the floor about 6 p.m., extended the deadline to Feb. 6 and added a section requiring the President to report the progress of negotiations to Congress 15 days before the expiration.

Debate raged for nearly four hours, with tempers fraying. At least one senator-Democrat Thomas McIntyre of New Hampshire-appeared on the floor in a tuxedo.

The Feb. 6 deadline was unopposed by the Senate. But senators angrily denounced the wage provision saying that it was not the proper business of Congress.

Others argued that requiring a presidential report would mean forcing the administration to tip its hand in the event it had to come up with proposals of its own.

An amendment by Sen. Clifford Hansen to strike the wage increase provision altogether was defeated 32 to 52.

An amendment by Sen. Winston Prouty, R Vt., which would have cut the increase in half was defeated 37 to 46.

The Senate finally abandoned an attempt to strike or waterdown the reporting provision and the legislation was passed and sent to the House shortly before 10 p.m.

And while congressional action remained incomplete a union spokesman reaffirmed the strike call.

"The strike call still stands," said C.L. Dennis, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

His message was relayed to newsmen through an aide who said Dennis had been called to an important meeting and could not hold a scheduled news conference. He did not elaborate on the nature of the meeting.

President Nixon had asked a 45-day delay, without any action on wages, and later indicated his opposition to any inclusion of pay items.

It was not immediately clear whether he would sign legislation including such precedent setting economic action by Congress.

The President asked only for a delay until Jan. 23. The House voted for a March 1 date while the Senate Labor Committee approved Feb. 6.

Both bills included the 13.5 per cent immediate wage hike, retroactive in part to Jan. 1, 1970, and in part to Nov. 1, 1970.

Economists Predict Setback

WASHINGTON (AP)-A setback of possibly 2 per cent in real national output is expected by government economists in this quarter, followed by a strong first quarter 1971 rebound of 6 to 8 per cent.

They feel that the current drop, interrupting a none too robust recovery in the second and third quarters, results wholly from widespread plant shutdowns and layoffs caused by the General Motors strike.

Commerce Department officials responsible for preparing the quarterly estimates of the Gross National Product said that, except for the strike, the economy would be extending the gains measured at 0.6 per cent and 1.4 per cent in the two preceding quarters.

Because of the anticipated sharp recovery, administration officials who hope to see full employment restored by 1972 say they are not seriously disturbed by the sag.

They hold that the full employment goal still is attainable, defining full employment as roughly a 4 per cent unemployment rate, compared with the present 5.8 per cent.

Kidnaped Swiss Ambass. Hopes for Speedy Release

RIO DE JANIERO (AP)-Swiss Ambassador Giovanni E. Bucher sent word from his kidnapers' hideout Wednesday saying he hoped Brazil would soon make arrangements to free him. The government said it was ready to negotiate as soon as the terrorists meet it demands.

The letter, authenticated by the Swiss Ambassy, said Bucher was in good health "and being well treated." It was the first word from him since he was snatched from a street by the terrorists Monday.

A terrorist communique, found in Rio Tuesday along with the letter from Bucher, requested 70 political prisoners be allowed to fly to exile in Chile, Algeria or Mexico in that order of preference. This is the largest number of prisoners demanded to be freed in any single kidnaping in the Western Hemisphere.

President Emilie Garrastazu Medici met with the ministers of justice, foreign affairs and the three armed forces in Brasilia, the capital.

An announcement after the meeting said the government would be ready to negotiate as soon as it received a handwritten letter from Bucher and a list of prisoners the terrorists want freed.

The demand for a handwritten letter was made before the Swiss Embassy confirmed that one in the hands of police came from Bucher.

The letter was released by the Swiss Embassy in Rio. It was stamped "VPR" the initials of the Portuguese name for the Popular Revolutionary Vanguard, a leftist terrorist group that said it carried out the abduction.

William Roch, counselor at the embassy, said the letter was found Tuesday night at a church in Tijuca, and that "its authenticity is established."

Roch said the Brazian government had told him that it had not received the first letter alluded to in the ambassador's note.

"I told them I considered this letter as authentic and I hope that the government will issue another announcement acknowledging it," he added.

The terrorist communique, found with the letter, listed these other conditions: -Broadcast of an antigovernment manifesto on all radio and television stations at fixed hours for two consecutive days. -That the pictues of all prisoners released be printed in the press, divided into four groups. Immediate publication of all communiques by the press.

Stony Brook Professor Lectures On Fisheries

Dr. J.L. McHugh, Professor of Marine Resources, Marine Sciences Department, State University of New York at Stony Brook, Long Island is scheduled to lecture in Room 203 Holdsworth Hall, University of Massachusetts at 3:30 p.m. today.

Dr. McHugh will speak on "The United States and International Fisheries." The lecture is free and open to the public.

He will speak on his experiences as a U.S. Commissioner to the Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission and to the International Whaling Commission. Prior to his 1970 appointment to the State University of New York Stony Brook faculty Dr. McHugh headed the Office for the International Decade of Ocean Exploration, National Science Foundation.

He has also served as Assistant Director for Research, Bureau of Commercial Fisheries, Department of the Interior and from 1951 to 1960 was the Director of the Virginia Institute of Marine Sciences. He is internationally known for his research on the California anchovy and the Atlantic menhaden fishery.

Parking News

Effective January 4, 1971, the lot on the west of the Engineering Lab Building will be reassigned as #6, restricted parking.

All students assigned to area #6 will be required to park their cars in the lot west of the Engineering Lab Building.

All students assigned to "N" lot will be required to park in the lot north of the Engineering Lab Building as of January 4, 1971.

Signs have been placed allowing parking for staff and faculty on the south side of Fearing Street Extension.

Under the Motor Vehicle rules of the University, students are allowed to park in this area between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 7:00 a.m., and on weekends from Saturday at 12:00 noon until 7:00 a.m. the following Monday.

Finehirsh Leads Forum Exposes Spring Strike

A group of students will hold a forum tonight concerning the "Lessons of the Spring Student Strike", in room 805 of the Campus Center at 8:00 p.m. The forum will be led by Sid Finehirsh, who undertook major leadership and organizational tasks at our spring strike, speaking at Washington, and various campuses, to further broaden the scope of the strike.

The group issued the following statement:

"Looking in retrospect at the strike now, and the enormous impact of that mass action, proves the effectivness of the means and methods used. The most immediate effects of the strike action was of course on the campuses where the control of the university was rightfully placed in the hands of the students.

"At that time the institutions ceased to be war universities; colleges ceased to function in the interests of business that thrive on the exploitation of the student community; our student union building housed and was controlled by an actual student union; but most importantly the capabilities of a mass radical student movement were made obvious.

"The further reaching impacts of the amazing impact of the organized mobilization. The pullback from the Cambodian invasion cannot be referred to without the role of the American student movement. The power displayed by the student movement further reflected the amazing potential power of other movements in unity.

"Because of the strength of the movement, the impact was not limited to national boundaries. Demonstrations and actions in support took place simultaneously virtually globally. In foreign capitals, such as Auckland, New Zealand over half the senior class mobilized to demonstrate in lieu of traditional graduation ceremonies. The media put aside its habitual diary of any minute government actions, and replaced it with the actions of foremost importance.

"The fact remains, that the ability of a massive mobilization of radical students has been demonstrated, and cannot be placed in the context of the past, but must again be brought to the forefront. The needs which called for the spring student action remain. The war continues to be paid for by the public's taxes, lives, and jobs.

"The economic and social oppression of third world people, women, and workers continues. The control of the universities has returned to the occasional meetings of the trustees. The need for a coordinated mass student movement cannot be ignored.

"For a complete look at the student strike, its impact, and the needs it presents, join us tonight in room 805 at 8 p.m. in the campus center."

Student-Owned TV Station May Operate Next Semester

By MICHAEL DEVINE
Staff Reporter

A television station, completely owned, operated, and controlled by students will begin limited operation on campus next semester. It will be perhaps the first station of its kind in this country.

A fact booklet put out by the organizers of "Station X" states that a comparatively cheap, flexible, and easy to operate technical system will be set up using new standard half inch video tape. This system involves photography with a video tape camera and playback on an individual TV monitor.

According to Al Dickinson, one of the organizers of "Station X", a student station will create an alternative to the "sterile, restrictive, and redundant" use of television by the commercial networks. It will also provide an opportunity for students to gain experience in using TV equipment, as well as producing creative programs.

The operation will be limited until more money and equipment becomes available. So far, money has come from the Student Senate and the Central and Northeast area governments. Money has also been promised by the Orchard Hill government, and it is hoped that more support will come from the Southwest Assembly. The possibility of funding from independent foundations is also being explored.

Dickinson expects that the initial operation will consist of single monitors in each residential area, as well as experimenting with various programs.

The organizers of the station hope that, with the advent of a closed circuit cable on campus (a proposal defeated by the State Legislature, yet still being promoted by the school administration), the operation will expand to a point where a student can receive "Station X" in his own dorm room.

The need for a station of this type, according to the organizers, is obvious. On a campus this large, a student cannot hope to know everything of importance that is happening. With a video tape system, events can be recorded and played back at a later date, keeping the student body better informed.

Dickinson hopes that the station will someday be able to cover three areas: 1. Special Programming- films, lectures, documentaries, etc., 2. News Programs- covering campus and local, national and international news on a daily basis, and 3. Open Studios- available to any student group to make special interest or service programs.

The possibilities, according to the organizers, are unlimited. Programming could cover such events as the basketball team in action, celebrities performing on campus, DVP speakers such as Humphrey, Strom Thurmond, or Rennie Davis, as well as an important Student Senate debate.

The programs could also possibly cover in depth news, not bound by censorship, restrictions of time and format, or the social, economic, and political controls that hamper network TV, the organizers said.

Because this station will be a closed circuit operation, it will not fall under the regulatory control of the FCC or any other governmental agency, they added.

The organizers feel that a student TV station can be a viable learning instrument, and will spread to other large campuses in the future.

Satellites

The Faculty Senate today will consider two motions which, if passed, would make the University an unmanageable and inhuman monster by 1980.

The first motion would establish a cluster of satellite campuses, located in towns close to Amherst. These schools would themselves be four year institutions, but would offer only introductory courses. The administrations of these schools would be "semi-autonomous" with the main Amherst Campus.

The faults of this plan are obvious. First, there would be a tremendous duplication of facilities. Students at these "satallites" would have their own living and dining facilities, their own laboratories and their own classrooms located a five or ten minute drive from the main Amherst Campus.

And in order to major in a subject, students would have to take upper level courses at Amherst anyway.

This plan would only extend the ecological damage which the Campus has wrought upon the Amherst area to the surrounding communities. More of the State's small acreage of good farm land would be lost. And the population balance in this corner of Hampshire County would be further destroyed.

And even if one assumes that the way to expand the State's complex of higher education institutions is to build more UMass buildings, than surely satallites of Amherst is not the best idea.

If building is really the goal, than more money should be poured into the growing Worcester and Boston campuses instead of forcing the Amherst campus to strangle itself in concrete.

The second measure before the Fac-Sen today proposes that the Amherst campus grow to 30,000 students--an increase of 1,000 a year for this decade--by the year 1980. Arguments against this expansion scheme have been brandished about quite often and most people know why this plan is unfeasable.

UMass-Amherst is too crowded now. Courses are unmanageable, living facilities are overburdened and the town is bursting at its seams. The legislature becomes less interested in giving money to this campus as each year goes by, and if the University system is to grow, that growth clearly should be channeled into Boston and Worcester. To commit Amherst to an arbitrarty growth pattern now is absurd.

The Faculty Senate should defeat both of these motions today.

Sit Tight Till You Hear From Me

WASHINGTON--There was a time when every Cabinet member of the Nixon Administration was fighting to get in to see the President at the White House.

But after Secretary Walter Hickel was granted an audience with Mr. Nixon and fired on the spot, other Cabinet officers have decided there is no need to see the President after all.

Six months ago there were three or four Cabinet officers waiting in line by the White House gate, hoping to get a glimpse of the President, just so they could go back to their departments and say they saw him.

But all this has changed

The other day a Cabinet officer I know received a telephone call from the White House. His wife answered.

"It's John Ehrlichman. He says you asked a year ago to see the President, and he thinks he can squeeze you in on Thursday between 4 and 5."

"Oh, no," the Cabinet officer cried. "Tell him I changed my mind."

His wife transmitted the message and then told her husband, "He says even if you don't want to see the President, the President wants to see you."

"Tell him I've got to address a chamber of commerce meeting in Oklahoma on Thursday between 4 and 5."

The wife did this and listened. "Yes, all right, we'll be there." And she hung up.

"Where will we be?" The Cabinet officer asked in fear.

"We've been invited to church services at the White House on Sunday," his wife said.

"Call back and tell him we don't believe in God," the Cabinet officer implored.

"Now stop being ridiculous. Surely if the President was going to fire you, he wouldn't do it at church services on Sunday morning."

"You don't know how those people operate over there at the White House. Two weeks ago they canned six poverty lawyers while the choir was singing 'Nearer My God to Thee.' "

"Well, you can't very well refuse an invitation to go to church services at the White House. Besides, if we sit in the back maybe the President won't see us."

"All right, but let's pack and put our stuff in the trunk of the car just in case," he said.

The Cabinet officer and his wife showed up at the White House the next Sunday. Billy Graham was reading from the Book of Job.

"Why then did you bring me forth from the womb?
"I should have died and no eye have seen me.
"I should be as though I never lived;
"I should have been taken from the womb to the grave."

The Cabinet officer whispered, "There, what did I tell you!"

"The message could be for the secretary of the treasury," his wife whispered back.

They looked around the room and saw other Cabinet officers whispering to their wives.

"Are not the days of my life few?
"Let me along that I might recover a little "Before I go from whence I shall not return, to the "Land of darkness and gloom,
"The black disordered land
"Where darkness is the only light."

The Cabinet officer said, "It's either Romney or me."

Att. Gen. John Mitchell started passing the collection plate. As he handed the basket to the Cabinet officer, he said quietly, "Sit tight until you hear from me."

But as the choir sang "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken," a task force from the White House had already taken over the Cabinet member's office and changed all the locks on the doors.

Was The P.O.W. Raid A Put-On?

My Government professor has given an imaginative, yet highly plausible explanation of the unsuccessful helicopter rescue mission at Sontay, No. Vietnam. It is his belief that the raid was pure stagecraft, engineered cooperatively by the U.S. AND No. Vietnam. After re-examining the headlines at the time immediately after the raid, I have come to the conclusion that Professor Feit's revelations are based on more than pure imagination. If one meditates on the following questions, the picture will have more clarity: 1) Is U.S. intelligence that bad that it can't determine whether or not a prison camp such as Sontay is occupied? 2) Why were the P.O.W.'s removed? 3) Since Sontay is well within the territorial bounderies of No. Vietnam, and since No. Vietnam does have a network of anti-aircraft installations, why weren't the helicopters (which are sitting ducks compared to B-52's) shot down? Did No. Vietnam really attempt to down the helicopters? 4) Would the U.S. conceivably attempt to make such a raid if there were a possibility of reprisals against other prisoners?

After taking these questions into account, the pieces of the puzzle begin to fit into place. Conceivably, the entire raid was planned in advance with the mutual agreement of both the U.S. and No. Vietnam. The No. Vietnamese had the camp at Sontay vacated, and the U.S. helicopter column was allowed to raid the vacated camp and escape from No. Vietnamese territory with little or no obstruction on tfie part of the No. Vietnamese. The minimal retaliation in the form of anti-aircraft fire by the No. Vietnamese was merely a little theatrical make-up.

What then, were the advantages of such a slick performance? What did each side have to gain? The big payoff for each side is obviously the emotional propaganda warfare each side would be able to wage against the other. The U.S. was able to brag about the daring and fortitude of those who staged the raid. Nixon could then intensify the P.O.W. issue and take credit for trying to solve that tragic problem. The emotional reaction from the silent majority was immediate and very favorable. On the other hand, the Communists could use the entire performance to accuse the U.S. of "invading" their territory, and it would give them the opportunity to boycott the peace talks in Paris and charge the U.S. with escalating the war. The Communists were then counting on emotional reaction that would benefit their propaganda plans. They had counted on a resurge of the now fizzling anti-war radicalization and protest which had put the nation in turmoil last year after Cambodia and Kent State. The reaction to the raids from organizations such as the MOBE were noisy and emotional, but short lived. The real benefits of the propaganda warfare may yet come to the surface. If Senator Fulbright can get a full investigation of the raid, which would be very embarrassing to the administration.

If I were to give an Oscar for the best actor in the entire performance, I would be compelled to award it to Sec. of Defense Melvin Laird. So far, his performance has received more applause from the audience than has the acting of the No. Vietnamese or, for that matter, the one-line bit parts put on by the MOBE and Co.

The People Love It

Book Review:
Love Story, by Erich Segal

Rich Harvard boy meets not-so-rich Radcliffe girl, they fall in love; girl gets leukemia, girl dies, boy cries. It is that simple. Yet, that simplicity is both the weak point and the success story of Love Story, by Erich Segal.

The book, essentially a very short story stretched through printing techniques to book-size is representative of short stories, but, not books. There is no real theme, no real incidents, and no real characters. It is these very facts, however, that make the book as good as people seem to think it is. For, the story is a universal one, everyone can relate to it. It is, in essence, Romeo and Juliet at Cambridge, Mass.. The plot is so simple, the characters so undefined, that you find yourself actually "being" one of the characters. You supply all your own incidents, you supply the characters, you supply whatever lesson you have learned from life; and when the girl gets sick and dies, you get sick, you feel the loss, your throat tightens. You find yourself remembering that it is just a book, and still you feel the pain. You, for all practical purposes, empathize an entire book.

Not much can be said for Mr. Segal's book itself, for there is not much to it. He attempts, ever so slightly, to lend credibility to his hero and heroine, using mini-incidents to reveal their quasi-characters. If you view the book objectively, there is not much you can say about the characters. The universal theme of "love lost" is similarly handled, with the girl (what's her name?) sick, and then dead, all within ten minutes if you read at a normal speed.

It is all rather like Peyton Place; yet, people love Peyton Place, and wish that they lived there, and wish that they were doing the things people in Peyton Place are doing. And so, people will love Love Story, and tell their friends to read it; for it is about everyone and no one, or, at least what everyone wants to be about, and no one is.

There is something good to be said about melodrama and soap opera, the people love it; and who is to say that an elaborate novel with intensely developed characters and earth-shattering theme is what is truly worthwhile, and therefore say that the people do not know what to like.

Yes, and there is something good to be said for Love Story.

BOB BRICK

A Page On Death

What do you say about a book that dies on page one? Oh, I don't mean economically; any one who reads Time Magazine knows that Love Story has been number one on the best-seller list for quite some time, and that its author, Erich Segal, is eating and dressing quite well for it. What I mean by dying on page one is that Love Story, right from the beginning, lets one know exactly what it is: a coppy, soggy, sticky tear-jerker.

Why, then, are so many people reading it? Well, for starters, mothers push it into father's and daughter's arms, and daughters push it into boy friend's arms, and no one seems to be able to put it down. And why? Because Love Story functions in the same way as a soap-opera. One becomes wrapped up in the every day lives of Jenny and Oliver as they push through the trials and tribulations of a courtship which Oliver's uppity parents oppose, as they push through the trials and tribulations of married life while Jenny works to put Oliver through law school, and as Oliver pushes his way through the trials and tribulations of tears and bitterness as Jenny dies of lukemia.

While Love Story functions as a soap-opera, one does not have to read it with a flashlight while hiding under the covers. This is because Love Story carries with it a great deal of class (it is number one on the best-seller list, Ali MacGraw, that very chic star of Good-Bye Columbus, is playing Jenny in the film version (why does no one ever mention that Ryan O'Neil of Peyton Place fame is playing Oliver?), and the cover of the book is very chic and coordinates beautifully with every outfit) and Love Story is very sophisticated (it carries with it no illicit sex).

The point of this little jaunt, however, is not to castigate the readers of Love Story, or their reasons for reading it. It is to castigate Erich Segal, who has done a good deal of writing, and who, I feel, should know better.

Segal is not a very good writer of novels (critics who have seen his films will contest the fact that he is indeed a good writer of screen-plays). His sentences are very short, and while there is nothing wrong with this in itself, most authors who are noted for their short sentences are also known for their ability to say a great deal in them--Segal rarely does. Actually, Love Story isn't really a novel at all. It is a film script without camera directions. Many authors write cinematically, such as Vonnegut and Updike, yet their works create definite images. Segal's images aren't very definite, and they are not all that exciting.

What offends me the most about Love Story is Segal's emotionality and simplicity. He writes in a manner reminiscent of adolescent short stories and poems. One somehow gets the feeling that some one could have done a much more effective job with the plot Segal uses.

So, for all of you soggy-eyed co-eds, and all of you tear-filled moms of America whom I have angered, for all of the boy-friends, husbands, daughters and sons whom I have turned against you, I am truly sorry to have offended you. It's just that I'm getting even because my mother shoved the book into my arms this summer, and I just couldn't put it down.

Pre-Registration

Pre-registration day--go to Bartlett. Any advisors around? A list, huh? Hmmm, let's see, 259. Knock, knock, knock.--Knock, knock, knock. Nobody there. Lets see, 274. Knock, knock, knock. Ah, somebody's there. Hi, are you Mr. Smith? Could you give me some advice? Yes? I'm interested in secondary school teaching. What courses am I supposed to take. You don't know!? Mrs. Jones on the fourth floor knows? Stairs-- more stairs. Let's see, here it is, Jones. Knock, knock.--Knock, knock, knock.--knock, knock, knock, knock. KNOCK, KNOCK, KNOCK, KNOCK, BANG, BANG, BANG.--I guess she's not in. Stairs--more stairs. Dept. office. (20 minutes later) Look, you've gotta help me. None of these advisors can. I want to find out what courses I have to take to become a teacher. Mrs. Jones on the fourth floor is supposed to know, but she's not around. She's only in her office on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday? But I've gotta turn this card in today! Try the Education Dept.? That's on the other side of campus! Stairs--more Goddamn stair! Walk, walk, walk. Education office. O.K. Can you tell me what to take if I want to be a teacher. A list of advisors. Let's see, Mr. Dufus. Are all you people waiting to see Mr. Dufus? You've been waiting since 9 o'clock this morning! Most of the advisors aren't in and those who are already have lines of people waiting to see them?! Oh, no! To Hell with it, I'm going to change my major to Business! More walking. Whitmore. Registration office. Wow look at those lines! I'm quitting school! I think I'll join the army. ¢@%#%#!

Campus Comment

Black and 3rd World Sisters

The WOMEN'S LIBERATION TEACH--IN being held on campus this weekend need not be another in a series of irrelevant, frivolous occurrences with little to offer those of us who are not members of the white middle-class segment of the university population. It is not however, the responsibility of the majority of those women involved in the teach-in to render it relevant and meaningful to us. Only by accepting that responsibility as our own can we effectively extinguish the destructive myths and stereotypes that have been perpetuated about us as Black and Third World women, myths that we ourselves have often come to accept as truth.

Our attendance at the teach-in is a vital importance. The recognition of ourselves as an important revolutionary force, working not against men, but with them in every capacity, is a necessary step to leaving behind the apolitical and/or passively political roles traditionally assigned to all women. And certainly at this point in time, neither apoliticism nor passivity are luxuries we can afford, as women and particularly not as Black and Third World women.

MAY WE COME TOGETHER!

Down By The River

To the Editor:

Guerilla Theater is collective theater and this emboldens me to submit some impassioned lines for possible inclusion in Prof. John Brentlinger's skit dealing with Rockefeller's offer to $25,000 to Five College students to help clean up the Connecticut River.

Say 'nay' to the scurvy funds!
They're tainted, we think
And 'tis better to have the river stink!

On second thought I withdraw my contribution--it is pretty awful. In fact, I will make a deal with Prof. Brentlinger. I promise to stick to my sculpture if he will stick to philosophy where his thinking, let us hope, is not so muddy.

Super Bummer

To the Editor:

Bummer! The construction of the new Fine Arts Center is a super bummer! More fences! More construction! More buildings! More progress!

While some folks here are working on a, "University Without Walls," it appears that there are others striving for a university of nothing but walls. I am really bothered by the destruction of the pond and the greenery around it by yet another absurd exercise of, "The bigger the better," philosophy that is destroying our environment and our humanity.

It has been pointed out that the cutting off of funds for development of the SST is an historical precident in that never before has our government stopped technological advancement for the sake of the general public. I call upon the administrators of this university to show the same humanitarianism and intelligence by doing the same at the University of Massachusetts. Stop making bigger buildings and figure out how to use the ones we've got now. Please.

Traffic Problems Increase Accident Incidents

Literally over tens of thousands of students, faculty, and staff plus over 15,000 circulating motor vehicles on campus sums up trouble for both pedestrians and motorists.

The result of the increasingly hectic UMass traffic has included one pedestrian fatality on Commonwealth Ave. this fall and two pedestrians seriously injured on North Pleasant Street last year. This is not to mention the numerous auto collisions which have become more and more frequent on campus.

Despite the two serious pedestrian accidents in recent years, many campus officials believe it is just good fortune that has prevented more.

Possible solutions to the problem of what happens when pedestrian meets motor vehicle are nebulous and numerous with no panaceas in sight.

One critical area, the section of North Pleasant Street which runs through campus, may become less hazardous if the proposed closing of that area to non-campus traffic takes place.

An estimated one-third of the traffic approaching the campus by way of North Pleasant St. does not actually want to go to campus, according to Professor of Civil Engineering William Boyer. The teacher of traffic engineering who has done studies on the campus traffic situation says that most people in town and on campus favor the closing of the busy street.

The problem is where to reroute the traffic if it is barred from the road.

One way to divert the traffic would be by a realignment of East Pleasant St. Conservationists in this age of ecological concern however, have opposed the realignment because it would go through a small pond in the area according to Boyer.

Another way to handle the diverted traffic would be through a somewhat improved East Pleasant St. However, improvement would be hampered, Boyer says, by the proximity of houses and trees to the road.

Before settling on the closing of North Pleasant St. to non-campus vehicles, a variety of alternatives were proposed.

One solution, the installation of traffic signal lights, was found to be impractical because about eight areas are frequent crossover spots and it would be impractical to install lights at all sites. Other possible solutions, tunnels, overbridges, and fences were also ruled out for a variety of reasons.

A situation now seen as hazardous on North Pleasant St. is the fence along the pond side of the street. This, Boyer says, gives less room for pedestrians from the traffic.

Another area threatening to pedestrians is where students crossover to and from parking lots. The 20 mph speed limit on University Drive, thought unreasonably low by some motorists, is posted to prevent accidents between pedestrians going to and from F lot and the campus says Sgt. Phil Cavanaugh of the campus police. The answer to the hazards to pedestrians going to and from campus parking lots may eventually have to be mass busing of motorists from the parking lots to their campus destinations, Boyer says.

One critical area of motor vehicle accidents has been Massachusetts Avenue, says Cavanaugh. He believes that the lack of pedestrian traffic accidents on this busy thoroughfare is the result of good fortune. The tunnel connecting the Southwest area with the main area of the campus has also helped in preventing pedestrian accidents. Still, many Southwest residents choose to forego the tunnel and cross on Massachusetts Avenue. The fences by the Whitmore parking lot and by Prince House were installed to channel students into the tunnel, according to Robert Ferriter, head of the campus parking authority.

Excessive speeds are seen as a major cause of traffic accidents on campus, Cavanaugh claims. He is quick to add however, that there may be many factors contributing to an accident. University roads, he says, have a speed limit of 20 mph. Intersections by Massachusetts state legislation have maximum speed limits of 15 mph, according to Cavanaugh.

He sees a greater enforcement of speed limits by police as a deterrent to the dangerously excessive speeds. Motorists on University roads are currently picked up by police by clocking or estimates. This is difficult on Mass. Ave. because of many crossover points between the divided road, he says. Stricter enforcement might result, he believes, from the use of radar as a deterrent to high speeds.

The most effective but perhaps most difficult to achieve solution to the problem of pedestrian meeting motor vehicle, Boyer thinks, may be pedestrian education. That simply means people keeping their mind on the traffic when they cross the road.

Pedestrians dangerously interacts with motor vehicles on a critical intersection on North Pleasant Street.

Motorist's-eye view of a pedestrian...walking in street makes it hard for the motorist to avoid an accident, especially on snow slippery streets.

Poor weather, duck and nighttime make pedestrians and hitchhikers difficult to see and harder to avoid.

MDC Photos By Gary Alpaugh

On Massachusetts Avenue pedestrians have been lucky. Jaywalking students create havoc with cars on the wide, fast moving road.

Students and Motorists traverse North Pleasant Street with little regard for one another.

Cars stopping for hitchhikers often complicate problems by forcing other cars to stop short or swerve toward oncoming cars in opposite land.

Money, Food Needed For Dorchester, S.C.

By KERRY KELLEY

The UMass Committee on Poverty is starting to reorganize its campaign to send food, money and clothing to the poverty-striken county of Dorchester, South Carolina. Ken Mosakowski, committee chairman, is hoping that more UMass students will get involved and help contribute for the sake of the members of this southern community.

There is an urgent need for money for food and medical attention for the non-whites in this area. There are people dying of illness and starvation, and the committee is trying to help before it's too late.

Dorchester County is basically comprised of two smaller communities - Ridgeville, which is black, and Four Holes, which is made up of American Indians. Ken Mosakowski, in a recent interview, explained that because of the existing political system in the south, the blacks and the Indians are unable to meet with success in legislative reforms.

An attempt is being made by members of the community to break this cycle of no-reform, Mosakowski said. Mrs. Vicotria Delee is hoping to someday defeat incumbent Representative Mendel Rivers. But until any success is met here, he added, food and medical attention must be given to buy the members of Dorchester County time until reforms are made.

"Whatever money we can raise will be a gain for the people....moral support that someone on the outside cares about them...." he said. Many of the families in this area have no income at all, he went on to say. For these, Mosakowski explained, there is no way out...they can't get jobs because they are uneducated and non-white.

Last year the drive met with moderate success over a period of time, collecting $500 and 3 tons of food. This year the Committee is planning an intensive door to door campaign in the dorms.

Mosakowski said that this is most revealing of "student attitudes or lack of attitudes." But, he said, there has been some mention of the use of the University community chest as "a possible means of expressing the university's conscious." But the committee is still waiting to hear more about it, he added.

Mosakowski hopes that any UMass students going to Florida this year will stop in and see Dorchester County for themselves.

As he and a co-worker, Ann Nichols, described it, Dorchester County is "another world." The people are living in makeshift shakes and bullet marks scar sides of buildings and street signs. These, Mosakowski explained, are the results of raids on the towns by whites protesting the civil rights movement in the area led by Mrs. Delee.

Ann Nichols remarked on the contrasts in that part of the state between beautiful southern mansions and the shacks the blacks and Indians are living in.

Both Mosakowski and Nichols are hoping for more student support this year for the project. At the moment there are only about 15 people working on the committee, but many more are needed. These student groups are needed, Mosakowski believes, to promote the reality in this country that there are people starving to death.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Draft Guide Book Available

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

Christmas is coming.

As a service, of sorts, there will be a draft information table set up in the Student Union sporadically this week and next. For a do-it-yourself Christmas present, you can stop by and get answers to your draft problems. Qualified counselors will be on hand to discuss your situation with you.

There will also be literature available for you to purchase. A book called Guide to the Draft can give you an excellent overview of the system which is oppressing you. One of the co-authors is Arlo Tatum, head of the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors (CCCO) and one of the foremost draft experts in the country. The book gives a clear, easy-to-understand picture of the Selectiv Service System and provides thorough insight into the various deferments and how to go about obtaining them. Know your enemy.

A good book for COs gives the statements of nearly all of the major religious denominations on conscientious objection. If you don't know what your religion has to say about CO, this could be a valuable resource.

The Draft Counselor's Manual provides a broad view of the entire system from a technical viewpoint. Designed for the primary use of draft counselors, it is probably the single most used counseling aid. Will also help you know your enemy, but recommended for those who have had some training in draft counseling and who plan to counsel.

There are lots and lots of memoes put out by CCCO dealing with almost every aspect of the draft. Good information for your particular problem. Stuff about medical deferments, the lottery, hardship deferments, CO, alternative service, etc. Ideal as stocking-stuffers.

Soon, hopefully, the new edition of the Handbook for Conscientious Objectors will arrive. This book has traditionally been the resource and advice book for people seeking I—O and I—A—O classifications. This new edition will carry information about the impact of the Welsh decision which further opened CO to nonreligious objectors.

The table will be set up in the SU Lobby today, and outside the Hatch tomorrow and Wed., Thurs., and Fri. next week. Stop by to wish us a merry Christmas and to see if we can get you an exemption for a present.

If not, you can always give up your draft card for Lent or resolve to stop co-operating with the SSS for New Year's.

Peace.

Exec Council Formulates Winter Carni

At the Junior Class Executive Council meeting on Sunday, December 6, plans for Winter Carni '71 were decided on. The weekend will be held from February 19-21, 1971. Events will include: a carnival lasting from Friday afternoon till Saturday night in the Campus Center; a movie to be shown throughout the weekend; a Happy Hour in the 10th floor cocktail lounge on Thursday night; a light show and bands in the auditorium on Saturday night which will last until Sunday morning; a Sock Hop in the auditorium on Friday night; and a poetry reading session with The Last Poets, whose record is now in the Top 10, on Sunday afternoon.

Films and Music Replace High School On Monday

As an introduction to next semester's film program, Free University is sponsoring a series of documentary films on Monday night, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The movie "High School", originally scheduled to be shown on Monday night, will not be shown. Instead, the film "Animals", a French documentary depicting the life cycle of animals with a subjective viewpoint of evolution and creative camera work, will be presented. Also shown will be two films by Stan Brackage, entitled "Moth Light" and "Reflections in Black". In addition, music will be provided by the New Music group led by Ernie Provincia. Admission is fifty cents.

These films will be sponsored by Free University as an introduction to next semester's film program. Hopefully, the program will run three nights per week during the spring semester, and will provide a permanent outlet for experimental films as well as for progressive music and live entertainment.

The goal is to offer a platform for anyone with talent, while also showing the possibilities of film as art. Anyone interested in working with this group may get further information at Free U, located in the old Bookstore of the Student Union.

Alaska: Last Wilderness Battle To Be Subject Of CEQ Lecture

John P. Milton, deputy director of the International Programs Division of the Conservation Foundation, will speak on "Alaska: The Last Wilderness Battle" tonight, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Mr. Milton's address, which begins promptly at 8, is being sponsored by the University's Coalition for Environmental Quality and other co-operating groups. The program is open to the public without charge.

Mr. Milton has made ecological surveys throughout Africa, Mexico, Central and South America, the Galapagos Islands, the Azores, Nepal, and Indonesia. He acted as executive secretary in 1965 of The Conservation Foundation's "Future Environments of North America" conference, and co-edited the volume of its proceedings which was later published by Doubleday & Company.

In the fall of that year Mr. Milton worked as technical specialist and secretary for the Organization of American States in its conference on Renewable Resource Conservation. He has also served as a member of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences Research Council Sbucommittee on Conservation of Eco-systems for the International Biological Programs.

One of the recognized authorities on Alaska, Mr. Milton led a 1967 expedition across the unexplored section of the Arctic Wildlife Range. His journal of the journey--"Nameless Valleys, Shining Mountains"--was published by Walker & Company last June. He will augment his lecture with slides of that Alaskan expedition.

John P. Milton will speak on "Alaska: The Last Wilderness Battle" at a lecture sponsored by the UMass Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ)

Midnight, Dec 31, Set For I-A Reclassification Notice

Registrants wishing to drop deferments and be reclassified into Class I—A status to take advantage of a year-end policy announced last month by the Selective Service System, have been given until midnight, December 31, 1970, to file for the reclassification. Such requests must be received by local boards by that date or carry a postmark dated December 31, 1970 or earlier.

The announcement is contained in instructions issued to local board personnel by Dr. Curtis W. Tarr, National Director of Selective Service. These instructions alter previous policy which stated that the application had to be in the hands of local board personnel prior to a December meeting of the local board.

In particular, the instruction to local boards will be of interest to men who hold high numbers in the 1970 draft lottery. Should a young man hold a number higher than that reached by his local board -- and No. 195 has been set as the highest number which any local board can reach -- it is to his advantage to voluntarily give up his deferment for a I—A classification.

In these cases, he will move to a lower draft priority group on January 1, 1971 with other members of the 1970 first priority group with unreached numbers.

While recognizing that young men holding lottery numbers over their local board "high" could effectively limit their vulnerability to the draft by being classified into 1-A by the year's end, Dr. Tarr stated that "the law allows young men to elect whether they will apply for a deferment and those young men granted deferments should be able to drop them if they desire."

Compared To October November Arrests Higher

By JOHN FITZGERALD
Staff Reporter

The following is a comparison of criminal arrests by the Campus Police between the months of October and November 1970.

Charge	No. October	No. November	Difference
Larceny---over $100	0	3	+3
Larceny---under $100	0	11	+11
Receiving Stolen Property	0	1	+1
Possession Burglary Tools	0	3	+3
Attempted Larceny	0	4	+4
Malicious Destruction	0	2	+2
Narcotics Violations	4	3	-1
Assault and Battery	1	2	+1
Armed Robbery	1	0	-1
Disturbing the Peace	1	2	+1
Drunkeness	14	9	-5
Possession Alcholic Beverages	0	1	+1
Operating Under the Influence	4	2	-2
Motor Vehicle Arrests	5	3	-2
Violation of Parole	1	0	-1
Assault with Intent to Murder	1	0	-1

Categories of criminal offenses for which no arrests were made (such as rape, breaking and entering and lewdness) are omitted. Total persons arrested in October was 21. Total arrested in November was 31. This indicates an overall increase in arrests when compared with October and November 1969 when a total of 36 arrests were made.

Prof. Feng To Speak On Environment

Professor Tsuan Hua Feng, chairman of the UMass Environmental Engineering Department, will discuss "Pollution problems: Can The Engineers Solve Them?" this afternoon at 4 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. He will be the guest speaker for the International Club.

Prof. Feng will speak on engineers and environmental problems today.

Professor Feng has been active in the American Society of Civil Engineers, the Water Pollution Control Federation, The American Water Works Association, and many other professional associations. The Emphasis of his research and consulting experience has been on water disinfection and air pollution control.

According to Keh Tung, President of the International Club, "We look forward to increasing the involvement of the International Club in issues of such prime importance to the world community." The discussion is open to the University community. Coffee and lemonade will be served.

BRIDGE MAGIC. Many bridge players rely on magic for their success. They try to sit in the lucky seats or to deal with the lucky deck. If things don't go well, they try sitting on a handkerchief. But in the long run you have the same kind of cards no matter where you plant your seat. You can do better with those cards by working with your head. If you get a poor result with a hand, look for your mistakes in bidding or play. When your partner has made the mistake, try to recall whether you led him astray or whether you could have saved him. You will find it easier to work with your head if you practice with AUTOBRIDGE hands. Playing one or two hands a day will work like magic to improve your game; magic that will follow you to any seat at the bridge table.

UMass Cagers Highlight Weekly Varsity M Group

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Head basketball coach Jack Leaman, his assistant coach Ray Wilson, and his two co-captains, Ken Mathias and Julius Erving, were the featured guests yesterday of the UMass Varsity M Club at the Newman Center in the second of the winter sports luncheons.

Coach Wilson gave his scouting report on the Rhode Island Rams, the Redmen's opponent tonight and said, "They're a team that likes to run, they fast break 75 percent of their offense, they're good offensive rebounders, and they force their oponents to play their tempo of ball."

He went on to say, "for the Redmen to win they must rebound, play their own tempo of ball, and play good hard defense."

Leaman was the next to speak and he centered his comments on the Redmen, the Vermont game and tonight's game.

On his team he said, "We're a young team. Chris Coffin and Mike Pagliara are new and the people who back them up on the bench are inexperienced. Last year when we were 5-5 everyone road us off, but we came back. The season is long and a good team is one that can pick itself up from a down and come right back."

Leaman admitted, "I still can't tell how we beat Vermont. We were not ready for them and you can blame me for that. With five minutes to go I called a time out with us nine points down. We had tried everything up to then and it just didn't work. I looked to God and found no help. And then I saw in the stands 500 UMass fans cheering for us to get going which gave all of us an inspiration. After this we scored six quick points, cut the lead to three, and got rolling."

Leaman concluded his comments by describing URI, "as a great offensive team, that runs better than any team that we will play this year."

To beat the Rams he said, "we'll have to play our tough defensive type game and try to discipline their offense with it."

Following this a film of the second half of the UMass-St. Anselm's game was shown, narrated by the head coach.

Redmen Meet Rhody In Clash Of Unbeatens

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

In a clash of unbeatens, the UMass basketball team travels to Kingston tonight to meet the Rams of Rhode Island in a big Yankee Conference tilt scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. Although it is still quite early in the season, the outcome of this battle should have a lot to do with the final YanCon standings.

Coach Tom Carmody has led his Rams through their first three games with little or no difficulty. Rhody has downed Maine (110-82), New Hampshire (86-73), and Brown and appear to be a team to be contended with this season despite the loss of its two premier players of 1969-70.

Both Bob Fultz and Claude English, All-YanCon picks last season and among the better players developed in New England in recent years, have graduated and it was thought by many that the Rams would miss them dearly. Instead, Rhody is off to one of its best starts in years.

Utilizing a fast break type of attack, the Rams have become a high-scoring unit as their early season scores indicate. Among its players, Rhody claims five men averaging in double figures which demonstrates the balance in its attack.

The leading scorer is 6'5 forward Nate Adger. The veteran Ram is scoring over 20 points a contest and tallied 27 against Maine and 21 versus Brown. He is also considered a fine rebounder.

Joining Adger in the forecourt are Al Hazzard and Phil Hickson. Hickson is a 6'4 forward who is netting about fifteen a game although he hit for 18 at Orono and 17 against Brown. A 6'7 center, Hazzard has scored over 11 per game with a high of 20 against the Wildcats.

Another forward to be contended with is Steve Rowell. Though only a sophomore, the high-scoring reserve forward is popping them in at a 16 per game clip and he too has hit twenty in the Rams battle with intrastate rival Brown.

In the backcourt, Rhody has a couple of veterans who make the running attack work. In the age of the big man, 5'5 Ed "Flea" Molloy is somewhat of an anachronism yet he is in large measure responsible for the Rams success thus far. Despite his size, Molloy has managed to contribute 16 a game for the Rams and has twice hit the 20 mark, against both Brown and Maine.

Another one of Carmody's mini-guards who will get a starting nod is 5'9 Dwight Tolliver. Though the lowest scorer among the starters, Tolliver has still managed eight points a game.

This is the second of four straight conference games for the Redmen and each one is important if UMass is too repeat as YanCon champs. After its unexpected struggle with Vermont many people might wonder how the Redmen will do against a club of Rhody's talent. Coach Learnen, however, feels his players are ready and mentioned what he thought the keys to the game would be.

"We have to stop their break. They're a tough team to defense but if we rebound we should stop their break."

LAYUP LINES—The initial Redman statistics of the season were released yesterday and they showed Julius Erving to be averaging 29.5 points and 18.5 rebounds per game. Though the opponents so far leave a bit to be desired, the talented Erving seems off to another great year...Talk about balance, UMass' backcourt twins, Mike Pagliara and John Betancourt, are averaging 14.5 and 15 points per game, respectively. Betancourt has ten assists to Pagliara's nine while Pagliara edged out his backcourt mate in shooting percentage, .529 to .520...Overall, the Redmen are scoring 88.5 per game to 65.5 for their opponents. They also lead in the rebounding category, 98-78.

Fusia Reflects On "Experiences And Compensations

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

The news of the resignation of Vic Fusia from his post as head UMass football coach, after ten years at that helm, has had a good day and a half to soak in now. Each has had his own reactions to the matter, and the now ex-coach himself had some very interesting things to say concerning his decision.

FINISHING WITH A SMILE—The above picture, taken after a big victory of a year ago, reflects the mood Vic Fusia was in yesterday when he talked about his resignation. (MDC photo by Ken Emery)

A visit was paid late yesterday afternoon to Fusia's office in Boyden, a busy place at that time as the man who also receiving visitations from his players and various telephone calls from well-wishers and close associates. He was in a relaxed, calm, pleasant mood. He appeared to have complete confidence in what he was doing and what he would do in the future.

He was asked, for what must have been the umpteenth time in the last 24 hours, what factors were involved in his decision to vacate the head-coaching position, and he had a reply, "Well, there are many factors. There's 25 years of very pleasant, cherishable experiences and many compensations....How lucky can one be?"

After a slight pause he added this, "There always comes that time when you have to hang up the cleats and take these experiences and add them to the total program."

And that is what Fusia is hoping he can do in what will become his new post, that of "a staff associate in charge of sports promotion."

He elaborated on his new job, "I got one of those fancy titles that seems to be permeating the entire campus as 'staff associate', that officially involves the promotion of football and basketball, and the programming of the radio and t.v."

In this new role of the promotion of the two major Redman sports, football and basketball, Fusia hopes "that the many experiences I have will help me to substantially contribute."

If one read yesterday's Fusia stories in the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald Traveler, he will remember that this guy remarked that ten years ago he felt UMass was the finest school in the land and that, at the present time, he feels it is even a greater place. He was asked to say a little more about this, and so he did.

He explained his viewpoint by first indicating that, before he was ever contacted by the UMass athletic department he "had pretty much made up my mind that I wanted to stay at Pitt (the University of Pittsburgh where Fusia was the top assistant grid coach before coming here) for the rest of my life...."

However, he was interviewed for the head football coaching job here after the 1959 UMass season but declined the offer for the job. This place made him do a lot of second-thinking about not accepting the head coaching job for the Redmen, and when the post opened up again a year later, he readily accepted the offer. From there on in, as Fusia puts it, "I fell in love with it (UMass) and this has never changed."

In pinpointing the cause of his attraction to this college, he commented, "Believe it or not,..... it was the response of the student body." He wanted to make it clear that he was sincere on this point. He said he welcomed fan criticism, for he believed that a job as big as that of a head football coach opens itself up to criticism just by its own nature.

He feels that it is the job he is doing, not his own personality, that is the subject of fan criticism. He said that a coach should accept criticism as impersonal because, to Fusia's way of thinking, "You want so much of that."

After talking at length about his resignation and the things that revolve about it, and about his love for UMass, Fusia discussed his players and what their reactions have been to his stepping down.

He related, "They have come in in ones and twos and threes, and let me tell you, I've received all the compensation a man can receive because of their sincerity....It makes you think it was all worth it."

The manner in which his gridders came down to Boyden to his office, to see him, to shake his hand, and to hold good conversation obviously touched him, for he remarked, "The purpose of the game is to win, no doubt about that, but the job of the coach is to add to the development of the player, and if the coach can feel that he has added a little to the development of the total player, it makes it worthwhile."

"Believe it, Fusia definitely felt that his coaching experience here at UMass was worthwhile because the reaction by the Redman football players to his resignation made him feel that he had added something to their total development as players. This conversation with Fusia was a bit abbreviated; several players were waiting to see him.
conversation with Fusia was a bit abbreviated; several players were waiting to see him.

SOME SIDENOTES—While on the subject of UMass football, some Redman gridders have gooten recent recognition via selection to the All-New England and All-East football squads. Picked to the former team's first string was defensive end Jim Kelliher, linebacker Joe Sabulis and offensive tackle Bob Donlin. Making the All-East first team were Kelliher and Donlin.

One of the phone calls Fusia received today was from Boston Patriot head coach John Mazur. The first thing Fusia had to offer to Mazur was, "I figured that all of my luck ran out, and I hope it will all go your way."

Finehirsh Strike Analysis

'The Strike Had Real Power'

By JAMES E. GOLD
Thursday Issue Fditor

Sidney Finehirsh spoke on lessons from last Spring's strike last night before 15 in 804 Campus Center. Among his topics were students' disillusionment with their power and involvement of workers since the strike.

Last Spring's student strike was effectively used to close down the university as far as business as usual is concerned, to restructure the University's power and to force President Nixon to withdraw troops from Cambodia within the deadline he originally announced, said Finehirsh.

He pointed out that an underlying assumption of these results is that "Nixon lies" and that the ruling class will use almost any means to stay in power.

"The Strike itself had real power", said Finehirsh. The massiveness of the movement showed this he said. The administration "hid for two weeks" except for negotiating with student representatives, he stated. The entire University was run by the democratically elected strike committee, said Finehirsh. And they were able to lead because "people felt that the strike committee represented them," Finehirsh added.

Finehirsh said that students misunderstood the power of last spring's strike. He emphasized that students were disillusioned because even though the strike did not end the war, it did have power in its massiveness; over 15,000 participated here.

Finehirsh indicated that the strike politicized many new people. Although their ideas were often naive, they showed an intuitive understanding of the "American corporate capitalist" system. He used the examples of the march on local banks, the great Coke boycott, and the proposed Wall St. excursion.

In these projects, said Finehirsh, students realized the need for allies in the strike and the economic pressures that needed to be applied. However, he added, it was naive in that students don't have enough power within themselves but needed other sectors of the society.

The mere threat of massive power helped the movement, Finehirsh said. Since "students are not isolated in this country", but are "connected with all sectors of society through parents, friends, Blacks, workers and during summer jobs, students had the power to bring in all sectors of the society, especially the workers. When Nixon realized this, he brought the troops out of Cambodia and did not send the National Guard on to many campuses, Finehirsh pointed out.

According to Finehirsh, the strike has opened the eyes of some workers. He pointed out that the United Auto Workers have placed signs around Detroit which say, "Stop Inflation-End The War Now." As Nixon keeps "attacking the workmen's pocketbooks to fight inflation", said Finehirsh, the more they will become politicized.

Finehirsh felt that another student strike could possibly grow out of the planned Washington demonstration next April 24th. This demonstration will be organized by the National Peace Action Coalition which includes such groups as the UAW, Teamsters, Letter-carriers, GIs, and veterans.

He also stressed the need of a vanguard group which will lead the movement, get out information on the movement and lay the groundwork for an eventual socialist revolution. He said that the Young Socialist Alliance is just such a group and urged people to join it.

Students: Seen But Not Heard

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon invited several high school and college students to his Thursday night news conference - but not to ask questions.

Although most of the students attended hoping to join in quizzing the chief executive - most of them hoping to ask about how he plans to improve communications with the nation's youth - The White House said they had been invited as guests and observers, not reporters.

Though hesitant at first the 10 students lost their stage fright and stood up shouting "Mr. President," knowing full well he probably wouldn't recognize them.

The students, most epresenting their school newspapers and radio stations, said they really didn't expect to be called on but would still like an opportunity to talk with the President about improving his communications with young people.

Fac-Sen Endorses Expansion To 30,000

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Meeting in a special session to discuss long range planning, the Faculty Senate endorsed to the Board of Trustees a plan to expand UMass/Amherst to 30,000 students by 1980. The "cluster college" proposal was discussed and tabled.

The Senate moved to accept the proposal of its Long Range Planning Committee that this university expand from 20,000 to 30,000 students over the next ten years. The "threatening" nature of this motion in relation to the state legislature was discussed. It was felt that, since the Board of Trustees would have the final say on the matter, the Senate could not be considered to "threaten" the legislature.

The feelings of the Senate were somewhat mixed on this issue. Professor Barnard in particular raised a "trivial" point: he has to share a telephone with two other faculty members. "Until the University can supply its own faculty with adequate telephone service, it should not expand," he quipped.

A motion by Professor Barnard to build safeguards into the process of growth, including provisions for adequate housing and protection for the environment, was not passed because it failed to provide for an agency to decide what was "adequate." The Senate voted down a motion by Professor Allan Hoffman to definitely limit University expansion at 30,000 in 1980.

The Senate tabled the "cluster college" proposal, which called for the construction of a number of "satellite campuses" to help handle University expansion. Many Senators felt that this sort of action would create a low quality of education in the newly constructed campuses.

Since the students of these satellite campuses would have to rely upon this University for upper-level courses, and since this University presumably has an obligation to the community colleges, the proposal would moreover tend to lead to the elimination of a freshman class here. It was brought out that a detailed study oftheexpansion plans of the other colleges in this area had not been made, and that the "cluster colleges" might interfere with them.

The proposal could not be quickly passed over: the Long Range Planning Committee had clearly established the need for growth, and some sort of plans must be made. The Senate will consider this new proposal, made from outside the Planning Committee, when it again discusses planning next year.

Summer Session Slated To Last Eight Weeks

This year's Summer Session will be eight weeks in length running from June 28 to August 20. There is a total of approximately 290 courses open to undergraduates this summer and a total of approximately 250 courses open to graduate students.

The decision to have an eight week session rather than a six week session was made in order to allow an average course load of 12 credits rather than merely 9.

Last year the Summer Session offered a six week term at the beginning of the summer, termed a "Senior Session". This was done to enable seniors to pick up a few needed credits in order to graduate. Any student interested in a similar arrangement for this summer should go to room 920 Campus Center.

Milton Blasts Exploitation Of Alaska And Mekong Delta

By LINDA BALICKI
Staff Reporter

"International Aid Agencies will have to pay more attention to the specific problems of the third world areas they are trying to develop." Such was the advice of John P. Milton, a founder of the Friends of the Earth at last night's Distinguished Ecology Lecture finale for the semester.

Milton commented that such development by lobbyists in the United States, Britain and Russia showed no real concern about the ecological as well as human destruction and damage being done as a result of economic colonization and exploitation of such areas as the Mekong Delta in Southeast Asia and Alaska.

He stated that such projects as the proposed Mekong Basin Dam system and the Brooks Ridge Pipeline in Alaska do not take into consideration the feelings and opinions of the people who live and work daily in the area. He cited the fact that the Eskimos were not consulted with regard to the building of the pipeline and that the building of the pipeline would have grave environmental and economic consequences.

He went on to explain that the shifting thermal conditions of the Arctic could easily cause breakages in the crude oil pipeline which could result in a contamination of coastal and river areas and would result in a serious decrease of fish reproduction. He also stated that if the pipeline were to be laid above ground as an alternative plan suggests, that this would interrupt the migration and fawning patterns of the caribou herds. Much of the economic base of the region is grounded and maintenance of the vast herds which roam the region.

With regards to the Mekong project, Milton stated that the damming of the Mekong River would result in decreased fish spawning, would have serious health consequences and would force residents of the area to migrate to the forest areas in upper regions with the result that they would be forced to adopt a life style and pattern for which they are not prepared. He also stated that these factors when paired with the rate of population increase would result in increasing poverty and depression within the area.

Milton proposed the exploration of alternate forms of energy sources such as solar or wind which would not be of a pollutant nature. He emphasized that international aid agencies should take steps to break off the atomic energy circle. He also stated that the United States should take steps to curb its energy consumption so as to allow the developing nations of the world the opportunity to have the increased energy resources which they will demand in future years.

In The Nation And The World

Nixon Meets Press On Railroad Strike

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon arranged to meet with newsmen Thursday evening and respond to inevitable questions about the railroad strike, his shifting attitude toward the economy and a possible extended cease fire in Southeast Asia.

Major television and radio networks arranged to carry live the 7 p.m. EST White House news conference - the first Nixon has held in 19 weeks and the 12th he has held before a live national audience in nearly 23 months as President.

Nixon was up much of Wednesday night awaiting congressional action on legislation designed to head off a nationwide railroad strike which began at midnight. In the face of congressional action, however, the walkout appeared to be dissolving Thursday.

The President signed the special legislation ordering the strikers back on the job until March 1, but complained the immediate 13.5 percent pay boost included in the measure would worsen the nation's sharpest inflationary wage price spiral in more than 20 years.

He said any dictated pay raise should be accompanied by modification in union work rules to increase productivity.

Nixon said because American forces are steadily and rapidly being withdrawn from South Vietnam, "it is vitally important that the President as commander in chief take action" to protect the troops that remain.

The President said also he must insist upon continued reconnaissance flights over the North to make sure no such Communist buildups occur.

Back on foreign affairs, Nixon was asked why he did not consult with Congress before going ahead with the commando raid on a prisoner of war compound near Hanoi in North Vietnam.

The President replied there was no consultation "because of the high risk involved to the men."

Asked if he could ever see a need for the use of ground forces in Cambodia, Nixon replied: "None whatever."

Asked if he has abandoned hope for the Paris peace talks, Nixon said "Not at all."

"We are going to continue the negotiations as long as they will and as long as there is some hope for the prisoner negotiation," Nixon said.

He noted that Vietnam casualties were down this week to 27, and said the slowdown in the war should be helpful in calming the nation's campuses.

"Now it is time for labor and management to quit furthering inflation and start help fighting inflation," he said. "It is a matter of timeliness."

Asked whether he would be a one term president, Nixon said he "would let them speculate on whether I will be a one term president."

Yale Proposes New Plan For Financing Tuition

Yale and several other universities are negotiating for private support of a plan to allow students to finance their education on a long term basis - perhaps 30 years - through payment of a percentage of their earnings after graduation, a Yale spokesman said Thursday.

Called the deferred tuition payment plan, it is designed as a new way to eventually meet rising college operating costs without having to increase cuition, already at record levels, the spokesman said in a telephone interview.

The spokesman said "the Ivy League and some small private colleges are actively involved with Yale" in finding support with private foundations for the plan.

He said the idea of the plan is to offer students the option of financing part of their educational costs on a very long term basis, perhaps 30 years. Graduating students would then pay a percentage of their annual income to the university. The percentage paid would depend on the amount of tuition deferred.

Court Order Forces Rail Worker Return

WASHINGTON (AP)—The White House Thursday ordered priorities for emergency shipments by air, ship and truck in the face of the nationwide railroad strike, while a federal judge hauled union leaders into court to answer a contempt complaint. A federal judge ordered nationwide railroad strikers back on the job by midnight Thursday or face fines of $200,000 a day.

Dennis, President of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, at a news conference at the Labor Department shortly after U.S. District Judge John H. Pratt found the union in contempt of court, said his back to work order should end the crippling strike.

Dennis said after the federal court ruling: "I now order a return to work on a temporary basis pending settlement of this dispute."

Dennis said the Labor Department had assured him of speedy negotiations under the special act of Congress that ordered the railroads to pay an immediate 13.5 per cent pay hike to nearly 500,000 workers involved and work out the rest in collective bargaining.

Dennis said he personally believes "the trains will be running by midnight."

Secretary of Labor J.D. Hodgson, announcing the shipping priorities at the White House, said the strike was having an enormous impact on the nation's already troubled economy.

The White House, expressing hope the strike would end soon, said the shipping priorities were aimed at speeding movement of food, fuels, hospital and sick room supplies, government personnel, some mail and defense shipments stranded by the nation's third coast to coast rail walkout in half a century.

The Issues

WAGES: The four unions have rejected a railroad offer of 37 percent in wage hikes spread in six steps over three years that would add a total of $1.32 to the current top pay range of $3.45 to $3.80 per hour. The separate unions have demanded pay hikes totaling 40 to 45 percent over three years.

WORKRULES: The railroads have demanded work rule changes to tighten efficiency and result in savings they said would allow them to afford the wage increases offered. The unions complain that the proposed work rule changes would result in elimination of thousands of jobs, speed up the work load for all employees, and force many longtime rail workers to root up their families and move to other cities because of the proposed realignment of railroad divisions. Current rules require frequent changes of train crews when crossing divisional lines.

Krishna Rite Attempts To Form Linkage With God

LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Hare Krishna, a religious movement aimed at the revival of the love of God that everyone has within them has begun to take root on the UMass campus. Group meetings are being held every Wednesday and Thursday night in 204 Cance under the direction of Lee Roth, the movement's leader on campus.

Each meeting is devoted to the chanting of the words "Hare Krishna" and the study and discussion of the vadic literature scripts. According to Roth, the continuous chanting is an attempt to attain a state of nirvana, or internal peace and can be done not only in a formal service atmosphere but may also be chanted at other times as well.

He stated that the informal chanting would also be a means of spreading the movement but more importantly would become a matter of consciousness and work to replace material concerns. This he said would be in accordance with one of the primary aims of the movement which is to try to move people out of the birth-life-death syndrome and give them a sense of the real purpose of human existence. He stated that each member of the movement trys to attain life perfection and that while they may not achieve true perfection during their lifetime they at least gain some blissfulness or satisfaction.

According to Roth, Hare Krishna takes on added importance as a movement because of the modern tendency for people to become less devoted. It is felt that devotees will gain benefit from the chanting because of the full potency of devotion which is contained in his name.

Roth also stated that an open meeting entitled "Krishna Conciousness An Alternative to Existentialism" will be held from 4 to 6 p.m. on Wednesday December 16, in the Club Room of the Berkshire Dining Commons. Co-sponsored by the Bhaktiyoga Club and the Southwest Center for Human Development, the meeting will feature Jack Deaver and a discussion of the vadic philosophy. There will also be a play given depicting the effects of the Hare Krishna cult on a member of the cult.

He also went on to state that the Krishna rite also attempts a linkage with God as well as a knowledge of God. This knowledge is infinitesimal as God is infintesimal and therefore the movement places emphasis on the fact that a person becomes self-realized and realizes the knowledge of God and of himself from within.

NES To Review Semester Activity

The Northern Educational Service tutoring program will close out the fall semester with a mass meeting of all the tutors currently working in the program this Sunday night, Dec. 13th in rooms 163-164 of the Campus Center at 7:30.

N.E.S. has undertaken a wide variety of activities this semester in order to provide their tutees with an overall view of learning rather than a strictly textbook method. They have many tutoring games and non-school books in their office (104 C.C.) to arouse learning in children in different ways.

They also provided the Springfield youngsters with a chance to participate in activities other than tutoring. For example, 40 youngsters came to UMass to see a black players theater group perform; UMass ran a series of Halloween parties in each of the four centers with over 150 kids participating; and many youngsters were taken to UMass football games this year. Planned for the coming week are two activities: some 30 children will come to campus to hear former Celtic great Bill Russell lecture and a Christmas party will be held at each of the centers a week from tomorrow.

Information on these Christmas parties will be given at the meeting Sunday. Also on the agenda for the meeting are discussions of the problems of the program, tutoring work to be done within the Springfield school system; the orientation program for next semester, a presentation of new tutoring materials and an explanation of the modular credit system currently being used. All students who are currently in the program are urged to attend. An N.E.S. spokesman stressed that "our tutors participation is the only way our program can become great."

Women's Lib All-Nighter

UMass Women's Liberation will sponsor an all night teach-in on Saturday, Dec. 12 beginning at 1:00 p.m. in the Student Union ballroom. Free 24 hour childcare will be provided. Everyone is welcome to attend the panel discussions, rock concert, and films.

The teach-in will begin with a panel discussion of myths that have plagued the women's movement. Following the discussion will be workshops, some of which are reserved for men. The New Haven Women's Rock Band will be featured at 4:00 p.m., followed by a karate demonstration.

In the evening Florence Luscomb, an early suffragist, will speak. More workshops will follow, culminating in a discussion of the film "Picnic" to be shown at 1:30 a.m. After the film there will be poetry and music until dawn. The final event will be a discussion of the prospects for the feminist movement. A natural foods breakfast will be served Sunday morning.

The Cynic Sells Out

Candidate Mark Silverman

Three and a half years of berating the foolishness of student politics and calling student government elections popularity contests run by the most disgusting sort of people on campus – the self-appointed student leaders.

Three and a half years of purposely ignoring all the elections for Student Senate and class Government and SUG board. Three and a half years of placing myself on some level above the chronic ego-trippers of student politics.

Three and a half years of this stoic morality all gone.

It began a week or two ago when these people who live in the apartment below us decided that, for a lark, they would run a slate of candidates for Commuter Assembly and take over the most useless organization this side of the Mortar Board. They got seven names and then asked me if they could add my name to the ticket. What the hell. Go ahead. Eight people running on a ticket for Commuter Assembly. All of them living at 33 Phillips Street. All of them cynical of any kind of student election. All of them out of their minds.

Yesterday was election day. I'd forgotten about it and just walked over to the Union, minding my own business. Then I saw this stupid sign which said "Vote for the Phillips Eight with my name on the bottom. Disgrace. Too late to turn back. Might as well play the role.

I decided to call a friend of mine who has had some experience in Student elections. His name is Glenn Elters and he is President of the Student Senate. But when I called his office and asked for him, an ugly voice shouted at me, "No, he ain't here." Click. So much for advice.

Vote. The candidate has to vote for himself. I knew this from reading newspapers; you always see the pictures of the candidates, with their wives on their arms, trudging into the voting booths at 8:00 a.m.

So I walked into the voting place, picturing myself as a young and somewhat overweight Dwight Eisenhower trudging before the T.V. lights to do his duty. But there were no T.V. lights and just one scrawny, student-leaderish kid sat at the table.

Because I had never voted in any election at UMass before, I was nervous. And this wise guy didn't help things either. "What's wrong, first election, ha, ha."

I finally managed to get a ballot and saw my name right up at the top. First place on the ballot. This supposedly means 10% in additional votes in most municipal elections. Whoopie. I might win. I started to get all excited about this but as I was walking out of the voting place, the scrawny student leaderish kid said, "Hey, all of you guys really do live at Phillips Streets....we thought it was all some big joke."

Some big joke. Me, the great cynic, running for a student leader office.

I walked across the Union lobby and down to the Hatch where I saw this guy named Paul Johnson who said, "Hey, are you really running for Commuter Assembly....I wouldn't vote for you if you were running against Ken Johnson."

Sitting at a table in the Hatch was Bruce Balboni, who is the guy who resigned as Student Senate President a year ago because student politics was a meaningless waste of time. I just walked by him and pretended not to see him.

By 2:00 a grand total of 18 people had voted in the election. The Union lobby was jammed with people as classes got out but no one even wandered by the election place. I stood just in front of the ballot box and decided I might as well campaign.

A dumpy looking girl with make-believe blond hair walked over to vote. I introduced myself and asked her to vote for me and she said that she would. As she walked away, I began to feel sick.

On my way back to the Collegian office a friend stopped me and said, "I saw you down by the voting booth....are you going to write one of those sarcastic columns about the stupidity of student elections?" I just sort of smiled and walked away.

The Collegian office was delightful. "Ha, Ha, Silverman's running for Commuter Assembly...can I have your autograph? What are you going to do...win and then dissolve the Assembly? What are you trying to do, write a Breslin piece?"

Then someone finally told me what the Commuter Assembly is. I felt worse. $12,000 out of tax money to help the cause of commuter living. Right on.

I was emasculated into the great blubbering mass of wasted energy which is spent each day by the hundreds of Student Leaders at UMass. I had spent half a day worrying about winning, or losing, a student election. I would be a student leader in the true elected sense by nightfall.

I would be able to play in Student Senate bridge games as an insider. I would be able to call Dean Field Bill behind his back. I would be able to wear a tie and jacket to basketball games.

I was student leader over night. I could play with $12,000 and feel important. I could justify not going to classes to serve the students of the University. I could now consider myself an elitist. I was a student leader.

Thirty Thousand Redmen

Problems, problems, we've got plenty of problems. The Faculty Senate yesterday endorsed the Trustees' plan to expand the Amherst campus population to 30,000. I hope they know what kind of a Pandora's box they've opened.

Thirty thousand students. Eleven hundred acres. And Trustee John Haigis of the Building and Grounds Committee says that no one much feels like building any more dorms because students complain about the way the dorms are now.

The Fraternity-Sorority park idea has proved to be a big bust. Potentially a good idea if you go in for that sort of thing, it didn't have the financial support it needed to keep its head above water. Now some development company has an option to buy part of the land up by the Tillson Farm.

The Northeast Area dorms open next semester. Worcester Commons isn't any further away from there than the Copper Kettle is from Orchard Hill. But the kids in Orchard Hill want their own commons now. Perhaps they could work out something with the people in Southwest who don't want one (or more) of theirs. The problem with dining commons is that we have to eat there or they'll get repossessed by the state. UMass' great building sticker, Planning Director H.J. Littlefield, says the solution is to turn one of Southwest's dining halls into a student union. That's a great idea. Not only would we have a union where we could get a book or something but, and I don't quite understand this, everyone wouldn't have to eat in D.C. #5 or #6 every day. Perhaps before people get too excited about a boycott, a little investigating would be in order.

What we ought to do is look around and decide what we want to do and stop fooling around and do it. Every time some kind of problem comes up, the first thing you know it gets shoved off into some kind of committee or other. Be that as it may, short of usurping half of the town of Amherst's land area, I don't see where another then thousand people are going to fit.

And Nobody Laughed

WASHINGTON -- The last person to laugh in the United States was Robert Ketchum on Monday, Aug. 3, 1978. There was no law passed to prevent people from laughing, they just quit voluntarily.

No one knows exactly when people gave up laughing in America. The Republicans claimed it was during the Johnson Administration, and the Democrats said it happened during President Nixon's term of office. Putnam Toynbee, who in 1984 wrote "The Definitive History of the '70s," claims the first culture group to give up laughing was students.

"There's nothing to laugh about," they said to each other in despair. "Everything is rotten. The government, the establishment, the system and life itself. We're doomed to a plastic existence, and we'll be damned if we're going to laugh about it. If we show in any way we're happy, it will be a sign of weakness."

Toynbee points out that anything youth did in the United States was eventually pickedup by the adult population, and when young people stopped laughing, older people started to emulate them.

Scowling became very fashionable in the "with it" crowd. Articles began appearing in the chic magazines that laughter was out. Pretty soon the word had filtered to the hinterlands that anyone who laughed about anything was a fool or a knave.

Advertisers, sensitive to the mood of the consumer, canceled all comedy shows on television; the networks put outmemos ordering all laughter bleeped from their programs, and newspapers dropped any stories or comic strips which might produce a chuckle for the reader.

Toynbee says in his book that it was difficult for a certain segment of society to give up laughing, but these people did it privately in their homes, where no one could see them.

A group of friends would get together, send the children off for the night with relatives, and then laugh for two or three hours amongst themselves.

There were certain key clubs where people could go to hear a comedian or see a funny motion picture from the past. But as the older generation started dying out the clubs went bankrupt, as there were no young laughers to take their place.

Laughter in public buildings was forbidden and considered exceptionally bad taste. Anyone who laughed in a restaurant or theater was asked to leave.

If someone attempted to laugh on the street or in a park, he was met with stony stares and/or assaulted by angry passersby.

The government contributed to the antilaughter campaign by issuing pronouncements every day that things were worse than they were the day before.

Toynbee claims the last person in the United States known to have laughed in public was Robert Ketchum who lived in Salem, Mass.

Ketchum was standing on a street corner when a friend of his, Adolph Green, walked by and slid on a banana peel. Before he realized what he was doing, Ketchum burst into laughter.

An angry crowd gathered and grabbed Ketchum and dragged him to the center of the square where they tied him to a post, threw branches from trees at his feet and burned him at the stake. All three networks covered the event, and the lesson was not lost on the populace. Toynbee feels it will be some time before anyone laughs in public in the United States again.

D.C. Boycott

Dear Sirs:

On Thursday, December 10, 1970, my staff and I met with representatives of the Southwest Assembly and a student representative from Orchard Hill. Present were Mr. David Stanton, Southwest Assembly President, Mr. David Kuppenheimer, Service Committee Chairman of the Southwest Assembly, Mr. Jesse O'Leary, Southwest resident, and Mr. Jon Bove, Orchard Hill resident.

During the meeting, discussions focused on the issues and concerns raised by the proposed student boycott of the southwest dining commons. The student representatives voiced two primary concerns: 1.) that compulsory meal plans should not be used as the only methods for paying off the bonds sold to construct the dining commons buildings; and 2) that a compulsory meal plan system be abolished for all students.

My office is committed to addressing itself to investigate and effect ways of changing the present mandatory board system. In order to change to an optional board plan, there are at least two major obstacles facing the University. These are policy-legal-contractural restrictions and fixed financial obligations. This office will begin to immediately hold discussions with members of the administration, students, the Student Senate Food Services Committee, and at a later date with the recently appointed Vice Chancellor Campion.

Every effort will be made to resolve these two major obstacles and implement any boarding policy changes in time for the beginning of the 1971-72 academic year.

Sincerely yours,
Randolph W. Bromery
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs

Freedom?

I would like to very briefly comment on the confused ramblings of a certain Carbuncle (too bad he lacks the conviction to sign his real name) on the subject of academic freedom. The author informs us that "the content of academic freedom becomes the needs of corporate America." Such a statement is only partially true. Certainly, the university protects those who orient themselves toward the corporate power structure, but it also protests such dissenters as John Brentlinger and Howie Gadlin. Academic freedom also should have shielded Angela Davis, but the University of California, for a number of reasons proved incapable of resisting Ronald Reagan's politicalization.

I would agree with Carbuncle that our corporate structure and resulting warped priorities must be changed radically and fundamentally. I would agree that our freedoms must be expanded and that human needs must come before corporate profits. I question whether attacks on the civil liberties and academic freedom of "counter-revolutionaries" serve any purpose in effecting these changes.

To those who are interested in the subject of academic freedom (from whatever perspective) there will be a lecture and discussion on the subject Thursday December 17 at 7:30 p.m. in Herter 231. The guest lecturer will be Steve Kelman, a recent Harvard graduate and the author of Push Comes To Shove, a documentation of escalating absurdity at Harvard in 1969, following the University Hall confrontation, and former national president of the Young Peoples Socialist League.

Commuters

To the commuters:

We of the Party wish to express our gratitude for the faith which you have expressed in us. We shall endeavor to improve the lot of the commuter, both as a student and as a resident of the Pioneer Valley. It is our hope that we will at all times have the advice and assistance of our constituency. Our duty is clear, and for the good of the constituency, and the community, we dare not fail.

Homosexuality: Mental Ills Or Sexual Orientation

How many gay people do you think you know? Because of the way homosexuals are forced to live in our repressive society, you can only guess. Even in the supposed "liberal" intellectual environment that exists here, negative sanctions are so powerful as to cause the vast majority of gay people to assume dual identities and to suppress their own innate feelings in attempting to conform with straight society.

To a gay person his sexual desires are natural. Gay people are not sick. The classic study (Hooker, 1965) refuting the disease concept of homosexuality involved matching 30 homosexual men with 30 heterosexual men for age, education and I.Q. and subjecting both to a battery of psychological tests. Intensive analysis of these tests showed that there was no inherent connection between homosexual orientation and clinical symptoms of mental illness. The fallacy that homosexuality is a personality disorder has been perpetrated by some psychiatrists who project their own homosexual patients' neuroses onto the entire gay population. This is clearly unsound, since only maladjusted homosexuals, comprising a small minority of gay people, undergo psychotherapy. Those who do need psychiatric care usually need it because they cannot cope with the negative societal sanctions against homosexuality (Curran and Parr, 1957).

The gay person's problem, then, is more sociological than psychological. It is largely due to society's attitude toward homosexuality, a consequence of centuries of male supremacy and heterosexual chauvinism. This general attitude which privileges the sexuality of certain people over that of others, sometimes referred to as sexism, must be dispelled before all women and men, gay and straight alike, can be truly liberated sexually and emotionally.

We of the Student Homophile League think this can best be achieved through education, both of ourselves and of all society. We propose to do this in two ways:

1. By creating a supportive atmosphere of social comfort for gay people in this area by encouraging the discussion and evaluation of gay problems.
2. By presenting to the larger community the facts about homosexuality and gay repression.

For those interested in further information on the disease concept of homosexuality we suggest Martin Hoffman's psychological study, The Gay World, which is available in paperback at the Campus Center bookstore.

SWAP 1970 - Planning For The Future: Where Do We Go From Here?

What Is SWAP? When Did It Start?

The SWAP (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) Conference annually brings together a selected group of approximately 200 students, faculty, administrators, trustees and legislators for an off-campus weekend to discuss problems facing the University. SWAP provides an opportunity to exchange and promote ideas on all areas affecting our community. It is the purpose of SWAP not only to discuss, but to serve as a catalyst for future action and reform.

The first SWAP Conference was held in 1959 and consisted of representatives of major student organizations, faculty, and administrators. Such issues as communications, student taxes, residence hall and central student government were discussed for the first few years of SWAP's existence. With the significant growth of the University in size and complexity during the 60's, the students involved in activities and the faculty members and administrators who were interested in all aspects of student life naturally tended to be more concerned with broader issues facing the University. The format of the SWAP Conference, in accordance with the concerns of the student representatives of major student organizations, was consequently planned with these broader issues in mind. Student autonomy, reform of residence hall living, student representation on faculty and University committees, academic reform, the student judicial system and security were found among the more relevant issues. (Incidentally, it was the result of a SWAP discussion group that ultimately led to, for example, the abolition of women's curfews, and the inception of 24 hour open house which is a radical change from the not too distant past).

The delegates of 1970 SWAP (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) Conference will begin deliberations on Thursday, December 10 and continue in conference until Sunday, December 13. After meeting in the Campus Center on Thursday evening, the group of students, faculty, administration, trustees and legislators will reconvene at the Oak n' Spruce Resort in South Lee on Friday where they will participate in a series of study groups, workshops, and panel discussions through Sunday.

This year it was necessary for students, faculty, and administrators to apply to be a SWAP delegate. Delegates were chosen by a subcommittee of the SWAP committee on the basis of their expertise, interest and awareness of the problems facing this University. Among the obligations of the selected conferees was obligatory attendance at two pre-SWAP meetings and attendance at the full SWAP weekend Friday afternoon December 11, through Sunday afternoon, December 13. Additionally, most delegates were expected to serve on the Research and Resources Subcommittee or the Continuation Subcommittee described herein and/or their study/discussion groups beyond the stipulated meeting times.

The format for SWAP '70 has been designed to provide an opportunity for in-depth study of pertinent problems with an emphasis on implementation of the proposals and resolutions made by the delegates. At a November meeting all delegates met in primary study/discussion groups to which they were arbitrarily assigned. Each of 18 Primary study/discussion groups considered two "generally accepted goals" listed below. The groups were asked to clarify each goal, elaborate on, and develop the goal into an operating statement. The Resources and Research committee of SWAP subsequently accepted requests for background materials which will be provided for each study group's use as they reconvene on Friday and Saturday of SWAP weekend. Initially the study/discussion groups are intended for brainstorming purposes and ultimately will make use of resource materials to develop more concrete operating statements. The conferees participating in each study/discussion group do not necessarily possess significant expertise in the area to be discussed, but will be working with the knowledge of previous developments in the area as provided by the Research and Resource Committee. After this development, it is necessary to consider the means -- that the goals might be achieved.

At noon Saturday, 12 December, in South Lee, a report from each study/discussion group is to be submitted to the SWAP Committee. This report should contain all specific proposals from each group, including any foreseen problems with them, and their comparison with Current University Policies and Procedures. The report should be written within a realistic context, taking into account the philosophical, political and practical limitations of the proposals.

With the completion of the reports the Primary study/discussion groups will be dissolved. A new format of the SWAP conference will emerge Saturday afternoon; new Expertise groups will be formed. Panels of experts will be assigned to these groups, one group for each of the several topics suggested by the study/discussion groups.

SWAP delegates will select their new group on the basis of their personal interest in the topic being discussed. During these meetings, the priorities affecting the achievement of the University's goals should be ordered, and proposals for policy change should be made that will allow the University to achieve its goals more quickly and effectively.

On Sunday after dinner, December 13, reports produced by expertise groups will be presented to a panel of broadly knowledgeable resource people who, by reason of their deep involvement of various aspects of University operations, will be able to speak to particular problems which have been foreseen in actualizing the statement of philosophical goals. The panelist will be:

Dean William F. Field, Dean of Students
Joseph S. Marcus Special Assistant to the Chancellor Public Affairs
John A. Hunt Master Southwest Residential College
Patricia Benarry Vice President, Student Senate
Glenn Elfers President, Student Senate
Oswald Tippo Chancellor, University of Massachusetts Amherst

Accepted Goals Are SWAP Topics

GROUP NO. 1
1. "To sustain our great endeavor, we must encourage intellectual ferment and creative dissent in a world of ideas, for these are the hallmarks of a great university."
2. The numberous and various activities in which members of our community engage outside the classroom walls are an important part of the opportunity for self-fulfillment and community service which is so important to a university. The support given to these activities must be imaginative and creative so that each individual may participate as interest and ability dictate while the needs of the community are responsibly met.

GROUP NO. 4
1. We must do better in giving institutional recognition to true excellence in both teaching and learning.
2. The growth of complex organizations and the increasing variety of technical specialties require that the University provide each student with a deep humanistic concern coupled with a broad technological competence.

Don Trageser Leader
Mario Umana, Dot Burke, Charles Stuart, Phyllis George, Richard Verrochi, Richard Garber, Kevin Kulakowski, Joe Marcus, Phillip Cohen, John Zizis, Kim Macaione

GROUP NO. 5
1. Particularly because of the necessary institutional rigidity of a University, our planning must strive to be both imaginative and realistic.
2. The governance of the University must become more responsive to the real differences that exist among its members while giving greater recognition to the essential community of interest that unites us.

Ross Benjamin Leader
Linda Allen, Frank Mazzei, Tom Filmore, Stan Moss, Valerie Foster, Paul Procopio, Ed Voci, Evan Johnston, Paul Dudash, Dick Palomba, Ellen Coughlin, John Oliver

GROUP NO. 6
1. Our community must seek educational innovations which promote a greater integration between the scholarly work of the faculty and the intellectual needs of the students.
2. The special educational needs of certain groups in the population (blacks, or women) must be considered in the shaping of the educational policies of the University at the same time that the task of transmitting the common core of our culture is not forgotten.

GROUP NO. 8
1. The concept and exercise of individual responsibility has never been more important than it is today. Yet, as the University grows both larger and more complex, the occasions for individuals to exercise responsibility seem to become more rare. Can our community survive without resolution of this paradox?
2. The concept of the tripartite community must become the real basis of a commonality of purpose. It must never be interpreted as a license for unilateral action.

MDC Feature

A Puzzling But Rewarding Experience

By Ian Lessof
Special to MDC

People often come back from SWAP puzzled. They can remember hard, long discussions. They can remember interesting conversations with other delegates who turn out to be upset about the same things, to believe in the same things, and have completely different ideas about what should be done and they can remember loud noise and laughing voices at a party late Saturday night. But it won't all come together with a memory of a productive weekend. They are still puzzled. Its not just the parties.

Looking back at the records from previous SWAP Conferences, it's possible to see real results from SWAP Conferences, it's possible to see real results from SWAP discussions--the most famous in the drive to eliminate curfews for women which had it's organizational start at the 1965 SWAP Conference. The program of individual concentration (instead of a major) leading to the degree and the policy which permits a student to eat in any Commons line (instead of the one nearest his dorm) grew out of SWAP discussion too.

It's not just the parties. But people are still (often) puzzled. They spend the weekend in serious discussion, write a report pack up their stuff and come back to Amherst. The report, when it appears, says things like "We must do better in giving institutional recognition to true excellence in both teaching and learning," or "The concept of the tripartite community must become the real basis of a commonality of purpose. It must never be interpreted as a licence for unilateral action." Is that what it was all for?

Well, anyone who's taken part in a serious discussion about University policy can tell you that such statements are deceptively simple, that for all their obviousness once written down, the discussions lying behind them are intense, serious and important.

Often SWAP reports will continue with a list of suggestions and ideas for how the University might go about achieving the goal which has been hammered out in the discussion of the weekend--"By the expansion of the Honors Program and the academic program of the Residential Colleges," or "By the establishment of a joint Rules Committee representing both Student and Faculty Senate," pay.

And reading over the reports, these suggestions are usually the valuable part--the end of curfews and (no doubt) an example of how we might "give greater recognition to the capacity for individual responsibility." The SWAP program for 1970 is designed to concentrate on such suggestions and to examine both their feasibility and their effectiveness more closely than has been the case in most groups in the past.

For this reason, SWAP 1970 begins with a long list of "Generally Accepted Goals" a phrase promptly acronymized to GAG's for some reasons--which have formed the basis for discussions in the eighteen Study Groups requested information of a factual nature from the SWAP Resources and Research Sub-Committee--the list of questions was long and intense. On Thursday afternoon the members of each Study Group received such answers as could be found, along with reports of April 10-11 Study Groups from last Spring which touch on the subject of SWAP's "goal". Friday night the Study Groups will begin seeking concrete and practical suggestions for the more effective achievement of the University's goals. And on Saturday morning, each Study Group will prepare reports describing the suggestions, ideas, complaints and difficulties which their discussions have explored.

Since SWAP begins with "generally accepted goals, though, the weekend discussions should not take place in a vacuum. And since many of the officials (student, Faculty, Administration) responsible for running the University will be present at SWAP, it is possible to bring the discussions into focus in terms of current policies relatively simply. All that is needed is to bring the 75-100 suggestions from Study Groups together with the 175-200 delegates to the Conference in the right order. According to Putnam Barber, Faculty Advisor to SWAP who has been working on the Programming for the weekend with Ross Benjamin, Richard Story and Bonnie Jackson, "this is a simple matter."

Your reporter confesses to being both confused and weary after bearing a full explanation from the program subcommittee of how this shuffle will take place Saturday after lunch. And he's sure it will all work out for the best, that all the "Resource Persons" will gather in the proper "Expertise Groups" to be joined by interested delegates to explore the suggestions from the right Study Groups. And this reporter looks forward with more enthusiasm to the subsequent discussions than to the mini-registration day that will precede them.

Each of the Expertise Groups will review reports of University affairs--say with Governance, or Security, or Student Activities and, in turn, draw up reports specifying suggestions and ideas which develop in their sessions. The program committee expect these reports to be both detailed and practical, since the expertise groups will have resource people who deal with their subjects on a day-to-day basis and the benefit of the Study Group work. These reports will be reproduced and distributed at lunch on Sunday, so they can be presented to a panel of distinguished members of the University community (see story elsewhere in this section).

During the afternoon, this panel will consider these reports in the context of the University's wide responsibilities to its' student, the faculty and the citizens of the state. WMUA has made plans to tape this discussion for broadcast in the near future.

The SWAP 1970 Conference looks exhausting. Delegates will come back this year, as always, puzzled. This year, though, they should be able to remember what was said at the Conference to bring back to Campus not only new ideas and needed information but also concrete plans and proposals for future action. "Where do we go from here?" SWAP asks. They may even find out.

Continuation Brings Issues Back Home

The continuation aspect of SWAP '70 is one of the most important segments of this year's program. Continuation is an attempt at bringing back to the campus the major issues discussed at the December weekend in some form of an on-campus conference. Thus, the major focus of participation will switch from a small, select group to an open discussion of the entire University community.

Presently, the design of the continuation subcommittee is a flexible one. The organization structure for an on-campus conference will be decided by the continuation representatives who were chosen from the 18 study/discussion groups set up during the December conference.

There are many different ways to implement a continuation program. Whatever the decided plan of implementation, the primary emphasis is going to be on ACTION. Many conferences end in the same circular frame of endless rhetoric. It is the aim of the continuation committee to alter this pattern to a program of constructive action.

Heroin: Exposing The Myths

There is a lot of misinformation and myth circulating "on the street" about heroin. People tend to consider it in extreme terms, terms which either make them emotionally unable to face the subject in any rational manner or emotionally unwilling to face the real dangers and side-effects of the drug.

For many people heroin is the ultimate evil, the land of no return. One of the strongest arguments against marijuana, in emotional appeal though not in factual substance, is that it may lead to heroin. "Shoot-up once and your hooked." "Heroin destroys your mind and your body." "Heroin addicts are uncontrollable criminals." "Heroin addicts commit most of the sex crimes." Sound familiar? None of these statements are true.

Other people, knowing that most of the warnings against marijuana and LSD have been gross distortions designed to frighten users or potential users are very glib in down playing the dangers of heroin. "If they lied to us about pot, then all the talk about heroin must be lies, too." "You'd have to shoot-up everyday for a month to get hooked." "As long as I'm just snorting, I can't get a habit." You guessed it--these people are kidding themselves too.

Statistics about heroin are paradoxical. Though up till now close to half of all heroin addicts have not lived past the age of forty, either being dead or being in prison for life (according to the staff at the Drug Dependence Unit at Yale University), there has as yet been no conclusive evidence produced that heroin in any way contributes to body tissue pathology (it doesn't hurt your body).

Heroin damage can be attributed mostly to two sources: the 97% of the contents of the bag which is not heroin, and the dangerous life style which has characterized heroin addicts.

Heroin is usually cut with quinine and milk sugars, but bags have been known to contain such things as talcum powder, strickninе and crystalized battery acid. Most heroin deaths which are listed as "overdoses" are really due to toxic materials in the diluents (the 97% that's not heroin).

It does occasionally happen that by accident or by malicious intent, a user gets a batch of heroin which contains significantly more heroin than usual. Shooting his usual number of bags in a case like this can cause death.

The "dangerous lifestyle" of heroin addicts has several aspects to it. Hepatitis, tetanus, and related diseases are common among addicts because few take the precautions to use sterile works. The pursuit of heroin can become such an overwhelming drive in an addict's life that he lets himself in for all sorts of poor nutritional conditions because of bad eating habits.

The addict's other main problem is supporting his habit. A ten bag a day drug habit (higher than average, but not uncommon) would cost $30 in New York and $100 a day in Amherst.

Addicts learn to "hustle." This can mean stealing, pimping, dealing, and anything else that can support the habit.

Crime associated with heroin is for money. The sex crime side of heroin is pure myth. Male addicts usually have little or no sex drive. Junk is their woman. Female addicts usually have sex lives only in so far as it is related to supporting their habits.

This has been a general survey of the "traditional" heroin scene. In future weeks we will be talking about the heroin scene as it seems to be developing on campus and in affluent society in general.

Mentally Retarded To Display Handcrafts

Beginning next Monday, Dec. 14th, tables displaying art, ceramics, clothing and other handicrafts made by the mentally retarded from Belchertown State School will be set up in the Campus Center.

All objects will be on sale and all proceedings will go directly to those who made the articles. It is hoped that providing an outlet for the sale of these handidrafts will stimulate interest in their production. Depending on the success of these displays, a booth may be set up in the Campus Center annually.

Members of the University are also urged to give the mentally retarded small token Christmas gifts valued at approximately $1.00. For further information students should contact Roger Lynch 546-8966, 406 Washington. Gifts may be brought to Mr. Lynch's room or arrangements can be made to pick them up somewhere.

BEER TALK
by Ed McMahon

In which the candid connoisseur answers questions about Beer, and the drinking of same.

DEAR ED: Every now and then, I see guys putting salt in their beer. What's it all about?

ALFIE

DEAR ALFIE: I'll tell you what it's about . . . it's about to drive me crazy! Now, I have nothing against salt. On hard-boiled eggs. Or french fries. But not in my Bud®.

Putting salt in beer, some say, perks up the head . . . or livens up the taste . . . makes the beer "drier." With Budweiser, though, all salt can do is make it salty. Because Bud is already just about perfect.

So save the salt for the popcorn, please. We put heart, soul and our exclusive Beechwood Ageing into Budweiser. All you need to enjoy it is a glass . . . or drink it right from the can, if that's your bag . . .

Poetry

Fidelity, Time, Exile

By CHRISTINE REYNOLDS
Fine Arts Staff

Wednesday afternoon Donald Junkins, Director of the UMass Fine Arts Program in English, and Rosellen Brown, award winner of the 1970 National Council on the Arts Selection, read poems from their newly published books.

Herter Auditorium was comfortably filled with people; tweed-jacketed men brought their rich pipe tobacco to mediatatively favor the air. For once auditorium seats allowed enough room for a tall person to stretch out and comfortably settle himself. It has been lightly snowing; the people were still alert from the cold, yet calmed by the soft light.

Perfect.

Donald Junkins was once a preacher and deerhunter; he probably plans to be a congressman and lobsterman in the future. He chose to read ten poems in chronological order from his book "And Sandpiper She Said", which relates the break-up and reconcilliation of a marriage.

Mr. Junkins is a very intense person; his steady, forceful, precisely spaced words were puntuated by his equally emphatic bodily gestures. The poems involved children, gardens, fidelity, time, and other components of his life that he shared with his wife. It makes one wonder--does marriage make love stronger and more resistant to discord?

Rosellen Brown spent three years in Mississippi, teaching and working in the Civil Rights movement, after which she wrote Some Deaths in the Delta. Since then she has turned to prose, and lives with her husband and children in Brookline, N.Y. I enjoyed her prose, Finger Painting, for it was a collection of thoughts and incidents with more solidity to them than a stream of consciousness. She spoke of a "hot, sticky, domestic day and her ritual of the blues." She has felt the strain of being a wife/mother/writer, for she does not have the time to write long works; she feels terribly guilty whenever her daughter has diaper rash for fear that she has not spent enough time with her, and yet her husband urges her to write--so she will not feel unfulfilled and "bother" him.

Someone once said that there are two kinds of people in the world, those that take things hard, and those who take things easy. Rosellen Brown takes writing "hard". Her poems after the South are of exile, but not protest.

"I have been alone in rooms seething with strangers--their presence demanding my captured presence."

"In Rooms"

After the readings, while wine and buiscuts were served, and assorted poets and listeners spoke to each other.

The Village At Bowker

Can't get to the Village this weekend? Desperate to go? Well the Fine Arts Council has found the solution of your dilemma. Tonight and tomorrow all the atmosphere and one of the greatest talent's of the Village will transform Bowker Auditorium into the unique world of the Village Coffeehouse.

Dave Van Ronk, noted folk singer, will perform two concerts in Bowker on December 11 and 12 at 8 p.m. both evenings. Van Ronk, the former bank messenger, printer's apprentice, merchant seaman and factory hand turned folk singer, will make his first appearance before the UMass population. After an uphill climb from obscurity in the New York Coffeehouse circuit, he has recently become in demand on the American campus.

A recent review of his performance at the U of Michigan's Canterbury House found Van Ronk to be "....unlike any there is. Most people who have heard about Van Ronk casually know him for dirty songs, and he has a reputation for sometimes getting so drunk that he is terrible. But Van Ronk's incredible genius lies in his voice: it is the hardest, meanest voice in folk music but which breaks apart into the most beautiful, painful, gentle tones I've ever heard."

Unlike a class of coffeehouse performers who get on stage with a whole repertoire to choose from and grope their way through random songs as they go, Van Ronk plans his show to a great extent - selecting songs which pull the audience down, lifting them up, set them on an even peel, bring them down, up, medium again, but then he takes chances, "sometimes I do a whole show of funny songs, sometimes a whole show of obscene songs". Of the Michigan audience Van Ronk said: "I told the audience I didn't feel like tickling their genetalice."

Van Ronk is the man who taught guitar to Steve Katz of B, S & T and Danny Kalb of The Blues Project. Sounds as if the man may have some talent. You can't afford to miss him. Reserved tickets are $1.50 for UM undergrads; $2.00 all other students; $2.50 for UM faculty/staff and $3.00 general Public at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets at Bowker one hour before each concert. Telephone 545-0202.

UMASS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
The UMass Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Ronald Steele will give a concert next Wednesday night, December 16, at 8:15 in Bowker Auditorium. The program will include Ives, The Unanswered Question, Mozart, Piano Concerto No. 12 in A Major featuring Dwight Peltzer of the music faculty as piano soloist. The concert will conclude with Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 in E-flat Major, EROICA.

Movies

A MAN AND A WOMAN (Friday, Campus Center Ballroom 7 and 9)
Winner of the 1966 Cannes film festival, this romantic drama combines exciting auto racing with a sophisticated love story. Directed by Claude Lelouch, it stars Anouk Aimee and Jean-Louis Trintrgnant.

ANIMALS, MOTHLIGHT and REFLECTIONS IN BLACK (Monday, C.C. Auditorium, 8)
The former title is a feature length, French study of evolution by viewing animal life patterns. The latter two are two experimetal films by Stan Brakhage. Also on the program will be live jazz entertainment.

BELLE DE JOUR (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith, 7:15 and 9:30)
Luis Bunuel erotic masterpiece starring Catherine Deneauve as a bored rich, beautiful young woman who acts out her erotic fantasies.

BRAND X (Talkie, Northampton)
A second film by independent young filmmaker Brian De Palma in the style of his irreverant GREETINGS. Funny, topical yet somewhat of questionable taste.

BRIDGE OVER THE RIVER KWAI (Monday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:45)
This internationally-acclaimed film, directed by David Lean (DOCTOR ZHIVAGO) concerns allied troops held captive by the Japanese in Burma.

COOL HAND LUKE (Monday, Hampshire College, Academic Building, 8)
Paul Newman gives another fine performance in this story about a victimized prisoner down South. Arthur Kennedy and Jo Van Fleet both give fine support in this somewhat overly symbolic film.

DARLING LILI (Campus Cinema, Hadley)
Julie Andrews stars as a British Music hall star who doubles as a spy during the First World War. This large musical directed by Blake Edwards, with a score by Henry Mancini, is one of the last of its kind and rightly so.

DIARY OF A MAD HOUSEWIFE (Campus Cinema, Hadley; Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield, Academy of Music, Northampton)
A delightfully insightful look at the harried existance of a sophisticated New York housewife.
Carrie Snodgress should gather some acting awards in her film debut and Richard Benjamin is brilliantly nasty as her obnoxious husband.

DYNAMITE CHICKEN (Tuesday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9)
Another filmed rock and roll show, this one featuring such talents as Jimi Hendrix, Joan Baez, Sha-na-na, Lenny Bruce, John and Yoko Lennon, and Allen Ginsburg.

THE HEART IS A LONELY HUNTER (Saturday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
A faithful adaptation of the moving, beautifully written novel of Carson McCullers. Alan Arkin gives yet another excellent portrayal as a deaf-and-dumb man who becomes the salvation of many diverse characters.

IF.... (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A student fantasy, or what happens when the revolution comes to an English public school. Acclaimed as one best films of last year.

JOE (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Probably the most controversial film of the year. The question is whether this meeting of extremes is legitimate or only expedient.

LOVERS AND OTHER STRANGERS (Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield)
Gig Young and Anne Jackson head a large and excellent cast in a series of diverse vignettes all dealing with the wide world of sex.

THE LAWYER (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A low-budget film made in Boston, about a young, liberal lawyer. Barry Morse stars in a somewhat unsuccessful attempt to make a film in the BULLITT formula.

ON THE WATERFRONT (Wednesday, CC Auditorium, 7 and 9:30)
Marlon Brando gives his finest performance in this film whose power manages to Rome through despite its obvious age. Karl Malden, Eve Marie Saint, Lee J. Cobb, and Rod Steiger all give performances which all but rival Brando's.

THE OUT-OF-TOWNERS (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Jack Lemmon and Sandy Dennis play a harried Midwestern coupie on a supposedly business-pleasure trip to New York. The film boast a script by master comic writer Neil Simon.

SHAME (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9)
The finale to this semester Bergman series is one of more recent and controversial films.

THE SHOP ON MAIN STREET (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)
Winner of the Academy Award as Best Foreign Film in 1965, this Czechoslovakian film deals with the human relationship between a woman who owns a dry goods store and a carpenter who boards with her.

THE STERILE CUCKOO (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
Liza Minelli gives one of last year's finest performances as a young coed named Pookie, a female Holden Caulfield, having her first romance.

TELL ME THAT YOU LOVE ME, JUNIE MOON (Amherst Theater, Calvin Theatre, Northampton)
Marjorie Kellogg adapted her poignant study of three of society misfits who brave the workd together. Performances make this one worthwhile as Liza Minelli plays the acid-scarred Junie Moon.

UP THE DOWN STAIRCASE (Thursday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
Sandy Dennis plays a high school teacher in this humorous adaptation of the immensely popular novel of a few years back.

Theater

CLOUDS
The second UT production of the season is this bawdy adaptation of Aristophanes' classic comedy. The emphasis is on broad farce, gross satire, and often obscene buffoonery as sacred institutions are attacked with penetrating, biting insight. Tickets may be purchased at the University Theatre Box Office or by calling the box office (545-2579). Admission is $1.75.

MISS JULIE and THE STRONGER
Two plays by Strindberg, the former a modern classic, will be performed in this student laboratory production at the Lab Theatre, Mt. Holyoke, tonight through Sunday at 8:15.

PETER PAN
The independent study group of Amherst College presents the now classic musical-comedy (originally starring Mary Martin) in an innovative and exciting new production. Performances will run December 11 through 15 at 8:30, with a matinee Sunday, the 13, at 2:30 in Kirby Theater, Amherst College.

SHOT DOWN: The Grand Magic Vitamin Experience
A Reader's Theater production, SHOT DOWN....explores the grim world of the amphetamine user in New York's East Village. Adapted by Vincent Brann, it shall be presented Friday and Saturday evenings at 8 in the Studio Theater, South College. Admission is free.

Introducing the fastest ladies' shaver in the whole wide world.

You know those timid little ladylike shavers? Well, forget them. Because the big all new Lady Norelco 20L is here. And it's the world's fastest ladies' shaver.
It has the biggest shaving head of all the ladies' shavers.
The largest active cutting area. And an extra thin shaving head to shave extra close and smooth.
Which means you can shave your legs and underarms 40 to 50% faster than with any other ladies shaver in the world.
The new Lady Norelco is a beautiful poppy red.
and it comes in a shiny black case. And that makes it the fastest, prettiest ladies' shaver in the whole wide world.

Wrestlers Bid For 2nd Win At URI

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

Coming off a 42-0 opening win over Tufts, the UMass wrestling team will be out for win number two of the current season when it travels to Rhode Island for a Saturday afternoon meet. The time of the meet is 2:00 p.m.

The Redmen have never lost a wrestling meet to the Rams, with the series being 8-0, including a 40-5 win last year. Rhody was expected to be a much stronger team this season but an opening loss to Brown, 26-16, has caused coach Homer Barr to wonder if the Rams are as good as their buildup.

Barr figures that the meet will be much closer than the Tufts slaughter and expects the Rams to be toughest at the middle weights. "This meet will be more of a test for us than Tufts," the coach said, "and I hope the team gets a good workout because we have Harvard coming up."

The Redmen will have some lineup changes as they go after their twelfth straight victory. Nick DiDomenico has won back the 118 lb starting spot after losing it last week to Dave Amato. DiDomenico has been a starter for three years and enters tomorrow's match with a 24-11 dual meet record. Another new starter will be freshman Gary Woods at 126. Woods will be making his first varsity appearance after ousting veteran Dave Reynolds in the wrestle-off.

Reynolds will probably wrestle at 134 unless Phil Davis can make weight. Davis, a senior, is recovering from a preseason injury and Barr will give him the starting nod if he is ready. The rest of The Redmen lineup will remain the same. Sheldon Goldberg will wrestle at 142, Clay Jester at 150, Brian Urquhart at 158, Kent Mignocci at 167, Tom Andrewes at 177, Ed Carlsson at 190 and either Christ Hodson or Carl Dambman at heavyweight. Reynolds, Jester, Mignocci and Hodson all won by pins in the opening win over Tufts.

The teams' next home match will be at home on Wednesday night against Harvard, one of the best teams in New England, and the match will be held in the cage.

UMASS HOCKEY ON THE AIR—WMUA, 91.1 fm, will be carrying all the exciting action from Orr Rink tonight when the UMass Redmen take the ice against Middlebury College. Air time will be 7:45 and calling the action will be Bruce Glazer, Larry Walsh, and Roy Gustafson.

JV Gymnasts At Boston State

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

The UMass junior varsity gymnastics team, the first jayvee gym team to represent the school, will open their season with a dual meet against Boston State College, at Boston, on Saturday, Dec. 12, at 1 p.m. Led by co-captains Bill Henry and Phil Aubrey, the team is composed of five sophomores and nine freshmen.

For the past two seasons, the Little Redmen have been undefeated, compiling a 6-0 record each year. This year's squad, under coach Jerry Calkin, hopes to extend their winning ways against teams from Boston State, Springfield, Army, and Dartmouth, all of whom they defeated last season. This years schedule will also include a meet with the University of New Hampshire, a team that UMass has never faced. This meet, along with Dartmouth, should give the team their stiffest competition.

In last years encounter, Boston State bowed to the Little Redmen, 129-111. However, in the college division of the New England Championships, Boston State placed a strong third. Dave Montani, their leading all-around man, took fourth place in the same championship meet, and will be returning this year to lead his team against UMass, looking for a victory.

Frosh BBall

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

Tomorrow night in the Cage at 5:30 the UMass freshman basketball team will play the Amherst frosh in a prelude to the varsity game between UMass and New Hampshire. UMass' frosh are 2-0 coming off a 64-52 victory at Dartmouth. For the Amherst frosh it will be their first game of the year.

Although UMass is not exceptionally tall, it will have a definite height advantage going into the game. Amherst will start Mike Considine (6'0) and Jeff Mondschein (5'9) in the backcourt and Glen Farrell (6'4), Mike Cardwell (6'3) and Fred Scott (6'2) up front. UMass runs 6'5, 6'5 and 6'3 up front and 6' and 6'3 in the backcourt.

UMass will be looking for another good game from guard Pete Trow who has been shooting a remarkabble 63% (19 for 30) from the field. The Redmen will also be looking to forward Al Skinner for a repeat performance of the Dartmouth game in which he scored 19 points and grabbed 11 rebounds.

Why doesn't General Electric sell new ideas to the cities instead of new gadgets to the suburbs?

After thirty years or more of neglect, there's no question our cities need help.

But what kind of help?

Will another thousand sanitation men be the answer to dirty streets?

Will doubling the police force finally bring crime under control?

Can new rent laws force landlords to provide more low-income housing?

All the old, obvious ideas have been tried. What's needed are new ideas and new technological developments.

General Electric has been working on the problems of cities for a number of years now. And in that time we've come up with some things we think will help.

Garbage

General Electric research has come up with what is probably the most revolutionary idea in garbage disposal in years. Our scientists are working toward a process by which a special strain of bacteria converts garbage into a high-protein food for cattle.

The process is still something of a "laboratory trick," but it could be in the pilot-plant stage in as little as three years.

Crime

You might not expect a company like General Electric to be doing anything about crime.

But the fact is, GE has been working with the Syracuse police, looking for a new approach to the problem. Our scientists there came up with a whole new concept in police organization called "Crime Control Teams."

In their first year, these teams were credited with cutting crime 62% in one large representative neighborhood of Syracuse. And the concept has since been adopted by a number of other cities.

Housing

To meet the critical need for new low-income housing, General Electric is participating in the Department of Housing and Urban Development's Operation Breakthrough.

While GE has no intention of going into commercial home building, we do hope to supply the builder-developer with new products needed to improve his efficiency.

We now have several design prototypes of advanced, modular homes that can be assembled in a matter of hours.

These are just a few of the new ideas General Electric has come up with to help cities at the same time that we continue to improve "gadgets" to help people.

We don't think our home products are at all unnecessary or frivolous. If they seem that way, it's because people have forgotten how much they rely on them. To wash dishes. To wash clothes. To keep warm. To keep cool. To entertain. And on and on.

New ideas for the cities and new "gadgets" for the home both have the same end in mind, after all. To help people live better.

Why are we running this ad?

We're running this ad, and others like it, to tell you the things General Electric is doing to solve the problems of man and his environment today.

The problems concern us because they concern you. We're a business and you are potential customers and employees.

But there's another, more important reason. These problems will affect the future of this country and this planet. We have a stake in that future. As businessmen. And, simply, as people.

We invite your comments. Please write to General Electric, 570 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022.

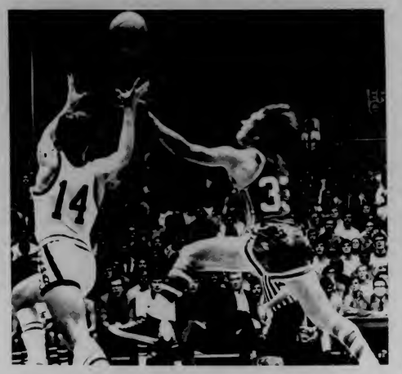
Hoopsters at Home vs. Improved UNH

After completing its first winning season in eight years, the rapidly improving New Hampshire basketball team visits UMass Saturday evening to meet the Redmen in a contest in the Cage scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

Wildcat Coach Gerry Friel, formerly an assistant under Bob Cousy at Boston College, is developing a fine basketball program at the Durham school and the rewards are already being realized. Coming off of a fine 12-11 year in 1969-70, the Wildcats appear to be even better this season.

Leading the way is 6'5 junior Dave Pemberton who averaged 17.4 points per game last season. He is not only the team's big scorer but maybe the squad's top rebounder as well.



Among the other returning veterans to watch for are 6'2 junior guard Dwight Peters and senior backcourt man Brian Peters. The former Peters managed 13.3 points per contest last season while the latter hit for 9.6.

The main problem that Coach Friel is faced with is the same as most other smaller college team's must meet, the lack of a good big man. The biggest of the Wildcats is 6'6 center Frank Davis who sat on the bench all of last season. This will likely be the major weakness of the revamped Wildcats.

The schedule for New Hampshire is far superior to that played by previous Wildcat units. Such opponents as Dartmouth, Boston University and the usual Yankee Conference foes make the 1970-71 New Hampshire schedule a very competitive one.

However, building a good basketball team is a slow process and though the Wildcats can more than hold their own against all of their competition, they may still be a few years away from being a major basketball power in New England.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Scorpio woman enjoys a battle but adores the reconciliation in which she can reveal that all is really love and kisses. These women are explosive, but loyal; they can be stubborn but generous. They are intense, viral and throw off a kind of magnetism which keeps them perpetually attractive to the opposite sex.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Pleasure directions are clear. Tendency is to confuse signals while in transit. Be receptive, alert. Put ideas to work. Someone may be deliberately obscuring real issues.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Guard valuables. Associate who advocates get-rich-quick scheme is not well informed. Steady course is best one. Stress family reunion, home entertainment.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Cycle high; opposition is actually paper tiger. Know this and proceed with confidence. Mate or partner may be harboring illusion. Facts indicate best course of action. Be self-reliant.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): You may be restricted to certain areas. Key is to quietly amass needed material, information. Work with groups, special organizations. Member of opposite sex offers encouragement.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Friends may not act in usual manner. Be ready for surprises. Special relationship is put to test. Better to complete rather than begin projects. Protect your own interests.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Property values could be misrepresented. Do your own checking. Gemini individual is apt to guide you constructively. Be independent and confident. Older person now seems to be out-of-step.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Trust hunch. Heed inner voice. Gain shown if you write, call, communicate. Express yourself. There is no need to hold back. State your needs — from indications, they will be fulfilled.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Social commitment might interfere with basic chores. Key is to find time for work and play. Relative can help solve dilemma. Message contains information you require.

SAGITTARIUS Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): What you see could be part of distorted picture. Deception — intentional or otherwise — is present. Know this and proceed with caution. Be aware of apparent minor details.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Some who share interests express desire for change. Be flexible. One who passes rumors is not helping matters. Don't be lulled into false sense of security.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Romantic interests could hit some bumps in road. Key is to know difference between major dispute and minor disagreement. Control tendency to act purely on impulse.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Go slow. Play waiting game. Some significant facts are yet to be revealed. Know this — and exercise caution. Applies especially to purchases, sales. Bee conditions as they actually exist.

Puckmen Host Raiders

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

UMass takes on currently fourth ranked Middlebury College tonight at Orr Rink with the face off set for 8. Already this season the Redmen have defeated Division 1 power Pennsylvania, 6-4, and second ranked Vermont, 3-2, in overtime. UMass' other two wins have been against Lowell tech, 16-4, and Williams, 6-3.

Middlebury, an essentially veteran team, was the third ranked Division II team last year. If the Redmen can defeat the Raiders tonight it will mean they have already defeated two of the four division two teams that are ranked ahead of themselves. Remember, the first four ranked teams are invited to the E.C.A.C. playoffs.

Middlebury has good size up front and excellent scoring potential. Heading the list for the Raiders is Dave Norton with 63 points (27 goals and 36 assists) in two previous seasons.

Other Middlebury players to watch are center Brian Iggulden, 28 goals and 34 assists, wing Rick Kelly, 36 goals and 29 assists, wing Jim Glynn, 27 goals and 22 assists, and wing John Boothrayd, 20 goals and 29 assists.

Defensively captain Dave Pierson heads a rugged, hard hiting defense. Pierson's defensive partner is senior Larry Dixon. Coach Wendell Forbes' other defensive pairing has senior Jim Hurd and Tim Silver.

In goal for the Raiders is Fuzzy Van Wart who has a creditable 3.68 goals against average.

The game figures to be a close checking affair, with the Redmen attempting to revenge last year's loss to Middlebury.

UMass Rebounds From Errors To Beat URI In OT

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

KINGSTON, R.I. - UMass' basketball team showed it was still a young team last night but had loads of character and stamina, enough to defeat a very fine University of Rhode Island quintet, 80-76, in overtime here before a large Keaney Gymnasium gathering.

What a great ball game! Except for a few stretches of time, it was nip 'n' tuck all the way. The Redmen made a lot of mistakes, mistakes that will only disappear as the squad grows in experience, but this team won the game, yes, won the game! It showed a lot of determination and an ability to bounce back from many costly errors.

This tilt featured a very tight first half, one in which UMass managed a two point, 37-35 lead. The Redmen controlled the game for the first 12 and a half minutes of the second half, as they stood on top of a 62-52 edge with 7:34 showing on the clock. However, no team was to run away on this night.

The Rams came roaring back and knotted the affair, 66-66, with 2:20 left in regulation time. Here is where the action was at its best.

Julius Erving popped in a 15 foot jumper and pulled down an ensuing rebound to make things excellent looking for the visitors. After his rebound, he fed a breaking Mike Pagliara who missed a tough lay-up but who stole the ball right back. The Redmen were still in control and had a two point lead, 68-66, in this late stage of play.

In fact, two consecutive Rhody fouls sent UMass' Erving and Chris Coffin to the foul line for one-and-one charity tosses. Both players failed to connect on their first shots, and the Redmen started to really hurt themselves.

After Coffin's miss, UMass got the basketball back and tried to run out the clock. Another URI foul was committed. Pagliara answered the situation with two foul hoops. UMass was up, 70-66, there were 29 seconds left and the visiting guys looked home free.

But Dwight Tolliver raced the ball up court and threw in a two pointer just six seconds later. Rhody needed a UMass mistake and got it when Pagliara committed an offensive foul with 11 seconds to go. URI called time out.

With the fans going crazy, the team worked the ball to one Steve

Rowell in seven quick seconds, and this guy aimed a 22 foot archer that broke the nets as he was falling away to make it 70 all. A great shot. The next play came in the overtime period.

At the outset of this five minute span UMass won the tap but missed its first goal attempt. The Rams ran back but their first shot missed and Erving grabbed one of his many rebounds that would be very big in these tense moments.

Off of this rebound Erving flipped a floor length pass to John Betancourt who hit the lay-up and was fouled. His two shots from the line gave the Redmen a four point, 74-70, lead. The Rams answered with a Nate Adger lay-in, but Erving came back with a ten foot base line quickie and the advantage was still four, 76-72.

Ed Malloy of URI brought his team within two on a tough 15 footer. Here UMass turned the ball over, only to get it back on a fine defensive effort by Coffin, only to turn it back over on a Betancourt walk.

Things were tight, but a big rebound by No. 32 drew a Rhody foul. Erving went to the stripe and sank both ends of a one-and-one situation, to put the Redmen up by four, 78-74, with only 50 seconds to go.

Molloy brought Rhody back again. He hit a very difficult shot in heavy traffic. Now the Redmen had the ball, a two point lead and 36 seconds. They successfully forced Rowell to commit a foul sending Coffin to the line for another one-and-one, with the clock reading 0:07.

Not to go against the pattern of the game, Coffin missed and UMass still had its heart in its mouth. Betancourt, however, settled things for good when he stole a hurried Rhody pass under the URI basket and was fouled.

Only one second remained, Betancourt hit two shots, 80-76 count. A wild URI attempt failed and the game was finally over. What a great game!

HOOP NOTES - UMass had 27 turnovers, but placed well enough in spite of these to come out on top...This was the second overtime game in a row for the Redmen...Last Saturday they defeated Vermont in overtime, 79-68...Erving led all scorers with 29 points...Betancourt had 19...Erving also led all rebounders with 24...Adger was the leading Rhody scorer with 21 points. He also had 9 rebounds and played a great ball game.

Gymnasts Open On Road At So. Conn.

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

With a meet at Southern Connecticut DState College, the UMass varsity gymnastics team will open its 1970-71 season tomorrow at 2 p.m. Prediction of the outcome of the meet is difficult, as relatively little advance information has been received on the Southern Conn. squad.

Last year the Redmen soundly defeated the Owls, 158-151, but the meet wasn't decided until the horizontal bar, the final event. However, the Owls are not to be underrated, as they will present a formidable challenge. In recent years, Southern Conn. coach, Abe Grossfeld, has guided his team to the top spot in the New England Intercollegiate Championships, as well as second place in the N.C.A.A. College Division Championships. Last year the Owls placed third in the New England Championships, barely more than a point behind the Redmen. Although hurt by graduation, Southern Conn. will undoubtedly prove to be a strong challenge.

Via graduation, the Owls no longer have the services of Jim Amerine, one of the top all-around men in the country, or Jim Yearwood, a first rate side horse competitor who, last year, captured third place in the EIGL Championships. This year So. Conn. will be led by sophomore superstar John Crosby, who is one of the top all-around men in the East. Depth will be the Owls main problem as they face the Redmen.

Due to injuries, the UMass sqaad will not be at full strength. The Redmen will be without the services of co-captain Scott Stover, who is still recovering from a knee operation, as well as Doug Salisbury, who has an injured hand. Questionable starters include John Oliver in the still rings event, who has a strained shoulder, and Danny Spier in the all-around event, who has a bruised foot.

TAMING THE HORSE—Senior Rick Riley shows the strength and coordination that is needed to master the side horse.

Despite these injuries, the Redmen have enough depth to meet the Owls with a strong, well-balanced squad.

In the all-around event, UMass will be represented by Norm Vexler, Tony Vacca, and either Len Aubrey or Spier. In effect this year is a League ruling which states that three all-around men, instead of the usual two, will compete in each event. Southern Conn.'s Crosby will give UMass' all-around men stiff competition for top honors.

In the floor exercise event, Jack Berner and John Calabria will represent UMass. Hopefully, this event will get the Redmen off to a good start with an early lead.

On side horse, Rick Riley, a gymnast with a great deal of competitive experience, appears to be the only one assured of a starting position. The remaining slot will be filled by Steve Nelson, Aubrey, or Spier.

For the still rings event, Jay Aronstein and John Oliver appear to have the specialists spots for this meet. Although only sophomores, they both have performed well in the past. If Oliver can't compete, either Aubrey or Spier will replace him.

In the long horse vault, the Redmen will be led by Bob Henry and Ken Perkins. This event should prove to be one of UMass' strongest.

Dave Genest and Bob Henry have nailed down the starting positions for the parallel bars event. Their scores should make this a solid event for the Redmen.

The horizontal bar presents somewhat of a problem as Salisbury will not be able to compete. Tom Myslicki will fill one of the specialist's positions, with the other one probably going to Spier.

In a practice meet held during this past week, the Redmen showed good potential as the scored 151 points, which is about a point higher than they scored in a similar meet held last year just prior to the season's opener.

Head Coach, Erik Kjeldsen, is hoping "to do the best we can" as his team seeks to start their season with a winning performance.

The UMass hockey team, currently riding on a four game unbeaten string take to the ice tonight for a home encounter with Division II power, Middlebury College. This is an important game for the Redmen and the face-off at Orr Rink will be at 8 p.m. For details on the game turn to page 15 for the preview.

Trackmen Visit Yale For Tri-Meet Opener

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

The UMass indoor track team makes its way into the winter sports scene tomorrow afternoon traveling to Yale for a tri-meet with the Bulldogs and Yankee Conference rival UConn. The first event will be getting underway at 12:15.

This year's track squad blends fine individual performers from last year's varsity and freshman teams. Last season both teams were able to match their opponents first place for first place, but that was as far as it went as both were lacking in depth.

As of now the team will be hurting in a few areas due to injuries to some key personnel including middle distance ace Dave Evans, and long jumper Dick Dyer. Jerry Spellman, who last season was one of the best in the East in the hurdles will not be competing until next semester as he is currently student teaching.

But track is a long season and with all injuries healed and with all top-notch individuals blending into one solid unit coach Ken O'Brien sees this team being equally as good if not better than last year's squad as the season progresses.

O'Brien sees this year's squad at full strength as "deeper in the hurdles, the middle distances, the long distances and the long jump, and better in the sprints and the high jump."

As for the meet tomorrow, this will be the first time that the Redmen will be facing Yale in a track meet and it will also be the continuation of one of the most competative track rivalries in New England between the Redmen and UConn.

In assessing the meet, Coach O'Brien, on the basis of past performances rates UConn as the strongest of the three teams in field events. He rates his Redmen as the strongest in the running events and labels the Bulldogs as "the unknown quantity."

In the dash Don Martin from Yale is the number one man in the meet as he is the 1C4A 100 yard champ and placed in the IC4A 60 yard dash. He'll get all he can ask for from a group of very talented Redman sprinters in the persons of Walter Mayo, Ron Harris, Tony Pendleton, and Kevin Rilley.

UConn has virtually a one man team in the jumping events as sophomore Ron Evans has jumped 6'6" in the high jump and 13 feet in the pole vault.

The Redmen will counter Evans in the high jump with two of the best in New England in Cal Carpenter and Ed Shaughnessey, who will also be joined by sophomore Bill Hackler who set a freshman record last season.

In the pole vault, Buzz Hiller and John Kamb, both around the 13 foot mark will represent UMass in this event.

The weight events will be a three man contest between Eddie Arcaro of UMass, Art Paliwoda from UConn, and Tom Neville of Yale.

UMass' Jim Graves and UConn's Peter Lacallade, who have run against each other many times in the past, head the field of hurdlers. Graves will be getting good support from sophomores Bill Landry, Bill Clark, and Paul Wesockes.

The middle distance shapes up as a one man race in the 600 with Peter Hillmar of UConn the best in New England at this distance, and a close battle in the 1000 yard run between Arnie Morse and Al Mangan of UMass and John Cody and Tom Derdan of UConn.

In the mile and two mile the only competition that will develop will be between Redman runners as Ron Wayne and Rick Barry will run the mile and Wayne will come right back to double in the two mile along with Tom Jasmin and Larry Paulson.

The biggest problem for UMass will come in the mile and two mile relays where lack of depth will hurt. Usually the Redmen will be running only the mile relay, but in running at Yale, Ivy League rules that call for a two mile relay also must be observed.

Coach O'Brien feels that his squad is not strong enough at this time to run two good relays, but by the end of the season, the Redmen could have two of the best relay teams in New England.

As for the outcome of the meet, one can only assume that it will be close as both UMass and UConn are pretty evenly matched and Yale's potential is unknown.

Changing Thought Into Energy

David Castaldi
Staff Reporter

Students' International Meditation Society (SIMS) often sponsors introductory lectures on campus about transcendental meditation. Before understanding the physical and mental effects of meditation, it is perhaps helpful to know something about the philosophy behind it.

The technique assumes that all activities in daily life depend on thinking. To exist, some "field of being" is basic to thinking, and this "field of being" is the source of thought.

If a thought moves or takes some particular direction, it must have energy. The source of thought is a tremendous source of energy which continually produces thoughts which tend to move toward areas of the greatest enjoyment.

Those who practice transcendental meditation believe that the mind is a source of bliss, and that life should be easy and lived in its fullest potential. It is also felt that by struggling to attain something, the joy of attaining it is lost, which may or may not be true.

In diving, the person takes the right angle and falls. Similarly, meditation allows the mind to take the right direction and it goes from awareness to the field of being naturally, and without effort.

The Maharishi, who is the original instructor of transcendental meditation, once compared the mind to the wave of an ocean, and a thought to be like a small bubble which rises up slowly. When the bubble emerges to the surface of the ocean, it is like a new thought.

Scientific investigation of the phenomenon of meditation has found that the physical state while meditating is a complex combination of physiological changes. During meditation, oxygen consumption, carbon dioxide elimination, heart rate, and respiratory rate significantly decrease while skin resistance significantly increases. The metabolic rate of the body is reduced by nearly 20 per cent.

The body seems to be in a deeper state of rest than while in sleep. but recorded electroencephalographic measurements show that the mind is awake and able to respond to stimuli. These changes occur together spontaneously, and present a fourth state of consciousness which is as natural to the individual as the other three states of consciousness-- waking, dreaming, or sleeping. Meditators claim this state of "restful alertness" to be very refreshing physically and mentally. The deep relaxation provides a basis for increased energy in daily activity. One's susceptibility to common diseases is decreased, and research is now in progress to assess the effects of meditation on health, particularly as a treatment for conditions produced by tense or stressful living.

With proper instruction and practice, anyone can become familiar with subtle levels of thought, directly contact the center of creative intelligence, and thereby unfold full mental potential. The practice uplifts the psychology of the individual while developing the mind. One is able to work more effectively without stress or strain, and he gains a better grasp of complex situations. He is able to express himself in a spontaneous and creative manner, and since the technique establishes contact with the inner source of thought, all aspects of one's life are improved.

The only requirement for transcendental meditation is that the person not have used hallucinatory drugs of any kind up to 15 days prior to the start of the instruction. All participants are asked to give a donation which helps to set up S.I.M.S. centers and provide for future instruction. Training is on an individual basis and given in four hour to an hour and a half long meetings. The next course will begin sometime in February.

NEng-Wide 'Community' Goal Of Clearinghouse

By TONY SANTAGATI
Staff Reporter

The old University Store has been put to use by a group of students interested in changing the present form of higher education.

An outgrowth of the Free University City, The Clearinghouse is a group of people who have as their goals a greater sense of community among students in New England, an increase in the quantity and a transformation in the quality of cooperation and intercommunication, and a growing support within UMass for the kinds of learning and interpersonal support necessary for constructive social change.

Clearinghouse, a part of the Free University of New England, emphasizes interpersonal relationships among people who work together for specific changes, a spokesman said. These changes are all a part of a larger effort to build a community.

The representative from Clearinghouse explained that, "We have learned that our work must be based upon reciprocity -- that what is built is what we create together."

The clearinghouse has many resources and programs available. Among these are:

Cooperative, In-Service Workshops -- Participants from one or a number of campuses do a piece of work together (working one time on one issue or problem; developing a 'gig' and traveling from campus to campus; exchanging people among similar projects), sharing strategies as they plan and examining and evaluating that work;

Media Van -- a blue Chevy Step Van filled with video and audio tape and film equipment to enable students to learn to document and report their change processes in an immediate, and on-going way;

Rapid Response System -- a growing, comprehensive, cross-indexed set of files, with people learning to use them, for responding to students who request information about projects and people in New England;

Communications Grants -- up to $300 (preferred matching funds) to support communication and travel by individuals and groups who want to learn from/with others in New England;

Field Staff -- people who 'travel' on a sub-regional basis;

Publications -- project and contact name directories, handbooks, monographs, and other important materials related to the process of change.

UMass Student Charged With Bomb Scare Threats

A 21-year old UMass junior will appear in Northampton District Court on Thursday on charges connected with a bomb scare in Southwest on Friday, December 4.

He was arrested and charged by UMass police with reporting a bomb scare and arraigned last Wednesday in Northampton where he pleaded innocent to the charges and was released in personal recognizance.

The campus has been plagued by a rash of bomb scares since the University opened its doors in September. University police said that 18 bomb scares were reported ruing the month of November.

The arrest last week was the first involving bomb threats this year. Police would not comment on the circumstances surrounding the arrest except to say that it came after intensive police work by members of the department.

The latest wave of scares to hit the campus came last weekend in Southwest. During a 12-hour period beginning Sunday evening and ending before dawn Monday morning, there were seven bomb reports made to University police. 1500 students shivered in the freezing cold while dormitories were searched. Officials said that no incendiary or explosive devices were found, but everyone living in Crampton, John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Washington, and Patterson were forced to leave the dorms.

Construction Closing Lot 3

By TONY SANTAGATI
Staff Reporter

By Friday, Dec. 18, parking lot #3 will be closed due to the construction of the new Fine Arts Center, according to parking officials.

As soon as the construction crew completes temporary walks, the bridge across the pond, and the installation of temporary lighting, the lot, along with Ellis Drive which runs from North Pleasant Street to the lot will be closed. Friday is the latest date by which the crew expects to be finished.

The planning office disclosed that the new foot paths will also be put to use at this time and that the present openings in the fence around the sight will be closed. The new pedestrian outes are described on the map located in the Student Union near the ticket office.

When lot #3 is closed, the faculty and staff members who normally used the lot will have their stickers honored at Haigis Mall, between Whitmore and SBA or in Lot #12 across from the mall, parking officials explained.

Students with lot #3 stickers will be allowed to park in lot #12.

North Village, the new modular housing for married students at UMass, will contain 72 families by Christmas. Donald J. Pekley of Amherst is director of married student housing which includes the 290 one and two bedroom apartments of North Village.

UMass Prof Publishes "Minor Masterpiece"

A minor masterpiece of classic Greek literature has been published in a new translation by Dr. Warren Anderson, professor of comparative literature at UMass.

The work is "Theophrastus: The Character Sketches," with translations, notes and essays by Dr. Anderson, published by the Kent State University Press. Theophrastus (370-287 B.C.) was a Greek philosopher. The sketches deal with human vices or foibles as displayed in social behavior. Their influence has crept into a wide variety of Western writing.

Dr. Anderson is a Harvard University Ph.D. who came to UMass earlier this year from the University of Iowa. His major books include "Matthew Arnold and the Classical Tradition," University of Michigan Press, 1965, and "Ethos and Education in Green Music," Harvard University Press, 1966. He has also published a translation of "Prometheus Bound" by Aeschylus and has co-edited and contributed to a collection of essays on Victorian literature.

Trustee Sub-Committee OK's Freshman Co-ed Living

By RICHARD HANSON
Asst. News Editor

South Lee - Gathered in the Game Room of the Oak 'n' Spruce Lodge, the Student Life Sub-committee of the Trustees voted unanimously to allow freshmen in co-ed dorms.

The sub-committee, chaired by Mrs. Rowland, also heard Vice Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery outline the new security measures being taken on campus, including the installation of "flashing green lights" on University Police vehicles and a proposed "deficiency budget" to provide funds for additional security personnel.

Bromery told the trustees and students present at the meeting held in conjunction with the SWAP conference, that he was concerned about the creation of a "student security system to protect students from themselves" as well as to protect the campus from outsiders. The flashing lights are part of an effort to produce "higher visibility" of security measures without increasing the number of personnel drastically.

The trustees voted approval of a plan which instructs Vice Chancellor Bromery to present the full board with recommendations about the "feasibility" of allowing dormitories to arrange co-ed rooms on a plan other than the present separation by floors. The motion instructs Bromery to report to the board members prior to the January meeting. The trustees present, including Mrs. Rowland, Nathan Chandler, Allen Shaler and Glen Elters appeared to be in favor of allowing alternate room proposals for the co-ed dorms wherever practical.

Speaking about the security problem, Bromery said that "the university is not unique in this problem.....every campus is experiencing security problems." One of the biggest problems at present, according to Bromery, is the amount of money which the recent bomb scares have cost. The police use approximately 12 hours of overtime pay (time and a half) on each threat. Before the bomb scares became so numerous, the money in the over time fund might have been used for extra personnel.

Trustee Glenn Elters told the meeting that the Faculty Senate has set up a committee to study the Campus environment. The committee will include 7 undergraduates to be chosen by the Student Senate in the near future.

The trustees met around a makeshift table formed by putting two ping pong tables together. The nets remained intact as students and trustees, with an occasional administrator, exchanged rather convivial verbal volleys.

SWAP Considers The Future

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

The future of the University provided the central theme of the Student Workshop on Activities Problems (SWAP) at the Oak 'n' Spruce in South Lee, this weekend.

Students, representing RSO groups, campus governments, fraternities, sororities, dormitories, members of the faculty, administration, and staff, discussed topics ranging from the parking problems on campus to the ultimate size of the campus itself.

The format of SWAP '70 was designed to provide an opportunity for in-depth study of pertinent problems with an emphasis on implementation of the proposals and resolutions made by the delegates. At a November meeting all delegates met in primary study/discussion groups to which they were arbitrarily assigned. Each of the 18 study groups considered two "generally accepted goals" of the University. The groups were asked to clarify each goal, elaborate on and develop the goal into an operating statement. The Resources and Research Committee of SWAP accepted requests for background materials which were used by the study groups as they developed concrete operating statements.

The study groups were dissolved Saturday when they submitted a report containing all specific proposals from each group, including any foreseen problems with them, and their comparision with current University policies and procedures. The reports were written within a realistic context, taking into account the philosophical, political, and practical limitations of the proposals.

A new format of the SWAP conference evolved Saturday afternoon: Expertise groups. Panels of experts were assigned to these groups, one group for each of the several topics suggested by the study groups.

Delegates selected their new group on the basis of their personal interest in the topic being discussed. During the meetings of the expertise groups, the priorities affecting the achievement of the University's goals were ordered, and proposals for policy change were made that would all the University to achieve its goals more quickly and effectively.

Sunday afternoon after dinner the reports from the expertise groups, eight in number, were presented to a panel of broadly knowledgeable resource people, who, by reason of their deep involvement in various aspects of University operations, were able to speak to the particular problems which were foreseen in actualizing the statement of the philosophical goals.

Following are capsule reports of the work of the expertise groups. The summaries are just that: some of the reports run on for pages, this list should by no means be considered complete.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 1

The work of this group centered on the counseling programs available for freshmen. It was felt that the present system of summer orientation is inadequate and must be replaced. Alienation was also brought up. Specific proposals called for the establishment of short courses given by academic departments and administrative offices that would give freshmen a complete view of UM before they became disillusioned.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 2

This group worked on teacher evaluation, calendars, course loads, and a new associate provost.

The group recommended a trimester plan, mandatory teacher evaluation, a four course load, a seven year span to complete requirements, dropping of all class designations ('71, '72 etc.) They also recommended an associate provost to be in charge of development of new programs, and the adoption of the University Special Credit Proposal.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 3

Group three called for the development of a school of community education. Two programs that could be worked on immediately concern the Puerto Rican ghetto in Springfield and Chicopee, and the Belchertown State School. They also advised that academic credit be given to students involved in the programs.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 4

Buses and cars were the subject of group 4. It was felt that it has gotten to the point that the campus won't absorb any more cars and the group called for a bus system that would serve to bring people living in nearby apartment complexes to campus. They also asked that a close look be taken at all academic buildings to see if space is being utilized to the maximum.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 5

Concerned with student affairs, this group made a strong plea for having extra-curricular activities entered on a student's permanent record. They also recommended that monies taken from vending machines and given to the Athletic Council be given to the Dean of Students' Trust Fund.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 6

Group six called for a committee study of the role of the Board of Trustees. They also urged that more students be allowed on the Board and that students have more voice in choosing the board members. The group also proposed that students should be held responsible for only those matters in which they have commensurate authority. This recommendation, it was felt, would result in a tightening of security.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 7

Working on basically the same area as group one, this group also called for better security. It made specific recommendations about the University police and asked for greater self-policing on the part of students.

EXPERTISE GROUP NO. 8

This group was concerned with preserving a vibrant intellectual atmosphere and to this end submitted seven pages of proposals, too long to go into here. They did, however, call for the replacement of the tenure system, student committees to evaluate faculty members, the establishment of an associate provost who would professional recognition and supervision for faculty engaged in experimental learning devices, and a greater diversity in Departmental Faculty Personnel Committees.

SWAP Rates a Cheer

By DAVID WILLIAMS

It will probably take a little while before we realize how many actual workable ideas came out of SWAP. The proposals that were presented to the panel discussion on Sunday were of necessity taken mostly off the tops of people's heads. Some of them may prove in the long run to be too costly, others too awkward, some may encounter great opposition, but the overwhelming fact is that someone thought of them and for this we should be thankful.

The days are long past when a school like UMass is run by a select few. A university as large as this one has, in Chancellor Tippo's words, "many different constituencies" and these segments of the population need a chance to talk to one another and see just what is on the other's mind. It is only through an interchange of ideas that any kind of realistic picture of where the University is going and what it is doing will emerge. SWAP provided an excellent opportunity for this to happen.

So now we have some very concrete and real proposals that will make UMass a better place in which to live and learn. Whether or not any of them will ever be implemented is another question that will be resolved in the (hopefully weeks) months ahead.

SWAP '70 involved a lot of hard work on the part of the people who ran it. Those of us who were delegates were asked to contribute brain-power but someone put in a lot of hard work to make the conference a success. It would be impossible to list all the people who helped but five or six stand out in the forefront. Betty Pugh, the George Blanda of the SWAP Committee, Dick Palomba, her co-chairman, Bob Nims, Jane Killinger, Putnam Barber, just to name a few. These are the ones who seemed to be everywhere at once doing everything. They're the ones who helped the rest of us help everyone.

Nader Blames Agriculture Dept. For Lax State Meat Inspection

WASHINGTON (AP) - Less than one third of the 50 States will meet Tuesday's deadline for compliance with a 1967 law requiring federally certified meat inspection programs.

As the deadline approached, Agriculture Department officials said only 14 states had met the requirements - despite a one year extension. But they ruled out an immediate federal takeover of inspection programs in the tardy states - one remedy provided in the law passed amid an uproar over the wholesomeness of meat.

Those officials, contending it would be unfair to force states to move any faster, said final certification of the remaining 36 state inspection programs could be months away.

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader called the department's attitude a violation of the law.

The law originally gave states until Dec. 15, 1969, to develop in their intrastate red meat plants - those which operate in only one state - an inspection program "at least equal to" the inspection programs for the federally inspected plants which ship meat from one state to another.

But only Florida, Maryland and California met that deadline, so the secretary of agriculture used his discretionary power under the law to give the other states one more year to comply.

Since then the Agriculture Department has certified the inspection programs of Alaska, Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington and Wyoming.

Only in North Dakota has the federal government moved in to supplant the state inspectors. That move, challenged in court, took seven months from the initial proposal to the actual start of federal inspection. But officials say they hope similar moves, if necessary, will be faster because of the legal precedents established in the North Dakota case.

James K. Payne, federal state coordinator, said the Agriculture Department is reviewing programs presented by 15 states. The request for review is usually a good sign that state officials feel their programs measure up.

As for the other 21 states still without certification, Payne said the federal officials will move in Wednesday and begin a review of the program.

Payne said the department intends to complete its review by Mid-January. Analyzing the reviews would take a few more weeks, he said.

About 15 per cent of meat consumed nationally comes from plants doing business only within a single state.

Nader criticized the Agriculture's basis for judging the state programs. "It's been a political decision on which states to certify," he said.

But Payne said the department considers specific criteria: the number of inspectors per plant; the amount of money budgeted as a proportion of inspectors - roughly $10,000 per inspector; the existence of a state authorizing law and adherence to federal standards for condemnation of meat. All the states have at least passed the authorizing legislation.

The immediate impact of the law has been dramatic in some states. In Washington, for example, the number of intrastate plants dropped from 70 to 39 with the imposition of federal standards.

In North Dakota, only six of the 198 plants subject to inspection under the new law were actually under inspection until the federal government moved in.

In New Jersey, inspectors previously rated only sanitary conditions in intrastate plants. In a nine month period after state met federal requirements, inspectors condemned 123 cows and steers, 6,377 parts of slaughtered animals, 3,418 livers and 64,000 poundsof processed foods like sausages and hams.

Another law has imposed sinilar changes in intrastate poultry plants inspection, but the deadline under the poultry act iss't until Aug. 18. Payne said California, Washington, South Carolina, New Mexico and Missouri have been certified and 14 states with a total of 90 plants have asked that the federal government take over those inspections.

Consumer Advocate Ralph Nadar cites the Agriculture Dept.'s lax attitude on meat inspection as a "violation of the law."

Regional Organization For Police Supported

BOSTON (AP) - Joseph Rosetti, regional director of the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, said yesterday that local police departments should be regionally consolidated for more efficient law enforcement.

"Most police departments are doing the same kinds of things that posses did years ago," he said. He said he did not support the concept of a national police force, describing it as "the greatest threat to individual freedom."

His agency is funding a pilot program in which the attorneys general of the six New England states and the police commissioners of major cities are working together as a group to fight organized crime.

Rosetti said in a radio interview that more than 95 percent of funds for law enforcement spending are for salaries, while less than one percent is spent for research.

He said more emphasis should be placed on programs to determine causes of crime and ways to prevent it.

He said court calendars and other administrative procedures should be computerized to shorten the waiting period between arrest and trial.

Rosetti was interviewed on WEEI's "Bay State Forum."

GOP Conference Chairman Threatened With Removal

WASHINGTON (AP) - The conservative liberal split among House Republicans has surfaced anew in a fight for one of the top jobs in the GOP leadership.

The conservatives are out to remove Rep. John B. Anderson of Illinois as chairman of the House Republican Conference on the grounds he is too liberal.

They have put forward Rep. Samuel L. Devine, an ex FBI agent from Columbus, Ohio, to challenge Anderson at the Republican caucus Jan. 18 just before the new Congress convenes.

Devine, 54, who has served in the House 12 years, has not made a formal announcement of his candidacy but he notified Anderson last week he was going to oppose him, and his supporters are busily at work trying to line up votes.

"We've got them," says Rep. William L. Dickinson of Alabama, a leader of the Devine forces. "We're going to win."

Anderson, 48, who was once regarded by the conservatives as one of their own but who has become more liberal during his 10 years in the House, also is soliciting support and thinks he can withstand Devine's challenge.

There have been rumblings of discontent among conservatives ever since Anderson became conference chairman two years ago. They put up a candidate against him at the last minute but he won, 116 to 56.

As chairman, Anderson presides over the monthly meetings of the conference, which is composed of all House Republicans. His is the third ranking job in the GOP hierarchy behind party leader Gerold R. Ford of Michigan and GOP whip, Leslie C. Arends of Illinois.

"When the House Republican leaders sit down there at the White House we want them to speak with a conservative voice," says Dickinson in explanation of the move to replace Anderson.

Anderson, who is also one of five Republicans on the House Rules Committee, has angered the conservatives by a series of votes in the Rules Committee for civil rights bills, the administration's family assistance plan and consumer legislation.

Devine, a husky former college athlete who still referees football games, has unquestioned conservative credentials. He and a circle of friends behind his candidacy form a hard core conservative bloc that has been trying for years to move the Republican leadership in the House to the right.

Devine had first planned to run for the position of vice chairman of the conference, which was left open when Rep. William C. Cramer of Florida gave up his House seat to run for the Senate.

But when Anderson cast the lone Republican vote in the Rules Committee recently for a bill that would have created a consumer protection agency, Devine shifted his aim and decided to go for the chairmanship.

It will take 91 votes to win in the caucus if all Republicans show up, and Dickinson claims Devine already has 75 committed to him.

Flag-Wearing Student Jail Sentence Changed

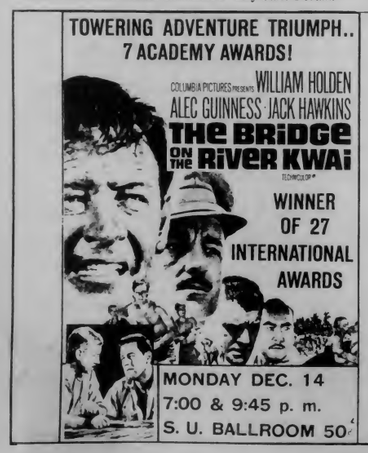
AMHERST--For most college students, writing an essay is a homework assignment--to Robert Kingman, it is freedom from a year's jail sentence.

Kingman, a 20-year-old Amherst College junior from Wayzata, Minn., had been fined $100 and sentenced to a year in jail for wearing the American flag on the seat of his Bermuda shorts.

Last week, Judge Samuel Levine heard his appeal in Hampshire County Superior Court and instead of the jail sentence ordered Kingman to write an essay on the history of the American flag and "what it means to millions in this world."

A friend had given the shorts to Kingman with the flag already sewed on. He had worn them around the campus a couple of times and no one said anything.

But when he wore them to an Amherst shopping center last May, three cruisers and five police officers were sent to arrest him for misuse of the flag.



Kingman says he had not intended any disrespect and says that if anyone had told him the location of the flag was offensive, "I think I would have taken it off."

Commenting on his unusual sentence, Judge Levine said, "He had no record whatsoever. I thought it would be punishment enough and would remain with him a long long time and he would never forget what he had done."

Kingman must read the essay to the next naturalization session in Northampton in two months. In addition, he will distribute American flags to the new citizens. The $100 fine still stands and Kingman is on probation until he graduates.

Kingman is pleased with Judge Levine's finding and calls it "fair and reasonable."

As for the shorts--which are still impounded--Kingman would like to get them back "if it can be done gracefully" --but the flag will definitely be removed.

Khrushchev: Kennedy Backed Down In Cuban Crisis

NEW YORK (AP)-Nikita S.Khrushchev contends it was President John F. Kennedy-and not he-who backed down in the Cuban missile crisis in 1962, according to the final installment in Life this week of "KhrushchevRemembers." It says the Soviet missile rattling preserved Cuban communism as an example for other Latin Americans.

By this account, Kennedy appealed through an "almost crying" Robert F. Kennedy for Khrushchev to order the missiles removed because he feared the U.S. Army would overthrow him as president and take power.

Kennedy did not go this far in his account of the Cuban missile crisis "Thirteen Days" but did say the President's great problem was with his military advisers who wanted war. He said one member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff wanted to drop nuclear weapons on Cuba, and another wanted a preventive war on Russia.

Khrushchev is quoted as saying Soviet millile power in Cuba was enough to destroy New York, Chicago and other industrial centers, as well as Washington.

The reminiscences claim a complete victory for communism in the crisis because Khrushchev obtained from the U.S. government assurances there would be no attempt to invade Cuba.

This final installment in Life of extracts from the book "Khruschev Remembers" to be published by Little, Brown and Co. next Monday, also touched on the 1955 Big Four summit meeting in Geneva where the reminiscences say Khrushchev met "that cur...that sinister man," John Foster Dulles; Vietnam and China; Berlin, and the defection of Stalin's daughter, Svetlana Alliluyeva, now Mrs. William Wesley Peters.

Life has declined to say how it obtained the reminiscences. A note bearing Khrushchev's name was distributed by Tass last month in Moscow denying he had turned over any memoirs or reminiscences to a foreign publisher. Informants in Moscow say the account may be Khrushchev's taken from tape recordings.

Some have attributed obvious flaws in the reminiscences to the faltering memory of an old man Khrushchev now is 77.

This installment contains one error. Khrushchev is quoted as telling Kennedy in 1961 he helped him get elected by withholding the release of U2 pilot Francis Gary Powers, who was shot down in the Soviet Union in 1960, until after the election so "that son of a bitch Richard Nixon" could not claim he could deal with the Russians.

Shortly after Kennedy's election the Russians announced the release of two U.S. Air Force RB47 pilots who had been shot down on Soviet soil. But Powers was not released until early 1962.

"Khrushchev Remembers: Part IV" says the Kremlin was pleased at the way the forces of Fidel Castro threw back the Bay of Pigs invasion in April 1961, but the leadership was concerned that another one might succeed.

"I want to make one thing absolutely clear: when we put our ballistic missiles in Cuba, we had no desire to start a war. Our principal aim was to deter America from starting a war...We wanted to keep the Americans from invading Cuba, and we wanted to make them think twice by confronting them with our missiles. This goal we achieved-but not without undergoing a period of perilous tension.

"We had installed enough missiles already to destroy New York, Chicago and the other industrial cities, not to mention a little village like Washington. I don't think America had ever faced such a real threat of destruction as at that moment."

President Kennedy issued an ultimatum for the Soviet Union to remove the missiles and Ilyushin bombers. The reminiscences say Khrushchev himself then initiated direct exchanges with Kennedy.

There was an official exchange of messages between Washington and Moscow but the reminiscences say an unofficial exchange continued through Robert Kennedy on his brother's behalf.

"Once when Robert Kennedy talked with Dobrynin, he was almost crying. 'I haven't seen my children for days now,' he said, 'and the President hasn't seen his either. I don't know how much longer we can hold out against our generals."

In response, the reminiscences say, the Soviet Union agreed to withdraw the missiles in exchange for assurances from President Kennedy that there would be no invasion of Cuba by the United States or anybody else.

An accompanying article in Life indicates Khrushchev may have had trouble with his own generals and that this could have led to his downfall in 1964. It is by Dr. A. McGehee Harvey, director of the Department of Medicine at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, who went to the Soviet Union in 1969 to treat a member of the Khrushchev family.

Dr. Harvey writes that during a luncheon with Khrushchev outside Moscow, he asked the former premier what brought about his "retirement". He quoted Khrushchev as saying the shooting down of Francis Gary Powers led militarists to press for more military strength. "I was no longer in full control," Khrushchev is reported to have said. "I no longer had the ability to overcome that feeling."

Governors Criticize Nixon At Annual Meet

SUN VALLEY, Idaho (AP)-Some Republican governors gathering here yesterday for their annual conference were openly critical of the Nixon administration's role in the 1970 elections. Others, however, came to the administration's support.

The GOP lost control of 11 statehouses in the elections.

A few governors were irritated by President Nixon's comments discounting the role of governorships as a groundwork for the 1972 Presidential election.

There also was criticism of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's style of campaigning this fall. Two governors thought Agnew had cost the GOP votes.

The discontent was expected to be discussed in an informal session sometime during the three day winter Republican Governor's Conference at this southern Idaho ski resort.

Oregon Gov. Tom McCall said several governors had expressed concern to him about the President's comments.

Nixon was quoted as telling a post election Cabinet meeting: "Governors by and large in this day and age do not play an important role in Presidential politics."

A cross section of the Republican governors surveyed by the Associated Press before the meeting indicated many were reluctant to gauge the effect of Agnew's campaign.

Massachusetts Gov. Francis Sargent, who won a full term this year, commented, "I do, however, regret the vice president's unrestrained rhetoric during much of the campaign. As a member of an administration pledged "to bring this nation together,' the Vice President at times widened the gulf."

Michigan Gov. William G. Milliken, a narrow winner, thought Agnew helped to unify Republicans in Michigan.

Milliken added, "But generally across the country, the vice president's campaigning was a polarizing factor and contributed to alienation that was costly to the party."

Gov. Ronald Reagan of California disagreed, citing GOP gains in the U.S. Senate.

"I definitely think Vice President Agnew helped the President and the party with his vigorous campaign," Reagan said. Retiring Gov. Warren P. Knowles of Wisconsin said,

"Many who disagree with him nevertheless respect his candor."

New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller said Agnew has helped to "awaken the American people to the problems and the issues that confront the nation."

Possible Voiceprint Use As Evidence Seen

LINDEN, N.J. (AP)-Are voiceprints valid tools in the fight against crime?

"The system is 99.65 per cent foolproof," says Prof. Lawrence G. Kersta, head of Voiceprint Laboratories in nearby Somerville. "And just as accurate as fingerprinting."

A mysterious call to police predicting an explosion at the Esso Oil refinery last week has generated new dialogue among lawyers about the science of voiceprinting.

Some courts have admitted voiceprints as evidence in criminal trials while others have held that the technique is too new.

Kersta says that tests in which the voice has been disguised by whispering, putting marbles in the mouth or muffling speech have not fooled the spectograph

Peace Talks Expected As Fighting Wanes

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)-Until bloodied by the Jordanian army in September, the Palestinian guerrillas were a threat to peace in the Middle East. Now, with peace talks likely to start before the end of the year, the guerrillas are on the ropes, desperately trying to buy time. Guerrilla leader Yasir Arafat demonstrated this Sunday by appealing to Egypt and Syria to intervene in the "deteriorating" situation in Jordan.

In fighting there last week, the Jordanian army swept into Jarash on the main highway between the Amman and the Syrian border, flushing the guerrillas out of their last major stronghold and scattering their supply bases into hilly olive groves north of the city.

In the past, such an army move against the guerrillas would have triggered off violence in Amman. The fighting last week caused barely a ripple in the capital. Palestinians in the crowded refugee camps remained inactive.

By the end of the week both sides again had pledged to abide by peace agreements they signed earlier with an Arab truce mission. But what is, in fact, "deteriorating" in Jordan is the guerrillas' position.

Arafat repeatedly has maintained that no Arab leader could cross swords with his revolution without risking defeat by the fedayeen and a revolution among his own people.

Yet King Hussein, who presented the Arab case to President Nixon in Washington last week, and President Anwar Sadat of Egypt are moving toward peace talks without so much as a backward glance at Arafat. In August this would not have been possible.

Under the agreements announced last week, the various commando groups and the Palestine Liberation Army maintain their identities while the military command tries to work out a unified strategy. Disputes within the commando groups continue.

In the meantime, the Middle East situation appears to be moving toward resolution. Diplomatic sources in Beirut now confidently predict the start of peace talks and a second extension of the Middle East cease fire. During this extension, they say, the Big Four powers will succeed in reopening the Suez Canal and getting the Israelis to agree to more withdrawals over an extended period, leaving the most difficult questions-Jerusalem, the Golan Heights and the Straits of Tiran-until last.

According to these sources, once the canal is open the next stage would be the return of Palestinian refugees who fled in 1967 to a demilitarized West Bank. This also is worrying the guerrillas.

Prominent West Bank Palestinians increasingly are discussing such a state in Jerusalem newspapers, whether it should be a part of Jordan, semi-autonomous or independent. Hussein has promised the Palestinians a referendum on this question.

Twice this past week the guerrillas warned West Bank leaders not to let the rush of events "force them into creation of a truncated Palestinian state," as the commando newspaper Fateh put it Sunday.

But such statements seem to have no effect on the West Bankers. The guerrillas increasingly are aware of one of the major criticisms of their movement since it emerged after the 1967 war-a lack of support in the occupied territories.

Wondering

Moving from Southwest's Pierpont House to Central's Greenough is like moving from the corner of East 3rd Street and the Bowery to Westchester County. You sell out to middle class materialism, and you leave the urine, the sweat, the bloody scabs, the penetrating cold, the junkies, the pushers and dealers, the vibrating jarring stereos, the psychotics and neurotics, the loneliness, the permanent transients, the whores, the identity crises, the touchy-feely, the vomited bathrooms, the talk of "freedom", the irresponsibility, the nerves, the noise, the tension, the Babes, the malignant...you leave all these to the people who are least able to cope with the City in which they live, and are least aware of how badly they do not cope with it.

Like the New Yorker, a person living in Pierpont secretly looks forward to the crises of City living that break the monotony of the person's bored life. He enjoys the environment that constantly exposes him to people while enabling him to keep relative anonymity. And the fear of boredom, stability, and loss of incognito which accrues from a move to Greenough is often a deciding factor in whether or not to make the change. It probably turns out that the dull, lonely people who need to be entertained cannot adjust to a home that is not Southwest.

For those who do move from the City, it's nice to have a clean toilet, a television, a kitchenette and laundry machines. And it's a strange, but good feeling to have an exhausting day and know that you'll be able to go to sleep at 10 o'clock.

But the City still remains, and as you see the Southwest towers glowing in the dark a mile away, you wonder if you've made the right choice.

What is Baha'I?

Ba...who!? If this is your immediate reaction to the title of what you are now reading, I am now going to hip you to what's happenin'.

A Baha'I is a follower of the Divine teachings of Baha'u'llah. Ba...what!? Baha'Is believe Haha'u'llah is the manifestation of GOD for this day. HE was made manifest by GOD in 1863 and eventually martyred in 1892. Baha'Is, most definitely, believe that we are the creation of a Supreme Being. Baha'Is believe HE has sent Divine messengers in the form of such men as Moses, Zoraster, Krishna, Buddha, Jesus Christ, Mohammad, the Bab and Haha'u'llah. The spirit of these MEN are of GOD, therefore they are one in the same. The physical appearance differ, but the spirit is the same. The return is the spirit of each manifestation. Thereby, when Baha'Is speak or write about Baha'u'llah we are referring to all the manifestations. Why are there messengers sent to us? What is the purpose of these messengers? What is the purpose of Mankind?

By first understanding the purpose of human beings, it would be a lot easier to understand the purpose of the messengers. Mankind should function as a family. Believe it or not we were all created out of love; we were all created spiritual beings; we were all born with the potential to obtain the highest good, which is spiritual servitude for one another. Yet we abase ourselves! Recognizing Baha'u'llah means recognizing the spiritual oneness of Mankind. The spirit is eternal, yet we seek that which perish; we allow ourselves to become deseased with racism, war, hate. We seek liberation, but our thoughts are dictated by our material existence. True liberation is detachment from ourselves through spiritual means. We allow our egos to lead us astray and doubt the existence of a Supreme Being, which takes Faith only to lead us to the spiritual path of Truth. We have drifted and become veiled from that which we were created.

The manifestations have been sent to us to release us from our veils and prevent us from going astray. They have appeared in every age with teachings for man to follow. These teaching have been given to man as a guide, according to mans own progression and ability to understand. The spiritual teachings have always remained constant throughout religion. Now, we are in the stages of maturity, whereas man has continued to advance technologically. Our world is constantly changing, therefore religious teachings have to change in order to progress. Baha'u'llah has brought us the teachings for this day. The solutions to all our ills have been clearly defined and ordained in the world order of Baha'u'llah. The New World Order has been unfolded and rests in the hands of the Baha'Is.

I will close leaving you with this in mind. A very important principle of the Baha'I Faith is the "independent investigation of Truth". Is Baha'u'llah who HE says HE is? Do a little investigating and check this "thing" out.

Brazilian Revolution

Early last month, Brazilian military authorities rounded up over 5,000 persons "suspected" of subversive activites. This measure, they announced, had frustrated a plan by the revolutionary National Liberation Alliance (A.L.N.) to carry out abductions in commemoration of the first anniversary of the death of its founder, Carlos Marighella. Moreover, with the killing of Mr. Marighella's successor – allegedly in a police ambush – Brazilian military leaders as well as foreign observers were convinced that the A.L.N. had finally been defeated and that political kidnappings in Brazil would not recur.

Last Monday in Rio de Janeiro, six Liberation militants called that claim into question. Armed with submachineguns, they kidnapped the Swiss Ambassador. Giovanni Enrico Bucher is the fourth foreign diplomat in just over a year to be drawn into the violent circle of military repression and revolutionary retaliation that now seems to typify Brazilian political life. True to scenarios already established by this new breed on urban guerrillas, the revolutionaries demanded and received a military pledge to ransom Mr. Bucher by releasing 70 unidentified persons held on charges of terrorism and subversion. This is the highest ransom yet asked for a diplomat in that country. The astonishing fact in Brazil is that the urban guerrillas, mocking prophecies of their defeat, are more tenacious, successful and widespread than ever.

Most analysts agree that the urban guerrilla movement in Brazil arose mainly in response to the systematic repression of human rights by the nation's successive military governments. Since the armed forces seized power in the April, 1964, coup, they have rapidly dismantled every representative organization of Brazil's once-flourishing, albeit imperfect political democracy. Political parties were abolished, political and civil rights suspended, censorship of mass media enforced and voluntary nongovernmental associations repeatedly violated.

Since December, 1968, when "hard-line" military officers won out over moderates and decreed the Fifth Institutional Act, arbitrary rule has increased. With the abrogation of habeas corpus, police roundups, arrests without warrants and imprisonments without trial have become commonplace. In retaliation, armed civilian rebellion, once the subject of speculation, became a reality, while the widespread use of torture against political prisoners occurs with impunity. Early this month, the Brazilian Minister of Education, Jarbas Passarinho, finally acknowledged the use of torture by Brazilian security forces against which Pope Paul VI and other world figures have protested for more than a year.

Guevara, No

Military repression and revolutionary reprisal have formed the backdrop against which the 15 or so revolutionary organizations operate in Brazil today. The oldest and most important is the A.L.N., which Mr. Marighella founded in 1967 after he broke from the pro-Russian Brazilian Communist party (P.C.B.) because of its unwillingness to use terror against the Government. After a brief stint in Cuba, Mr. Marighella returned home convinced that the then fashionable Che Guevara-Regis Debray strategy of rural revolution was alien to Brazilian conditions. In proposing the urban guerrilla alternative, Mr. Marighella insisted that the revolutionary movement also remain financially and politically autonomous. Bank robberies and armory raids were conceived partly as safeguards against dependence on outside forces.

The A.L.N.'s insistence on "patriotism and nationalism" and its use of guerrilla war to make the masses politically aware are at odds with the second most important group, the Peoples' Revolutionary Vanguard (V.R.P.), which was responsible for the kidnapping of former United States Ambassador C. Burke Elbrick and of the Japanese Consul. The V.R.P. sees itself as an armed revolutionary vanguard whose military victory will precede the establishment of a popular government. Despite their differences, both groups speak for the others in their basic premise of seeking the armed overthrow of the present "military dictatorship."

The new cadre seemed to be coming mostly from large, urban university centers where military repression has been most pronounced. A growing martyrology has won converts; so has the hostility of young revolutionaries towards conventional Marxist-Leninist dogma. The collaboration of Marxist and Christian students that grew up before 1964 has continued and been strengthened in the guerrillas' movement.

Revolutionaries also draw upon wider sectors of Brazilian society for indirect support or sympathy. Recently the Government accused priests and brothers of the Dominican Order of aiding the revolutionaries. If true, this means that some churchmen now see their commitment to violent revolution as a logical fulfillment of Vatican II's injunction to eradicate social injustice. Even the conservative church hierarchy has thrice warned the military not to abuse the nation's patience. Looking on, hoping to see the regime falter, are the old-guard politicians, silenced since 1964 and eager to return to power, and the thousands of involuntarily retired military officers.

Certainly, the prospect that revolutionaries will overthrow the military Government is most improbable. The Government enjoys the greatest monopoly of power in Brazil's entire history. On the other hand, each act of military repression has called forth a corresponding act of revolutionary bearing. It seems more and more unlikely that the official predictions of the guerrillas' defeat will be borne out any better in the months ahead than they have in the weeks past.

Athletic Priorities

To The Editor:

Well, the controversy is over and the job was done neatly. The old man is gone and I guess UMass is right where it wants to be - in second place. Additionally a scapegoat has been found. Yes, a nice, neat, precise, way of ridding the school of its athletic problems.

As most of you know Vic Fusia "resigned" as head football coach to move into "athletic promotions" so he could "spend more time with his family". Also, as most of you know, there is more to this thing than that. No one seems to want to talk about the thing either.

I've been waiting for the Collegian to examine the issues, and make a stand or statement of some kind. None has been forthcoming and there definitely is a need for one.

Friction has taken place between the football office and the upper level administrators of the Athletic Department for good many years. For you see, the Athletic Administrators are under the mistaken impression that a school can carry on a semi-big time operation with a small budget. As the calibre of competition has increased the amount of funds has decreased, and the system as well as personal relations have been strained.

A football coach is in a peculiar position. He has the pressure of his superiors on one hand and the pressure of the sport on the other. All this heightened by the personalities of each and every player the man coaches. A coach must weave forty-five personalities together into a cohesive unit geared for one thing - winning.

Vic Fusia came to UMass to build the program. He took a school that was the worst in New England to the top (1964). The Yankee Conf., the bush league that it is, became synonymous with Vic Fusia's teams. But this true greatness showed later in his career. Faced with cutbacks, upper level jealousy, and a tougher schedule he still managed to win. His teams stayed in games which by all rights they should not have played, e.g., B.C. '68 and '70. He made teams out of virtually nothing.

Don't feel sorry for Vic Fusia or his staff. They will all succeed. The real losers in the issue are those who have kept UMass in the Yankee Conference, those who have tried to keep the man from going to bat for his players, be it in eligibility disputes (Pierre Marchando and Nick McGarry vs. YanCon) or legal trouble (Art Harris). These are people who need the sympathy. These are the people who want to fly first class but can only afford a second class ticket. These are the same people who will put the new Head-Coach in a totally unbearable situation – if he wishes to win. If he doesn't win, maybe he'll keep his job because there are a lot of losers at UMass. It could be back to the Dark Ages (not next year because there is a tremendous nucleus of talent which the man developed) in the near future.

There have been some greats and near greats here under Vic Fusia: Landry, Welchel, Morin, Marchando, Pena, Sarno, Carty, McGarry, Grasso, Hulecki, Scavone, DeFlavio – the list goes even farther than these people. But one does not have to have been a great to have benefited from the coaching and friendship of the man and his staff.

Pick One from Column A

To The Editor:

The time is 10:00 A.M. on Counseling Day and Carol Co-Ed is speaking to her Freshman Advisor about her requirements for freshman year. Carol is an English major and very confused about her required courses. This is their conversation.

"Now, Miss Co-Ed, what seems to be the trouble?" the smiling advisor asks her.

"Well, I was kind of confused about my required courses for this year," she answers.

"Why, we'll have that straightened out in no time," says the advisor, whose name is Harry Courses. "Now what is your major?"

"I'm planning to major in English."

"Hmmmm. That could be a cause for a few problems. You see, I'm a teacher in the Architectural Landscape Department and I'm afraid I don't know much about the English Department, but we can get your University Core requirements out of the way."

"O.K. What's first?"

"Good question. Well, first you have your two courses in English Composition, one speech course, two courses in Masterpieces of Western Literature, along with three courses in Wood Technology, one in Marine Biology, one intensified Spanish course, a Television and Broadcasting course, a Math course in Fournier Series and Orthogonal Functions, and a History of the Carribean course. These are all University requirements so there is no way to possibly get around them. Oh, I forgot to mention the science course in Mid-wifery, with two labs a week in the Infirmary. I realize there is not much freedom of choice in these requirements, but you do have three electives to take any courses you want. Of course, these must fill your "D" and "E" elective requirements."

"Gee, these courses sound ..... interesting. What are my choices for my electives?"

"Well, I also forgot to mention your requirement in Wo.P.E. This consists of four semesters of Physical Education courses, and you must pass tests in Class-Cutting, and Basket-Weaving before you can graduate. For your Wo.P.E. choices you have Basic Hop-Scotch, Beginning Jump-Rope, Intermediate Tree-Climbing or Advanced Tiddley-Winks. For your electives you can take any of the following: Public Health 263, Civil Engineering 140, Marketing 219, Chinese 120, Government 007, or Polymer Science and Engineering 6583/365/000. Of course, you always have your old stand-by: Men's Physical Education."

"Well, I think I should consider all the possibilities before I withdraw from the University, so I think I'll go over to the Administration Building and see if I can change my classification to non-student before I turn 65. I'd also like to see if the computer will take back my student I.D. number and give me a rebate on Freshman Convocation. I don't want you to think that irrelevance is the cause of my decision, because I can see where Polymer Science is definitely relevant to Shakespeare. Thank you for all your help."

"Anytime. Of course, you could always take Russian instead of Chinese but that's a flagged course so you might have to take Hotel and...."

AFROTC

To The Editor:

The Department of Air Science released information today that they are now accepting applicants for the two year AFROTC Program. All interested sophomores, male and female, and all seniors who are applying to graduate school at the University are eligible to apply. It is essential that early application be submitted because of the stringent entrance requirements and also the limited number of quotas available for new entrants. You are encouraged to visit the Department of Air Science to discuss the program with a faculty member.

Lines

To the Editor:

Lines are an inevitable part of a university of this size. They occur at many sporting events, at most social events, and invariably at the dining commons. They are a condition that becomes an ingrown reflex. I've become resigned to the long waits, as have many others. But there is a god given bunch who seem to think that they don't have to wait with the rest of us. Every where I go there are those that ignore the lines and just crush into the front. This isn't too bothersome in the dining commons as a meal is assured. But at a movie where seating is limited, or a basketball game where the seating is on a first come basis, it is really a bummer to wait a long time and then not get in because you've been cut out.

Cutting is an act of selfishness which should not be tolerated. In a place of "intelligence" it should not even happen.

R.I.P. Noodle

To the Editor:

After carefully considering several forms for this letter, from the outraged to the sublime, from the cynical to the crusading, I decided that a candid statement would be most fitting: the closing of the Noodle will be a sad loss to us all.

The idea was exciting, the food--well-prepared and satisfying, the service--courteous, and the atmosphere was friendly and peaceful. About the only thing missing was the excessive overhead and price mark-ups, everpresent at its competitor establishments. Judging from the increasing numbers of fellow students who gathered daily to share this dining experience, it would appear that these sentiments are not unique.

I would suggest that if the student government sincerely hopes to be more than a hollow caricature of its big-brother counterparts, it will find a way to allow the Noodle to continue to serve the campus community and the electorate.

Peace On Earth?

Christmas is the time of year when everyone traditionally talks about "Peace on Earth." Yet this Christmas sees our country still involved in a terrible war in Vietnam, and thousands are dying there – as men kill men, women and children. Others are dying in "little" wars in Laos, Cambodia, Thailand and Korea. Arabs and Israelis kill each other regularly. Russians and Chinese are killing each other along their mutual border. Is there any hope for peace among men?

A long time ago a man by the name of Paul wrote of men in general: "They have no experience of the way of peace – for they know nothing of peace, for a peaceful way they do not even recognize."

Men everywhere talk about peace when they want other men to stop making war, but when they want something, they go to war to get it. Chairman Mao says, "Our country and all the other socialist countries want peace; so do the peoples of all the countries of the world." But he also says, "The seizure of power by armed force, the settlement of the issue by war, is the central task and the highest form of revolution." And, "Every Communist must grasp the truth: political power grows out of the barrel of a gun."

ELUSIVE PEACE

The shocking fact of human history is that men under the leadership of men have always made war. And so the people long for peace while it eludes them. The peace we look for today is just as elusive as ever. If the United States withdrew all of its soldiers from Vietnam and every other country, there would still not be peace. Even if we were to see that happen and every oppressive force around the world disbanded, we know that the peace for which the human heart longs would not come that way. Husband would still fight with wife, boyfriend with girlfriend, and roommate with roommate.

When Jesus was born, angels said, "Glory to God in the highest heaven, and peace on earth for all those pleasing Him." And when Jesus was preparing to go back go heaven, He said to His followers, "I am leaving you with a gift – peace of mind and heart! And the peace I give isn't fragile like the peace the world gives."

He promises that peace to all who invite Him to come into their lives to be the ruling force. Then He promises that their new lives will produce love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness and self-control. People who receive Him become part of His eternal family, knit together and given the role of being part of His plan in bringing others into the family.

How does one receive Jesus? It's simply a matter of asking Him to come into one's life. God is not concerned so much with out words as with the attitudes of our hearts. If you have never asked Jesus into your life, you can become a part of His peace program today!

Human And Emotions Hold Van Ronk Viewers

Dave Van Ronk, who gleefully molested an appreciative audience at Bowker Auditorium last Friday and Saturday nights, is the Cookie Monster from Sesame Street, Fat Albert, and Harry Belafonte poured with some Bud into one, big, bellowing beer stein.

Speaking to him after the performance Friday, this critic was advised by Van Ronk that one should down "a quart of whiskey, bronchial asthma helps, and switch to Camels" in order to achieve an original Van Ronk voice.

FINE ARTS

Purists and followers of Judy Collins and Joan Baez would shriek at Van Ronk's hoarseness, whispers, grunts, shouts, voice cracks, and high notes. But if they did, they would neglect to note the control Van Ronk has over his voice, his dynamics, and his audience.

Amidst Van Ronk's apparent anarchy of harmony at the concerts, there appeared an amazing cohesion and feeling to the songs. Van Ronk played with his audience, brought it up with humorous and "bawdy" songs, and quickly left it staggering with soft and even soothing blues and ballads.

Van Ronk's comedy speaks for itself: "Leave me with your knife and bring me a knife"..."unicorns are horny" ..."give me one bullet and come back for me later"..."if somebody kicks that will be me dear, and if someone gets kicked that will be you"..."when she saw what the elephant had, she didn't want to come back to me"... "I ain't good-lookin' but I'm hard to kill" ..."Bob Dylan promised me he would leave me his liver"...

But in between Van Ronk's barbs were songs that showed a part of the man--comedians are, after all, reputed to be sad men underneath their mask. Van Ronk made emotional use of crescendos, and in numbers such as "Bird on a Wire", "Urge For Going", and "Think It's Going To Rain Today", he created a tension that communicated to his audience much more than the lyrics and the melodies. The crescendo, not unlike programmed learning of Skinnerism psychology, was ideally evidenced by two Kurt Weill-Bertolt Brecht songs including "Mack the Knife".

It was disconcerting, however, to feel that everytime Van Ronk began confiding in you and revealing himself to you, he switched to that damned, bewitching humor.

But a composite picture could be drawn by the end of the concert to show that Dave Van Ronk was a human, unselfish, and feeling performer of both high quality and integrity--a performer that this campus has sorely missed for a long time.

Broad Farce, Gross Satire, And . . .

Aristophanes' The Clouds -- a pre-Socartic comic revel, with music -- will be presented on December 16, 17, 18, 19, in Bartlett Auditorium by UMass Theatre at 8:30 p.m.

The Clouds is a good-natured but penetrating attack on intellectual pretention. Socrates, Athens' number one intellectual, is portrayed as a humbug fool whose major academic preoccupation is the intestinal tract of a flatulent gnat. The emphasis is on broad farce, gross satire, and often obscene buffoonery.

Tickets for The Clouds may be purchased at the University Theatre Box Office, Bartlett, or by calling the box office (545 - 52579). Admission is $1.75. Tickets will also be sold at the door.

Films 70: Best and Worst

By Robert Nesti
Fine Arts Editor

The following list is something of consensus of feelings by a reasonably small cross-section on campus. The films all received good exposure in the Amherst area during the last twelve months, and are chronologically arranged:

BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID

Paul Newman, and Robert Redford play these two historical outlaws who were among the last in the Old West. It is a funny and romantic film which parodies the old western yet makes some serious comments on the closing of the frontier.

THEY SHOOT HORSES, DON'T THEY?

A novel which greatly influenced the existential writers of this century was made into a powerful and brutal film. The setting is a marathon dance during the Depression and the film explores the pathetic lives of some of its participants.

Z

A film about political repression in Greece which had a great effect on many students' lives, especially in relation to the student strike. Although the politics were somewhat heavy-handed, it is one of the most suspenseful and exciting films of the year with probably the best photography and music score.

M*A*S*H

Although not the anti-war satire some have claimed, M*A*S*H is simply a very funny film. Done in short vignettes, it's story of three medics during the Korean War and the manner in which they coped with army life. The cast, headed by Elliot Gould, was excellent and the humor is irreverant as it explores the absurdity of a bureaucratic army.

WOODSTOCK

A documentary of the rock festival. An extremely well-organized, innovative film that is entertaining despite its length and potentially repititious material. The over-whelming talent is only enhanced by the photography which utilizes wide and multi-screen images.

THE BOYS IN THE BAND

"Show me a happy homosexual, and I'll show you a gay corpse," says one of the characters in this film version of the immensely successful off-Broadway play. It's about a birthday party, with a twist, and is hysterically funny along with being an insightful look into the problems of homosexuality. It contains the best acting of any film of the year.

CATCH-22

The long-awaited Mike Nichol--Buck Henry adaptation of Joseph Heller's anti-war satire. Unable to capture the feeling of the entire book, the film rather focuses in on Yossarian and his problem relating to the absurdity of the Second World War. Alan Arkin is again excellent and is supported ably by a large cast. It's a funny, raw, and brutal film experience which haunts the memory long after seeing it.

DIARY OF A MAD HOUSEWIFE

Frank and Eleanor Perry again come through with an excellent film. This one about the harried existance of a chic, New York housewife with a debut performance by Carrie Snowgress that should bring her acting awards in the coming months. Richard Benjamin is perfect as her bastard of a husband and newcomer Frank Langella starts his promising film career in fine fashion as her moron of a lover.

AND NOW THE WORST: THE STRAWBERRY STATEMENT and GETTING STRAIGHT

College life, oh well, Hollywood's view of what its like to be at schools where politics are the student's passion. False and degrading.

MYRA BRECKINRIDGE and BEYOND THE VALLEY OF THE DOLLS

Twentieth Century Fox meets the Sexual Revolution head-on with perversion and Mae West. The first is a castration of Gore Vidal's funny satire in which Rex Reed becoming Raquel Welch with only one obvious difference. The latter is Russ Meyer's junk piece that even Jackie Suzanne didn't want her name associated with.

HELLO, DOLLY and ON A CLEAR DAY YOU CAN SEE FOREVER

Barbra Streisand may single-handedly bring on the death of Hollywood as she is the showpiece in both these twenty-million dollar disasters. If anything they prove her talent runs thin anywhere out of the Bronx.

American Economics, Imperialism Examined By 11th Hour Lecturer

"Underdeveloped countries need a social revolution. It is the only real hope for breaking down the existing barriers of economic development," Professor Michael Best of the University's Economic Department firmly stated in a speech here last week entitled "American Imperialism: A Political Economic Analysis."

In the opening of his speech sponsored by the Maroon Keys "Eleventh Hour Lecture Series," Best said he would attempt to describe a number of issues relevant to American imperialism that present different kinds of problems.

"Why are we so rich, why are they so poor? Eighty percent of the world's population uses 20% of the world's output while the affluent 20 per cent uses 80 per cent of the world's output," Best said.

"Economic imperialism is economic domination."

He emphasized that the United States economic system of corporate capitalism dominates underdeveloped countries of the world.

He listed the U.S.'s instruments of corporate control used to maintain the existing world economy. The first, he said, are tariffs which prohibit competition.

The second is the expansion of military bases around the world. "Fifty billion dollars of military aid is sent to Europe each year by the U.S. This is the most horrifying aspect. It is militarization of underdeveloped countries under the name of anti-Communism," Best claims.

"Foreign private investments, Best said, drive out local development."

The Agency for International Development, designed to maintain presence of the United States throughout the world for economic reasons, has, according to Best, manipulate loans to underdeveloped countries to enable the U.S. to profit from foreign aid.

Best described the fifth instrument of corporate control as the international agencies that do not attempt to break tariffs and monopolies. Instead, underdeveloped countries must still pay back given loans, he explained.

Asian Studies Meeting Tonight

There will be a seminar to discuss the future development of an Asian studies program at UMass tonight in room 904 of the Campus Center at 8:00.

"As a new program with as yet no majors of its own, Asian studies is in need of more student input concerning present offerings and future plans," said Professor Naff, head of the UMass Asian Studies Program, in an invitation to all students who have "any interest in any aspect of the Asian Studies."

Professor Naff told the Collegian that one of the purposes of tonight's seminar will be to discuss the formation of a "student committee Asian Studies, which would provide a premanent instrumentality for student participation in the development of the Asian Studies Program."

There will be a brief meeting of faculty involved in the Asian Studies Program from about 7:30 tonight to prepare for the seminar.

Author Manchester Serving As "Friend of Libe" Trustee

A distinguished group of citizens, headed by author William Manchester, has agreed to serve as trustees of the newly organized Friends of the Library, at UMass.

Formed to support the "enrichment of the total resources and facilities of the library" the new organization is open to any individual, business firm or group interested in assisting the development of the resources and facilities of the University library.

The 28-story tower library, designed by Edward Durell Stone, will have a capacity of 2 million volumes when it is completed in 1972.

Manchester, author and alumnus, has been elected President of the Friends. Mrs. Lucy Benson, National President of the League of Women Voters, is vice-president.

Trustees-at-large are: George Allen, publisher and vice president of Fawcett Publishing Company, alumnus; Leonard Baskin, artist; Charles Cole, former president of Amherst College; Winthrop Dakin, Massachusetts Board of Higher Education; Fred Emerson, former UMass Trustee; Robert Francis, poet; Emerson Greenway, retired director of the Philadelphia Free Public Library, alumnus; Franklin Patteron, president of Hampshire College; Frederick Troy, UMass Trustee, alumnus; and William Troy, vice president of the Western Publishing Company, alumnus.

Dean Mortimer H. Appley of the Graduate School is Faculty Senate Representative, and Director of Libraries David M. Clay is secretary-treasurer and a member ex officio of the directors.

Representing the alumni are Mrs. L. Francis Kennedy of New Hampshire, Mrs. Gilbert Slovin of Worcester, and Miss Mary Jane Moreau of Boston.

An undergraduate and a graduate student will be chosen to complete the list of trustees and representatives of the Friends.

"Spiritual Revolution" Highlighting "Focus"

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" will broadcast a discussion on the theme: "For a Spiritual Revolution."

Ken Mosakowski's special guest for the live 60-minute program is Mrs. Elizabeth H. Backman, professor of behavioral sciences at Greenfield Community College.

Mrs. Backman, a resident of Northfield since 1952, gained considerable notoriety when she recently turned over her home at 88 Main Street to the Brotherhood of the Spirit, a communal group of young people. The house, reputed to have been the first hostel in America, at one time served as the national headquarters of the American Youth Hostel movement.

Mrs. Backman is resigning her teaching position at GCC at the end of this semester to work full time with the Opie Mountain Citadel, which, according to her, is "a fellowship of those committed to spiritual quest for growth, unbound by creeds and doctrines, open to truth wherever it may be found, concerned with the search of the individual and his own growth, and the rededication of all to the deep inner solution of the problems that beset mankind today."

Interested listeners are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM.

'74 Budget Passed

The Class of 1974's budget ($12,013) was passed at the first meeting of the Freshman Executive Council held Saturday. President John Long presided over the meeting.

The Council also decided to hold a Christmas social for the elderly of Amherst nursing homes, to have Freshman Christmas carolers, and to hold a small folk or rock concert around February.

Third-Place Track Team Performs Well

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Competing without four of its top performers, but coming up with a fine first-meet performance despite the lack of top personnel, the UMass track team came out on the bottom end of a tri-meet with UConn, the meet winner, and Yale, the host school.

The team scores stood at 54 for UConn, 52 for Yale, and 31 for the Redmen, but if one breaks down the scoring and adds the possible points that a Dave Evans, a Jerry Spellman, an Eddie Arcaro, and a Dick Dyer would have added if they were present, then the scoring difference between the Redmen and their opponents is very small.

Looking back over the team performance, a happy coach Ken O'Brien commented, "I was very pleased with the performance of the team as a whole. We need some work with the middle distance men, the quarter milers, and a couple of milers and two-milers and we'll be ready to put it together."

Wayne ran his usual well-run double of 4:19 in the mile and 9:19 in the two mile. In both races he ran well within himself, and made his move with a quarter of a mile to go.

Barry ran 4:26 in the mile to place third and Dunsky clocked 9:49 in the deuce to turn in his best time in this event for a first-meet performance.

Harris and Pendleton took third and fourth in the 60-yard dash. O'Brien was very pleased with the sprinters in the meet.

In the hurdles, Graves and Landry placed second and third. Graves' time of 7.8 seconds was only three seconds off his best time of last season, which he ran late in the schedule. Landry turned in his personal best time of 8.3 seconds in this, his first varsity meet.

The high jumping trio of Carpenter, Shaughnessy and Hackler gave Ron Evans from UConn, possibly the best high jumper in New England, all he could handle as each jumped 6'4" in placing second, extending this event and the meet well past the scheduled time for it to end.

And finally Kam, although he didn't place in the pole vault, did vault 12 feet, a fine mark for his first taste of varsity competition.

Scores are deceiving and this was certainly the case in Saturday's meet. With the return of the four performers mentioned earlier, the continued improvement on the part of the entire team, the Redmen will be a formidable unit when it really counts, towards the end of the season.

Frosh Cagers Are 3-0 With 90-53 Amherst Win

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

Led by the passing of Rick Pitino and the rebounding of Al Skinner, the UMass freshman basketball team raced past the Amherst frosh for a 90-53 victory in the Cage Saturday night. The win gave the UMass frosh a record of three wins against no losses while dropping Amherst to 0-1 in its first game of the year.

The little Redmen scored the first seven points of the game on a basket by Skinner, two by Pitino, and a free throw by Skinner. Amherst managed to keep close though, on bombs by guards Mike Considine and Jeff Mondshein. But with 14:07 to go in the first half and led by Skinner, UMass outscored Amherst 11-3 over a three minute span. Skinner had seven points over this stretch.

At this point Art Levine took over and started to heat up from the corner. After a basket by John Olson on a pass from Pitino, Levine scored the next eight UMass points.

This made the score 33-18 with 7:30 to go in the half. The two teams played pretty evenly for the rest of the period, and at the intermission UMass had a substantial 45-26 edge.

The UMass frosh opened up the scoring in the second half on a basket by Pete Trow on a beautiful pass from Pitino. And over the first six minutes of the second half UMass outscored Amherst 14-7 to take a 61-33 lead.

From here on the little Redmen were never headed, and with 5:02 to go in the game and the score 74-48, the game was all but over.

UCLA wins again, so what else is new in college basketball?

Well, Indiana should have no trouble winning the Big Ten title, according to Adolph Rupp, veteran coach of the University of Kentucky.

Rupp predicted the I.U. feat Saturday after his unbeaten Wildcats pulled out a 95-93 overtime victory over the Hoosiers at Bloomington, Ind. UCLA, the No. 1 team in the country, enjoyed a 95-75 romp at home against Tulsa. It was UCLA's ninth in the Bruin's latest winning streak, which includes a carryover of five from last year. Their amazing won-lost record is now 124-4 in their last 128 games.

* * * * *

ST. LOUIS (AP)-Cool Fran Tarkenton rifled three touchdown passes, as the New York Giants took a share of the National Football Conference's East Division lead with the Dallas Cowboys via a 34-17 triumph yesterday over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Tarkenton's aerials, good for 242 yards on 14 completions in 21 attempts, lifted the Giant record in the NFC East to 9-4 to match that of the Cowboys.

* * * * *

BUFFALO (AP)-The Baltimore Colts won their division title in the National Football League yesterday by capitalizing on three Buffalo penalties to post a 20-14 victory over the Bills on a slippery, snow covered field.

The triumph gave the Colts, now 10-2-1, the Eastern Division crown in the American Conference.

* * * * *

HOUSTON (AP)-Essex Johnson scored a pair of second-half touchdowns to break up a tie yesterday as the surprising Cincinnati Bengals defeated the Houston Oilers 30-20 to nail down at least a share of the American Football Conference Central Division championship.

* * * * *

MIAMI (AP)-Garo Yepremian, Miami's bald-headed marvel, booted two field goals in the final two minutes yesterday to beat the New York Jets 16-10 and sweeten the Dolphins' National Football League playoff hopes.

Miami, a paltry 3-10-1 last season, improved its record to 9-4 under new coach Don Shula and needs only to tie or defeat Buffalo next week to enter the American Conference showdown.

* * * * *

FREEPORT, Grand Bahamas (AP)-Doug Sanders broke a three-year victory famine with a playoff triumph in the Bahama Islands Open golf tournament yesterday while Arnold Palmer's 15-year victory string went by the boards.

* * * * *

SESTRIERE, Italy (AP)-Henri Duvillard of France won the Sestrinere men's downhill ski race yesterday completing a weekend sweep by the powerful French team in the opening events of 1971 World Cup competition.

LACROSSE CANDIDATES

Hoopsters Win Two In Conference

To the left, UMass forward Chris Coffin goes over Dwight Peters, number 31 of New Hampshire, for an offensive rebound in the first half of Saturday night's 89-53 victory. Coffin played an outstanding game, very possibly his best ever for the Redmen. The junior forward scored ten points, grabbed 13 rebounds, and played his usual outstanding defense. In the background are (l-r) McKeen Kessel, Ken Mathias, Frank Davis, Julius Erving (half-hidden) and Dave Pemberton.

Erving is shown on the right in action against Rhode Island last Thursday night. The UMass junior forward is about to score two of his 29 points. UMass won the game in overtime by a score of 80-76. The win was a very important one as UMass is now 3-0 in the Yankee Conference with a big game Tuesday against the University of Connecticut at Storrs, Ct.

The Redmen will need solid performances from both Coffin and Erving as well as from the rest of the team if they are to come away with a victory against UConn. (MDC photos by Gary Slickman.)

Survival at the Cage

We were stranded for three hours outside in the freezing cold night. Coming from inside, the sound of a basketball bouncing off a hardwood floor brought the freezing crowd to a frenzy, thrusting them a full six inches forward towards the "reluctant coliseum". Throngs of basketball Groupies were exchanging statistics as we watched in awe, the mass of people about us. Suddenly, without the slightest warning, the waxing aroma of a ham and Swiss cheese sandwich, mingled with the curling steam of hot coffee, struck our olfactory senses. We turned and faced an eminently happy individual chowing down right before us on a beautiful ham and Swiss sandwich while quaffing the hot coffee.

"Where d'ya get that?"

"Over at the Campus Center," he replied between obviously pleasurable gulps.

"You also get a package of cupcakes, potato chips and another sandwich along with a great cardboard box you can keep — for a pretty cheap price, too!"

Before we could speak again, we found ourselves carried inside.

After the game, we spotted him again carrying the telltale box, "Hey, how d'ya like the game?"

"It was great! Especially the Tuna sandwich I saved for the last half."

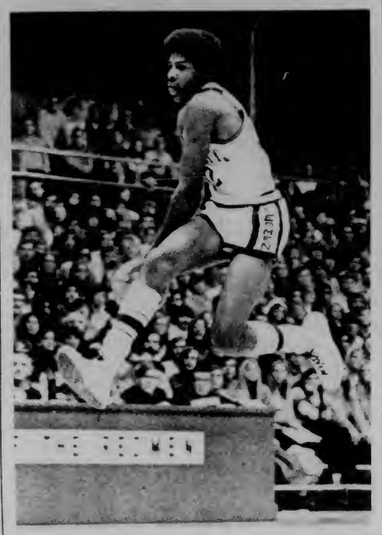
UMass' Basketball And Hockey Teams Continue Their Unbeaten Ways . . .

Hoopsters Take UNH In Stride, 89-53

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

After struggling through two consecutive overtime victories, the UMass basketball team was finally able to breeze to a win Saturday night as it easily downed New Hampshire at the Cage, 89-53, before 4200 snow-covered fans. The Redmen remained undefeated at 4-0 while the Wildcats dipped to 1-4.

The game was close for about the first ten minutes of play. However, paced by the outstanding play of forward Chris Coffin and the hot hand of John Betancourt, UMass was able to build up a 17-point halftime bulge and then put it away early in the second half.



UMass opened the scoring on a Coffin six-footer at 19:45 and Frank Davis, the Wildcat center, came right back with a short hook to tie the score. Julius Erving, who had another fine night with 28 points and 18 rebounds, sunk a free throw, but then the Wildcats ran off five straight points to put the slow starting Redmen behind by four, 7-3. Scoring for New Hampshire in this spurt were Dwight Peters and Dave Pemberton on jump shots and Davis on a charity toss.

Coffin, author of eight rebounds and six points in the first half, brought the Redmen back to life on a rebound hoop and Erving and Betancourt began to connect as UMass closed the gap to one, 14-13, at the 11:26 mark.

UMass then proceeded to run off seven points and actually didn't look back for the rest of the way. The burst began on a pretty hoop by Erving after a nifty pass by, you guessed it, Coffin, and then Ken Mathias connected on a Betancourt feed. The junior guard then got into the scoring act himself as he hit on one of his many hoops from the corner. Mike Pagliara ended the skein as he sunk a pretty fall away jumper from the corner, too, and UMass found itself on top, 21-14, with 9:21 to go.

Although the Wildcats kept trying, they were simply outclassed by the Redmen who started to open up. Betancourt netted three more long jumpers and a lay up to pace UMass to a 37-21 halftime bulge, and for all intents and purposes, that was the ball game.

A GLIDE PASS - UMass' Julius Erving (pictured above) is not about to throw a jump pass, for the pass he really threw came off of a beautiful glide through the air. The ball went to a cutting Chris Nichols, who fed it back to Erving, who scored a couple of more points as the Redmen defeated New Hampshire, 89-53. (MDC photo by Gary Slickman)

Whatever doubt there was about the outcome was ended early in the second stanza as the Redmen outscored New Hampshire 12-4 in the opening minutes. Doing the scoring in this span for UMass were Pagliara with three points, Rick Vogeley with four, Coffin with three and Erving with a couple. With 15:21 to go, the Redmen led, 49-27.

Coach Jack Leaman then began substituting freely as the UMass lead fluctuated between 18 and the final margin of 36 points. The entire Redman unit saw action which should prove helpful in some of the more difficult contests that UMass must face. Especially impressive in this group were Charlie Peters, who grabbed eight rebounds in only five minutes of action, and guard Chris Nichols, who scored four points and picked up a couple of assists in spot duty.

The prettiest play of the night occured with just under ten minutes to go as the Redmen broke downcourt led by Erving. The fantastic forward hit Nichols with a pass underneath the hoop and the quick-thinking junior returned the favor as he passed to Erving all alone for an easy two points.

The final score was 89-53 which was certainly indicative of the play.

LAY—UP LINES—UMass shot an excellent 58% from the floor while its opponent could only connect on 34.5%... The Redmen outrebounded New Hampshire by the unbelievable margin of 56-18. In other words, Erving collected as many caroms as the entire Wildcat squad. Coffin, playing an aggressive game throughout, collected 13 rebounds himself in only 31 minutes of play...UMass is now 3-0 in the Yankee Conference and faces a tough battle Tuesday night at Storrs against Connecticut.

Skaters Stop Shots, And Middlebury, 5-2

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

Dennis Grabowski scored two goals, including the game's eventual winner at 13:36 of the second period, while P.J. Flaherty stopped 27 Middlebury shots, many on the spectacular side, as UMass defeated the Panthers 5-2 Friday evening at Orr Rink. The win upped the Redmen's record to a perfect 5-0.

Lead by such players as Dave Norton, Brian Iggulden, Jim Glynn, Grove Nicholas and Rick Kelley, the Middlebury attack had been producing goals at a six-game pace. Friday night it was a completely different story for the Panthers.

The UMass forechecking game, one of the major reasons for the team's success this season, was at it's best. The Redmen consistantly disrupted the Middlebury attack, causing the Panthers into frequent and numerous errors in their own game. Except for the outstanding goal tending by Middlebury goalie Sal Adams the game would have been a run-away in the first period.

UMass enjoyed a territorial advantage from the onset. But poor shooting, especially in front of the net, plus Adams' outstanding goal tending kept the game close. At 3:33 of the first period Brian Sullivan hit Pat Keenan with a breakaway attempt up the middle. Keenan flew into the Panther zone, but the puck eluded him and he only managed a weak shot which Adams quickly cornered up.

Moments later Mike Waldren missed a Grabowski rebound, as Adams was down and out to the left. The Redmen continued to pressure Middlebury, but they just couldn't find the net. UMass missed two more golden opportunities at 7:41 and 8:25, but it finally banged one home at 12:41 when Bob Shilalie picked up a loose puck in the Panther zone, passed to Lonnie Avery, who let a quick shot go from the left corner. Adams made the initial save, but he couldn't control the rebound. Waldron gathered the puck and flipped it into the right corner for the game's first score.

Middlebury never lost its pace and came right back at the Redmen. The big difference in the game was that every time the Panthers had a good scoring opportunity, Flaherty came up with a big save giving the Redmen new life. At 16:03, Norton split the Redman defense but Flaherty blocked the first shot, wing Jim Glynn picked up the rebound, but Flaherty recovered in time to stop Glynn's shot.

The second period started like the first, with the Redmen dominating play and Flaherty stuffing Middlebury's scoring opportunities. During the opening minutes Middlebury had three good scoring opportunitites. Flaherty stopped the first shot, and Middlebury, over-cautious of Flaherty's pressure, missed the net on its next two opportunities.

Great in goal.

UMass scored its second goal at 8:45 when Keenan made a big play on pure defense and hustle. Knocked down near the front of the net, he managed to get to his knees and poke the loose puck to Jack Edwards. Edwards circled the net from right to left and hit the streaking Don Riley with a perfect pass. Riley took a quick shot, beating Adams cleanly to the right.

Again the determined Panthers refused to quit. Going all out, they began to press UMass in the offensive zone. At 10:19 Flaherty made a good play when he blocked a screened shot by Middlebury's Kellel from the slot.

Grabowski's first goal and UMass's third came at 13:36 when Waldron stole the puck from Jim Pierson in the UMass zone, flipped the puck along the boards to Grabowski for a breakaway attempt. Grabowski flew along the right side and unleashed a bomb from about 20 feet beating Adams to his left.

The Redmen began to play overcautiously during the third period, but Flaherty again saved them. Knowles, Kelley and Parker broke in on a three-on-one break, but Flaherty again came out of his net and made the big save. This lifted the Redman spirits as Grabowski scored his second at 4:21 when Waldron stole the puck again and fed him on a break. Grabowski beat Adams on the same shot as he had in the second period giving UMass a 4-0 lead.

The game began to get sloppier as Middlebury began to gamble trying to catch up. At 17:55 Flaherty stopped Nicholas' rush by coming out of his net and cutting down the angle. Middlebury continued pressing and scored at 12:05 when Dixon beat Flaherty high. Two minutes later Middlebury closed the gap to two goals when the Panthers scored on a power play at 14:28 with Keenan in the box for hooking.

UMass rallied and, for all purposes, put the game out of reach when Keenan scored at 16:21 on a rebound, assists going to Reidy and Edwards.

ICE CHIPS: The Redmen have two games left before the holiday vacation, both games are at home. Tuesday evening they face American International and Friday night they take on Norwich.

Gymnasts Open With Win Over So. Conn.

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

NEW HAVEN, Ct.—The UMass gymnastics team opened its 1970-71 season here Saturday with a strong team performance to soundly defeat Southern Connecticut State College, 156.55-149.00. The Redmen won the side horse, still rings, parallel bars and horizontal bar events, as well as taking a total of three first places, four seconds and three thirds. The win was a combination of outstanding individual performances and good team depth.

The Redmen were led by senior Norm Vexler, who won the parallel bars event, tied for first place in the still rings event, took second place in the side horse event, and finished a close second in the all-around event.

Other outstanding UMass performers were John Calabria and Jack Berner in floor exercise, Rick Riley on side horse, Bob Henry on the long horse, co-captain Tony Vacca on parallel bars and rings, Jay Aronstein on rings and Tom Myslicki on high bar.

In spite of Calabria's 8.6, which was good for second place, and Berner's 8.45, which netted him third, UMass found itself on the short end of a 26.10-25.35 score for the first event, floor exercise. John Crosby of So. Conn. easily took top honors in this event with a score of 9.25.

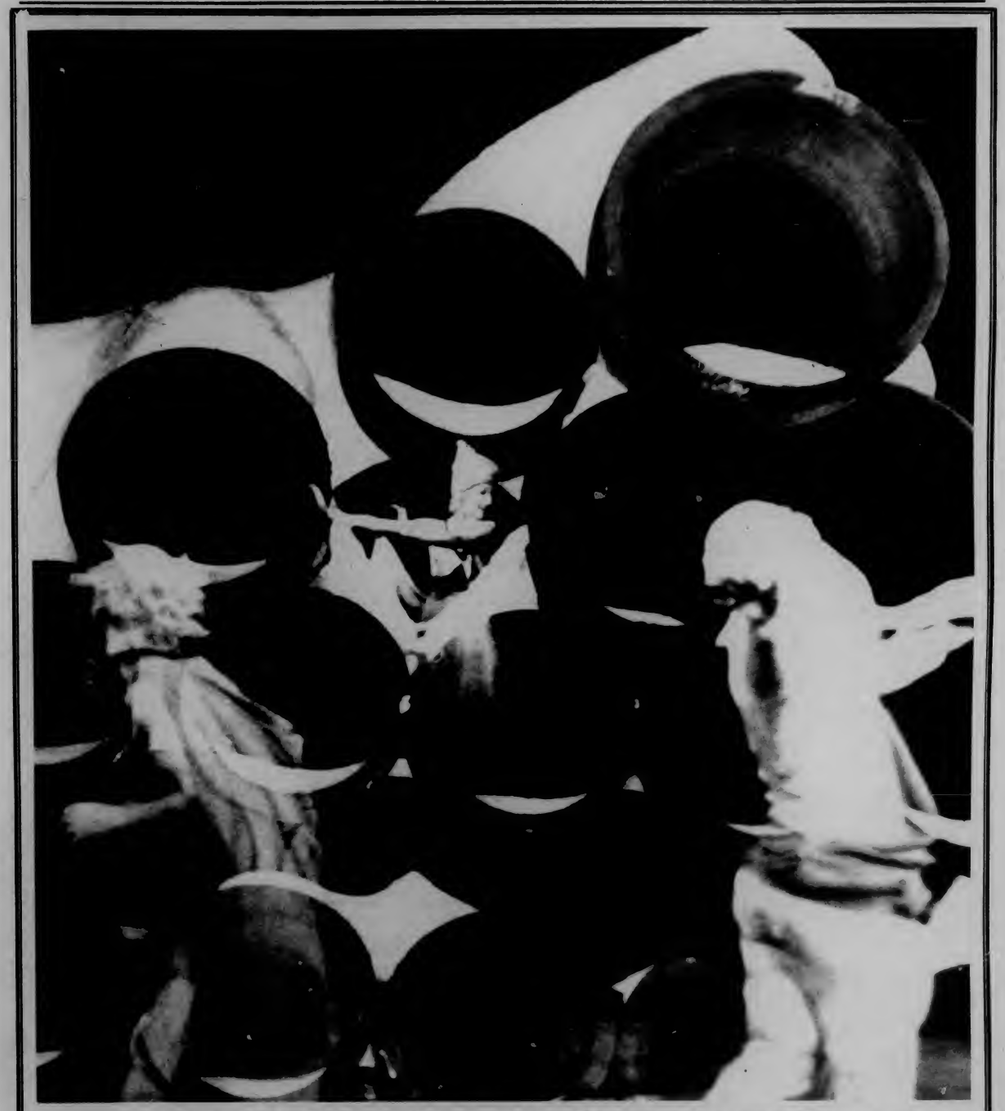
Riley won the side horse event with a score of 9.15, bettering So. Conn.'s best effort by .7 of a point. Vexler, with a score of 8.95, captured second place as the Redmen completely outscored So. Conn. in this event, 25.35-18.35, to gain the lead, 50.70-44.45.

Vexler tied for first in the still rings event with a score of 9.15, while Aronstein was impressive in scoring a 9.0, which was good for third place. UMass increased its lead by .7 as it won the event, 26.50-25.70. The score at intermission read UMass 77.20, So. Conn. 70.15.

In the long horse vault, So. Conn., led by Crosby and Zimiewicz, outscored UMass, 26.85-26.10. Crosby led all vaulters with a score 9.35. Henry was the high scorer for the Redmen as he captured second place with a score of 8.90.

Vexler took another first place, scoring a 9.15 in the parallel bars event, as the Redmen won this event, 26.85-26.10. Co-captain Vacca took third place with an 8.90. UMass now led, 130.15-123.10.

The Redmen won the final event, horizontal bar, by .5 of a point. Crosby took first place for the Owls with a score of 9.40, while Myslicki led the Redmen with a score of 9.10, which was good for second place. The event score for high bar was UMass 26.40, So. Conn. 25.70, bringing the final score of the meet to UMass 156.55, So. Conn. 149.00.



In the all-around event, the Owls' Crosby won with an impressive 53.90. Vexler was the top Redmen all-around, winning second place with a strong score of 52.45.

Connally Replaces Kennedy In Treasury

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon announced in person Monday that former Gov. John Connally of Texas, a Democrat, will replace David M. Kennedy as secretary of the Treasury.

Kennedy, a Republican, is giving up his post Feb. 1 and will be named the administration's ambassador at large, with Cabinet rank.

Flanked by Kennedy and Connally at a news briefing, Nixon hailed the recruiting of Connally, a longtime friend and political ally of former President Lyndon B. Johnson, as significant to relations between a Republican President and Democratic Congress. He said it also means it will be possible to present the country's economic programs both at home and abroad as bipartisan efforts - bearing neither Republican nor Democratic tags.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler was unwilling to say whether or when other Cabinet changes might be coming. This is the fourth shift in Nixon's cabinet since the President took office in January 1969.

Nixon called Johnson in Texas to inform him of Connally's appointment while Connally and his wife were breakfasting with the President and Mrs. Nixon at the White House Friday morning.

Connally served for a time as secretary of the Navy in the administration of President John F. Kennedy and is a three term governor of Texas. He was riding in the White House limousine beside Kennedy in Dallas when the president was assassinated in November 1963 and Connally himself was seriously wounded by the sniper's fire.

The Connally nomination will be submitted to the next congressional session, which starts in January. And in the meantime, Nixon said Connally will be receiving some back grounding on the upcoming federal budget for the next fiscal year.

The President praised Kennedy as having brought stability in international monetary policy. He said the Treasury chief "has served this nation in a selfless, and, in my view an admirable and completely dedicated way."

Nixon's choice of Connally his first Democratic appointment to a regular Cabinet post, was greeted with generally favorable comment by leaders of both parties in Congress.

Connally Returns To Washington

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) - The national administration has changed but some of the problems will be the same when Texas Democrat John B. Connally returns to Washington on Feb. 1, this time as Secretary of the Treasury.

Connally's nomination by President Nixon, Republican, follows a long period of service as friend and political ally to fellow Texan Lyndon B. Johnson, and as secretary of the Navy under President John F. Kennedy. Connally's nomination is subject to confirmation by the Senate.

He is serving, by Nixon's appointment, as a member of the president's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board and the President's advisory council on Executive Reorganization.

Connally - healthy, wealthy and still slim and handsome at 53 - is known in his home state as a man who can talk money and politics with the best of the East Coast magnates. In the state, and to a certain extent nationally, Connally has been recognized as a voice of conservative Democrats, particularly among businessmen.

There were published reports that Connally actually helped Nixon campaign in 1968, but he denied them, saying he supported Democrat Hubert Humphrey.

Connally has worked for and with Johnson most of his adult life, going back to 1937 when, while still a college student, Connally helped Johnson win a job as Texas congressman. He saw Navy duty in World War II, then helped Johnson get elected U.S. senator and joined the LBJ staff again. In 1952 Connally became attorney for the late Sid Richardson, multimillionaire Fort Worth Oil man, and soon had first name friendships with corporation presidents from coast to coast. He unsuccessfully nominated Johnson for president at the 1956 national Democratic convention. Four years later,he managed a nationwide Johnson for president campaign. In 1964 he again nominated Johnson for president at the national convention. In the 1968 convention he successfully led an effort against repudiation of Johnsn's war policy.

Connally was picked to be secretary of the Navy by President elect Kennedy in late 1960.

As secretary of the Navy, Connally built a reputation as an efficient administrator. In his new post, he still will have to contend with red tape. He will be involved in the economic effects of the Vietnam war, a war that was in progress when he was Navy boss.

Connally quit Washington late in 1961 to return to Texas and successfully campaign for governor.

He and Mrs. Connally were riding with President and Mrs. Kennedy on Nov. 22, 1963, when Kennedy was assassinated. Connally was critically wounded and spent many months recuperating. He won re-election in 1964, with one arm still in a sling, and was re-elected to a third term in 1966.

Basketball Great Russell To Speak

One of the most outstanding and intriguing individuals ever to compete within the realm of the American sports world will be featured here at UMass when Bill Russell speaks in the Student Union Ballroom tomorrow at 8 p.m. The Distinguished Visitors Program (D.V.P.) is sponsoring the event.

The 36-year old former Boston Celtic basketball great devotes much of his time these days to giving talks at various colleges and universities across the land. Russell is widely recognized as a socially-conscious man.

He gained his fame first in the basketball arena. In college he was the leader of a University of San Francisco team that twice won the championship of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (N.C.A.A.) This team also won 55 games in a row at one stretch, a record that has yet to be matched.

After college he earned a starting position on the 1956 United States Olympic basketball team and was instrumental in bringing that team an Olympic Gold Medal. His college and Olympic exploits behind him, Russell next faced the challenge of a pro career and responded by playing the most vital role in 11 National Basketball Association (N.B.A.) championships for the Celtics in his 13 years of play.

Over his last three professional basketball seasons, Russell was also the Boston head coach, making him the first black man ever to head-coach an American professional sports team. The Celtics won two N.B.A. titles with Russell as their player-coach.

More can be said about Russell's athletic achievements, but the intriguing side of this guy comes from the valuable insights he has had to offer on the present state of society and the people who make it up.

Russell is a black man who was born poor, yet when he speaks he speaks for and about people in general. He has said, "I should epitomize the American Dream, for I came, against long odds, from the farthest back to the very top of my profession."

He sees no simple solution to the problems of racial discrimination in this nation, but he offers this challenge, "If someone could find a way to make a profit out of better race relationships, it (the racial problem) would be solved in four or five days, or a couple of weeks at the most."

Russell appears to have a tremendous awareness of his own person, and in regards to a role he could play to make the U.S. a better land, he has said, "This is a great, great country--it can be even greater...for this country to be as great as it can be, I would die."

That's part of the man who speaks here at UMass tomorrow.

Quad, Central, OH Dorms Can Open For Vacations

Residence Halls in the Central, Northeast and Orchard Hill areas will be allowed to remain open during vacation periods with the consent of the Area Co-ordinators after the individual dorm meets the following criteria:

1. A written proposal must be submitted to the Area Coordinator, clearly answering the following questions.
   - Who will the responsible individuals be?
   - How will University Police and/or Security be able to identify those residents who are staying during the vacation?
   - How will the building be secured?
   - What was the process by which the House decided to stay open? What safeguards were established for the property of those students that voted against the Residence Hall staying open?
   - Is there a clear policy regarding guests and outsiders?
   - What security is there for dorm valuables?
   - Will the Head of Residence be there during vacation?
   - What provisions have been made for night security?
2. A copy of the proposal, a list of those who are held responsible for the residence hall, and a list of all those staying must be given to the campus police, prior to the vacation period.
3. The dorm must be told of the written proposal and who will be staying.
4. Those who refuse to show an I.D. to campus police and/or security guards will be asked to leave the campus.
5. A list of those who are staying during the vacationmust be posted near the entrance of the dorm.

SWAP Delegates React Favorably

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

Reactions to the SWAP conference held this past weekend in South Lee were generally favorable, according to an MDC survey taken among participants.

Both organizers of the conference and those who attended on the whole felt that the weekend was well planned and the study material well prepared.

Putnam Barber, faculty advisor to SWAP, said that one reason the conference was a success was because people did things twice. He said that the back up people prepared for contingencies that never turned up.

Consisting of study groups which prepared questions prior to the weekend, general study groups and expertise groups at the conference, and final proposals offered to a panel discussion group, the format was considered effective, said Sheila McRevey, assistant co-ordinator of student activities. She added that the discussion approach worked well after some initial distrust among the participants. It was her opinion that had there been more time, the "experts" in the groups could have been more carefully assigned.

Dr. Dean Alfange, Jr. of the Government department said that the informal situation was important to the SWAP approach. To meet with faculty, students, and administration in a more social atmosphere made the participants more susceptible to a community feeling and more receptive in dealing with different problems and their possible solutions, he said.

It was good not to limit the discussion to knowledgeable people, Alfange said, because with the study groups everybody contributed and the result was communication and expression of a maximum number of points.

He added that the dialogue established among the people present was important, even if nothing is done to follow up the conference.

In agreement with that feeling, Betty Pugh, co-chairman of the SWAP committee and President of the SUG Board, said that the most important thing that happened at SWAP was the interaction qith people. She commented on the interest and attendance of members of the Board of Trustees and several legislators, also.

President of the class of '72, Juli Ierardi, said that she felt the legislators and administrators were important to the conference. However she suggested that the wrong people went to SWAP; that the participants were the same figures who have been talking and working with these problems for years, and perhaps the same topics are being brought up year after year.

Most other participants agreed that new ideas were suggested, however. Among the issues most likely to be effected could be the extension of course evaluation to university-wide level, the permanent recording of extra curricular activities, and the establishment of associate provost positions, one participant projected.

Mark Silverman, Managing Editor of the Daily Collegian, said that the chances for further action on the proposals are higher this year than in previous years., He explained that the continuation committee formed at the conference is the first provision of its kind.

"This particular SWAP conference has taken a lot of measures to insure that its proposals are acted upon than any previous conference and because of this it seems that this conference will accomplish more than its predecessors," he said.

He continued that nobody can argue against the increased communication between all groups in the University, but he warned not to be overly optimistic about the two and a half days of meetings. People must be prodded to act on the recommendations made, he concluded.

Faculty advisor concerning continuity, Al Kamil of the Psychology department, said that the people on the committee would think very carefully over the proposals resulting from the conference and then order priorities among them. He said that the representatives to the continuity committee, one from each expertise and study group, will assure that work is continued after the conference.

"The continuation program is important,", Kamil said, " because such endeavors as SWAP tend to make one come out feeling good about the things that are wrong, but less likely to do anything about the problems because all the tensions are released."

Implementation of the proposals must come about through the efforts of the people involved in the conference, said Dick Palomba, co-chairman of the SWAP committee. He said that they are the ones who know the rationale behind the arguments for the proposals. He implied that the group will almost act as lobbyists to bring about change in the University.

Over-all concensus on the organization of the weekend was the credit of the SWAP committee. Putnam Barber commended the phenomenal Resource and Research booklet compiled by Judy Gill and Dick Story, with the assistance of Rob Brooks and Carol Fill. Sheila McRevey praised the committee for its success in terms of productivity, planning and content.

Betty Pugh summed up the feelings of all those consulted when she said: "The warm feeling resulting from the interaction and planning together on the part of administrators, faculty and students was well worth the hours of effort contributed by many individuals. The biggest thing now is not to stop acting as the SWAP committee but to keep informed and expand the ideas."

It will be difficult to reach a concrete outcome until the proposals are opened up to the entire University but this is what the continuation committee intends to do, she concluded.

Women's Lib Teach-In Termed Successful

By JANE MITCHELL
Staff Reporter

An 83-year old suffragist from Boston spoke at the UMass Women's Liberation Teach-In this weekend and, in so doing, tied together five generations of woman's continuing struggle for liberation.

Florence Luscomb, wearing an SMC anti-war button, spoke briefly on the women's fight for the vote, and told of attending her first suffrage meeting with her mother at the age of 5 to hear Susan B. Anthony. She put her confidence in us, the fifth generation of women fighting for their liberation, to successfully end the struggle.

Florence Luscomb was the feature speaker at the all-night women's conference held this past Saturday. The Teach-In opened when 100 people gathered to hear a panel presented by five women from the UMass community. Each panelist related to a different aspect of the women's liberation movement in terms of smashing a prevalent myth.

Claire Moriarty chaired the panel; Eileen Wilkinson addressed herself to the myth that all women must marry and produce 2.4 children; Suzanne Mitchell commented on the media myth of the Holywood/Madison Avenue/Glamour Image; Paula Ross spoke about the necessity for Black and 3rd World sisters to become liberated as women; and Jane Roland talked on the myth that Women's Liberation is an apolitical movement.

In an effort to present the different aspects of the women's movement, a karate demonstration and a women's rock band were presented. The karate demonstration was performed by two UMass women, history graduate students and green belts in Formosan style karate. It was explained that self-defense training explodes the myth that women are incapable of defending themselves.

The New Haven Women's Liberation Rock Band played before an energetic and enthusiastic audience in the Student Union Ballroom. They played many of their own songs, with some of their own lyrics, (for example, "How're you going to keep us down anymore, now that we know your game...."). As one woman commented, "It was so good to see women playing in a band, especially writing their own songs. Most rock lyrics you can't even call chauvinist -- they're out-and-out misogynist."

Over 15 workshops were held in the course of the day and night, attended by women from areas including Vermont, Springfield, and New Hampshire. Some of the workshop topics were: "The Feminine Image", "International Women Struggles", "Black and Third World Women", "Gay Liberation", "Childbirth and Pregnancy", and "Is Feminism Revolutionary?" Throughout the Teach-In free child care was available, and in the early morning hours there were poetry readings, a movie, and music. Nancy Rice and several other women read their own poetic works. A health food breakfast, prepared by The Noodle, ended the Teach-In.

As one of the women concluded, "We met together as women to realize our strength in unity. In this, the conference was very successful."

P.S. All women are encouraged to attend this Wednesday's 6:00 p.m. meeting in the Campus Center (room number to be posted at CC elevators).

In The Nation And The World

House Bans Obstruction of 'Radical' Blacklist

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House formally slapped a ban Monday against the courts or anyone else from obstructing printing and public distribution of its revised report on 57 alleged campus "radical orators."

The House resolution prohibiting court or any other action against a House Internal Security Committee report, a substitute for one which was enjoined from official public distribution by a federal judge, was passed 302 to 54.

An effort to kill the resolution was defeated 301 to 55.

Chairman Richard H. Ichord, D-Mo.), accused U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell of supressing a legislative report for the first time in English and American history and called on the House to "assert and defend" Congress' power over its own business.

"I have never considered this report to be of earthshaking significance," Ichord told the House. "But the decision of Judge Gesell is one of earthshaking significance."

Rep. Abner J. Mikva, (D-Ill.), said the action could force a "disastrous" confrontation between the courts and Congress - with each trying to force its own powers - that he said "statesmen have been trying to avoid for 200 years."

But Ichord said the purpose of issuing a new report on campus speakers rather than seeking the House ban against court interference with the original report was to avoid just such an action.

He said Judge Gesell, who called the original report an unconstitutional "blacklist" of the speakers and prohibited its official distribution, refused last week to extend that prohibition to the new report.

The motion to kill Ichord's resolution was made by Rep. Louis Stokes (D-Ohio), a member of Ichord's committee.

Stokes said the purpose of the report was to "stultify campus discussion."

The resolution orders the U.S. public printer and House superintendent of documents to print and distribut the report and prohibits anyone from any act that "restrains, delays, interferes with, obstructs or prevents" that work.

It does not name the courts but carries a provision that copies of the resolution be delivered to Gesell's and other courts.

The report identifies the 57 campus speakers as members or supporters of militant, revolutionary or Communist organizations. It says the $102,668 paid them for 142 campus speeches indicates the campus speaking circuit is a significant revenue source for promoters of revolutionary and disorderly activities.

Auto Insurance Rates Ordered Increased

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Supreme Court Monday ruled that 1970 auto insurance rates are "confiscatory and unlawful" and ordered them increased by $13 million.

Insurance Commissioner C. Eugene Farnam was reported in Chicago attending a national conference, and was not available for comment immediately.

The high court in its ruling ordered Farnam to "forthwith fix and establish fair and reasonable" rates that will be retroactive to Jan. 1.

The ruling ordered the commissioner in setting rates not to adhere to the 1968 law that ordered the rates on compulsory insurance coverage frozen at 1967 levels.

The decision was in a suit filed by 46 insurance firms. A spokesman for the companies said he doubted if the higher rates could be assessed.

The Supreme Court ruling said he doubted if the higher rates could be assessed.

The Supreme Court ruling said, "If compulsory insurance rates for 1970 remained the same as they were in 1967, the plaintiffs would sustain an estimated aggregate underwriting loss of $13,205,600."

A spokesman for the insurance industry said it is doubtful that the companies will "go after any additional premiums" for 1970.

The spokesman said it would "cost a lot of money to collect the increases," and even if they were to be collected, the companies must wait for the insurance commissioner to set rates.

He said it would be "impractical to go after any retroactive increases."

Scientists To Become City Experts

HUD Plans Nearly Done

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Department of Housing and Urban Development is in the final stages of planning a campaign to train and place thousands of unemployed scientists as urban affairs specialists in local and state government.

The aim is to fill an existing shortage of urban experts from the expanding pool of scientists left jobless by federal research cuts, financial troubles of many universities and slashes in space and defense spending.

A HUD spokesman said Monday final plans for the program should be complete in the next few weeks. There are strong indications it will receive speedy White House approval, administration sources said.

The government would use money from existing programs for special college courses and on the job training for as many as 20,000 of an estimated jobless 45,000 scientists, the spokesman said.

It is believed that a physicist, for example, can receive additional training in a relatively short time as an urban planner or systems analyst. He then would be matched on a three year contract with the city needing such a specialist.

Model Cities branch of HUD has been successful with one small pilot program attempting the conversion of scientists for employment in its Washington office, the spokesman said.

Cities which require specialists for planning and operating urban renewal in Model Cities programs often appoint consulting firms rather than fulltime employees.

At present they have no money for extensive recruitment or on job training of scientists for the new disciplines.

The program would begin with several thousand scientists in such hard hit areas as Boston, Wichita, Kan., and Los Angeles and cost less than $5 million initially, a HUD official estimated.

Such retraining for scientists would be the Nixon administration's first such a step in carrying out its promise to plan a smooth transition between wartime economy and a peacetime one.

The scientists would be paid on some still undetermined scale while being retrained. Their salaries later would be paid by the governmental units hiring them.

My Lai GIs Psyched For Destruction

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP) - GI veterans of My Lai testified at Lt. William Calley Jr.'s court martial Monday that his superior officer primed them emotionally to level the Vietnamese village and destroy everything within it.

"To me that meant women and children and everything else," said Elmer Haywood, Baytown, Tex. "Viet Cong sympathizers can be any of these. My impression was that they were all to be killed."

But, like others who testified in a similar vein, Haywood said he couldn't recall any specific orders to kill women and children. And like the others, too, he claimed he didn't kill any civilians, despite the purported tenor of a briefing by his company commander, Capt. Ernest Medina.

"I didn't have any reason to," said the tall, lanky Haywood. "I just turned them over to someone else and let them decide what to do with them. They wasn't doing anything to me."

Calley, 27, who was one of Medina's platoon leaders, is accused of the premeditated murder of 102 unresisting villagers during a March 16, 1968 infantry assault on My Lai. The maximum penalty on conviction is death. One facet of his defense is that he only followed orders during the operation.

The witnesses said Medina briefed Charlie Company on the eve of the search and destroy mission. The captain currently is undergoing the military equivalent of a grand jury inquiry into his own actions at My Lai.

"Destroy - that was the word," said a former member of the company, Gene Oliver Jr., 24, Cincinnati, Ohio. "We were supposed to level that place....."

"I remember a statement being made that if there was one hot round fired, we were supposed to do away with it, level it. Medina said there were to be no civilians there at all."

Oliver, with blond hair and a small mustache, was making a return appearance as a witness at the court martial. He testified earlier for the prosecution during a phase when the government merely sought to establish the location and condition of civilian bodies found in the village.

Dynamite Chicken Backfires

By BOB NESTI and DON GLICKSTEIN
Fine Arts Staff

Dynamite Chicken is a disgrace to the American poultry industry, the movie industry, and insults the intelligence of any person over the age of four.

As advertised, the movie would seem to be in the style of Monterey Pop or Woodstock. But this advertising is blatantly misleading, for in reality, Dynamite Chicken is a trite montage of every radical cliche in America today.

The advertising posters list many controversial and popular figures leading to the assumption that they are in the film – one way or another. Well, they are. You hear about two minutes of Jimi Hendrix' "Foxey Lady". An anonymous voice reads one poem of Leonard Cohen's while the camera is focused on the album cover of his second record. Al Kooper is given twenty seconds in a recording studio. Lenny Bruce's memory is desecrated through an over-dubbed, over-done parody of Bruce's LBJ monologue from the Berkeley concert.

However, there is stinging social commentary in the film. The camera subtly pans from middle America's Burger King to starving children in Biafra. It skillfully shows the relationship between Nixon and Agnew and dying, bloodied soldiers in Vietnam.

And those tits! Never has so much been offered by so many to titillate so few. "Does she or doesn't she?" The audience sure knows as they are bored, but not stiff, by the endless succession of bottomless crotches.

The Campus Center Program Council was kind enough to give us a private showing of the film, for which we thank them. Originally, no review of the film was planned, but upon seriously considering the deceptive advertisements, we feel that it is an obligation to warn the University community about this chicken movie without a head.

Muskie Stumps In Mo., Confers With Truman

KANSAS CITY (AP) - Sen. Edmund Muskie, (D—Maine), testing Missouri's political climate for a possible presidential bid in 1972, dropped in for a chat with former President Harry S. Truman Monday.

Earlier, Muskie strongly hinted to party members at a breakfast in Kansas City he would be a contender for the presidential nomination.

At the Truman home in suburban Independence, Mo., Muskie said he and the former president discussed the Middle East and politics and spent part of the 40 minute visit reminiscing.

"It's always a pleasure to be with Mr. Truman because he is so warm, so interested and interesting," Muskie said. He described the 86 year old Truman as looking very well and most alert.

This was Muskie's third visit to the Truman home. He related two pieces of advice given him previously by the former president: Always tell the truth and be yourself.

In response to one of those at the breakfast who said he hoped to be a delegate to the 1972 convention, the senator said, "If you are, I'll be on your back."

He told his hosts the U.S. Senate vote denying additional funds for the Super Sonic Transport program should be viewed as a symbolic shift in national priorities rather than as an economy move.

Muskie predicted a restructuring of national priorities with more emphasis on domestic and national problems. He said he and Hubert Humphrey who returns to the U.S. Senate in January, have detected a negativism throughout the country in their travels.

President Nixon's failure to publicly regard control of the economy early in his administration, Muskie said, has been viewed by labor and management as license to seek higher wages and prices.

Muskie arrived in Kansas City Sunday to receive the fifth Harry S. Truman award at a meeting of the Israel Bond Organization.

In accepting the award, he announced he will visit Israel next month. He gave no details of the trip.

He said: "Israel's right to live as a free and independent democracy must be affirmed. The United States must provide whatever material aid is required for Israel's protection and substance."

Senate Denies Raise For Assistants

WASHINGTON (AP) - Members of the U.S. Senate, who give themselves a $12,500 pay raise two years ago, decided Monday it would be too inflationary to give their top assistants a $2,300 a year boost.

By a vote of 51 to 33 the Senate struck out of a $2 billion catchall appropriations bill a provision that would have allowed senators to pay one person on their staffs up to $35,496.

The current ceiling is $33,176.

Sen. John Williams, (R-Del.), who sponsored the amendment to eliminate the pay raise clause, said that members of Congress had made a "tragic mistake" by raising their own salaries to $42,500 in 1968.

Williams said the salaries of administrative assistants had risen almost $10,000 since 1967.

Sen. George Aiken, (R-Vt.), agreed with Williams and suggested that members of Congress ought to take a 10 percent pay cut.

N.E. Lagging On Pollution Spending

WATERVILLE, (AP) - A federal air pollution control official said Monday the New England states are a long way from "spending enough money to run good air pollution control agencies."

"Fifty to 70 cents per capita is necessary to finance effective air pollution abatement agencies," said Donald Goodwin, director of the division of control agency development for the National Air Pollution Control Administration in Durham, N.C.

However, he told the New England Legislative Conference on Air Pollution that Maine is spending just eight cents per capita; Hampshire, 10 cents; Vermont, 18 cents; Massachusetts, 19 cents; Rhode Island, 18 cents; and Connecticut, 34.

Goodwin said further that "state and local control programs need a budget of $14,000 $16,000 per employe to operate effectively."

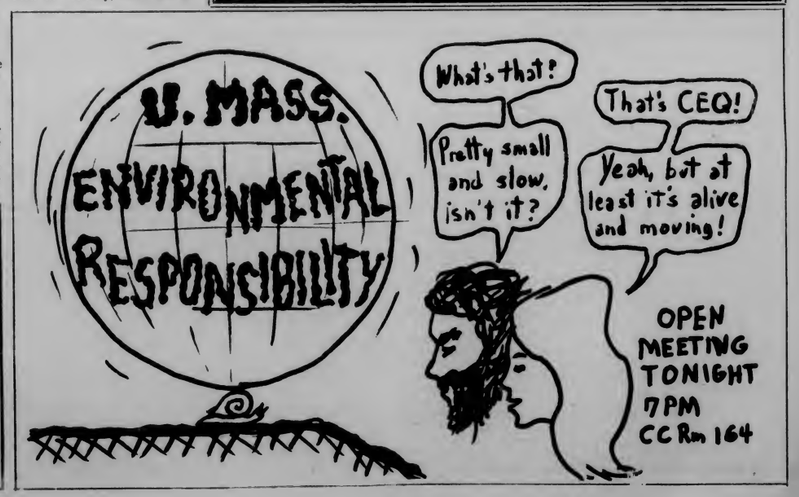
Louis J. Poulx Jr., chief of the air pollution control section of the Connecticut Department of Public Health and chairman of the New England Staff for Coordinate Air Use Management, told the group:

"Air pollution is a condition which knows no boundaries.....and I don't think the solution can be found on a widespread basis.

"I feel the intrastate rather than interstate approach is best, with the exception of some cities like' New York, "Proulx continued.

During the morning session, the legislators were advised that the federal government may be moving to toally prempt state and local government standards on air pollution abatement.

Dr. Joseph G. Zimmerman, with the graduate school of public affairs of the State University of New York at Albany, said two indications the federal government is headed in this direction are the national Air Quality Act of 1967 and the Air Quality Standards Act of 1970.



"If state and local governments fail to solve their air pollution problems," he said, "it is reasonable to anticipate that a future Congress will authorize the creation of federal regional air quality commissions with power to establish emissions levels."

Krishna Devotees To Meet

The Enemy Cow

WASHINGTON--I have no intention of passing judgment on Lt. Calley before his courtmartial is concluded. But when I read that one of his defense attorneys said that Calley had been ordered to kill "everything" in My Lai including livestock and "every living thing" I became intrigued. So I sought out a friend of mine at the Pentagon, and said:

"Look, why would anyone be ordered to kill livestock?"

"Those were Viet Cong cows," my friend said defensively. "We knew for a fact that the cows at My Lai had given milk to Viet Cong soldiers. Those cows can't claim they didn't know what they were doing."

"But maybe they had no choice," I protested.

"Two weeks before we went into My Lai, we sent helicopters with loudspeakers over the area, warning everyone to get out. Those cows heard us, and they refused to leave. Therefore, we concluded that the cows were sympathetic to the Communist cause."

"What about the chickens and the pigs?"

"The same thing goes for them. Our intelligence revealed that the chickens had been laying eggs for the Viet Cong for years. They were red hens."

"What about the pigs?"

"The pigs were worse than the chickens. When we went into the village, we found warm pork still cooking in the pots in some of the huts."

"The only way Charlie could have got that pork was from My Lai pigs. When our men realized where the pork was coming from, they went berserk and decided to shoot every pig in sight."

"But the ducks. Why were they ordered to kill the ducks? They weren't even from My Lai."

"In a war, innocent livestock have to be killed. You can't say to men going into battle, 'Kill the cows, kill the chickens, kill the pigs, but don't shoot at the ducks.' "

"It seems like such a waste of food."

"You people sitting back here in you comfortable offices in Washington can say you should kill this or you shouldn't kill that, but when you're out in the field, it's different, you don't have time to ask 'Is this a good cow or a bad cow? Is this chicken a local chicken or was he brought down from the north to feed Charlie? And that innocent-looking pig walking across the road. What is he really thinking?' "

"Then what you're saying is the only good cow is a dead cow?" I said.

"You could sum it up that way. When we go into a village, we assume everything on legs is working for Hanoi. Sure you make mistakes. But it's still better to err than to let a chicken get away and come back to haunt you on another day."

"I imagine you can't spare dogs either," I said.

"When we say every living thing, we mean every living thing. If you make exceptions, the example will be lost on the Viet Cong. The one lesson we've learned from Nam is to let every living thing know that if it helps the enemy, someone is going to pay for it. I'm sure after My Lai that the cows in other villages are going to think twice before they give milk to Charlie."

Red Garter Room

Sometime in 1974, I may be ready to hear another banjo. Until that future date, however, I feel confident that the dose applied this weekend will be more than sufficient.

The Red Garter Room at the Oak N' Spruce Lodge in South Lee was the scene of a large part of SWAP 1970, but what went on there will not be reported on by anyone. As its name implies, the Red Garter Room is the bar. They have waiters in striped vests, banjo music, and framed photographs of the thirtieth President, along with campaign stickers urging America to keep cool with Cal. I guess that's what's known as atmosphere. On Friday and Saturday nights, most of the people attending the conference repaired to the Red Garter Room for a little livation. Say what you will about the American's ability to enjoy himself as it relates to the consumption of alcoholic beverages, but we had a great time in the barroom. I don't think I would have been as relaxed talking to the Chairman of the Board of Trustees if I was totalling tea.

Getting to know people varies from easy to difficult depending on the situation. All weekend long we were being introduced to new people, many of whom were meeting across the Line of Geriatric Demarcation. It could have been awkward, but most everyone was relaxed; in the Red Garter Room, a good time was had by all.

Among the others things I learned there, is one tidbit that I should pass along to the Residents of Patterson House. If you don't know your head of Residence personally, you should meet her. She's great. But if you have a boyfriend who likes to dance, don't introduce him to Dot Burke. You may have a hard time holding him.

One conversation I had this weekend that did not take place in the barroom should be of interest to those who feel the University is getting, or already is, too big. Joseph Healey, the Chairman of the Board of Trustees, is opposed to the proposed increase to 30,000 students. He feels we should look elsewhere for the extra spaces which the future will require. If he has his way, "Thirty Thousand Redmen" will never become an actuality.

I would also like to add the Betty Pugh is one of the all-time great people. She was tremendous all weekend. Lastly I would like to thank everyone who bought me drinks. I appreciated them. Peace.

T.V. Ground Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) - Nicholas Johnson, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, urged Sunday that all political candidates be given free television time, equally apportioned.

Delving into one of his favorite themes - the power of television in politics - Johnson reviewed in detail the use of television by President Nixon, "the most current example we have."

"We need ground rules," Johnson concluded, "as to when the President can command TV time ... when the opposition party is entitled to reply ... on television advertising...."

As for political campaigning, Johnson proposed these five ground rules:

— "Television time should be made available free to all candidates for public office.

Forbid Short Segments

- "This time should be equally apportioned among all major party candidates, and made available to others based upon the votes received in prior elections or the number of signatures on petitions.

- "The purchase of any additional political time on television should be prohibited.

- "Candidates should be forbidden to use time in less than give minute segments.

- "When political propaganda films and advertising techniques are used, such presentations should be followed immediately by time during which the candidate is shown by the station in a setting over which he has no control, such as a debate, press conference, or news interview."

My Best Friend Is . . .

Since time immemorial, by virtue of its minority status and non-conformity, World Jewry has been the most convenient scapegoat of mass discontent. The most vulgar manifestations of this anti-Jewish attitude, such as the programs, Inquisitions, massacres, gas chambers and attempts to throw the Jews "into the sea," have been ugly bloodstains on the history books. Apart from the historical bloodshed, this anti-Jewish sentiment also takes the form of viscious propaganda, both blatant and subtle. The blatant propaganda, which is easy to identify, usually attempts to incorporate Judaism into some sort of international conspiracy, whether it be the international Communist conspiracy, the international Zionist conspiracy, the international Finance conspiracy, World Imperialism etc. Such notorious characters as Julius Streicher, Father Coughlin, and Gerald L.K. Smith were artists at this type of racist slander.

Today, however, the most prevalent form of anti-Jewish propaganda is more subtle and sophisticated, and is therefore harder to identify. This new type of slander rarely makes direct reference to Judaism or Jews, but seeks to superimpose the connotation "Zionist" in place of direct references to Jews. Zionism, which is a philosophy of Jewish self determination which led to the establishment of the independent State of Israel as a Jewish homeland, is denounced by the anti-Jewish propagandists as being racist, imperialist, reactionary, colonialist, expansionist, bourgeois nationalist, fascist, exclusionist (they have used every name in the book, and more) and is made synonymous with the devil. When a Jew is put on trial in the Soviet Union, for the crime of requesting an emigration visa, he is villified in the official press as being in collusion with international Zionism. The Black Panthers, in their weekly newspaper, often refer to prominent American Jews as "Kosher Nationalists" and "Running dogs of Imperialism." The anti-Israel propagandists have long since abandoned the rhetoric which called for driving the Jews into the sea, but now refer to the Israeli Jews as Zionists, and reassure us that they only want to destroy Zionism, since "some of their best friends are Jews." Any favorable remarks about the State of Israel (and if one visits Israel one will find it difficult not to remark favorably) are denounced as racist and Zionist. Zionism is the charge against any Jew who refuses to conform to a non-Jewish environment. But the propagandists are clever to disguise their anti-Jewish prejudices by referring only to Zionism.

This new, subtle manifestation of anti-Jewish propaganda, which seeks to villify Jews indirectly by denouncing and falsifing the true nature of the Zionist philosophy and the State of Israel, should be identified for what it is: a sophisticated and well contrived alteration of one of history's most primitive and reactionary prejudices.

Crackpot Realism

To the editor:

Letters and articles in the Collegian have contained some negative responses to the guerrilla theatre representations against Rockefeller and to the rejection of the $25,000 seed money he offered for research on some social problem in the Five College area. Guerrilla theatre is directed not to those who are oppressors but to the oppressed, in order to build a sense of common community and an awareness of the oppressive operations of those in control of the economy. Rather than allow Rockefeller to be just another speaker, we wished to present him as an example of the way modern corporate businesses cause social and economic problems while striving to appear socially responsible and interested in curing them. This was the point of this skit which the Collegian columnist apparently missed but the rest of the audience did not.

Doris Abramson suggests indirectly in a letter that rejecting Rockefeller's money is unrealistic, by comparing it to the action of Major Barbara in Shaw's play of that name who at first rejects charity for the Salvation Army from munitions and liquor dealers and then is forced to accept it. Prof. Abramson has missed the point, however. The Rockefeller money is not rejected because it is dirty money but because it is explicitly co-optive money. Rockefeller offered it in his speech as a way to show youth and businessmen can work together, and that the system can answer the criticisms of radicals. This is a political act which aims to deny the importance of the structural criticisms of corporate capitalism that radicals are offering. Taking the money is not simply taking dirty money, it is taking a bribe to shut up. It's as if Major Barbara were to renounce her faith in God in return for money to the poor. If one believes that major social problems can never be controlled until there is some structural change in the system, then giving up this money (a mere pittance compared to what is needed) may be the only reasonable way to build up the sort of awareness that can solve social problems in the long run. Part of the problem with much of our present thinking on domestic and foreign policy is that it is "crackpot realism" (as C. Wright Mills called it); that is, it assumes one should take the certain immediate profits even if the result may be long range disaster. Accepting Rockefeller's pittance and the general line of dealing with social problems it suggests seems to me a good example of crackpot realism.

The Hour Is Now

Dear Editor:

People exhibit indifference towards the destruction of our environment. Most students have the concern, according to surveys, but no action results. True, its not close or immediate like the activities tax or dorm policies, but it is so basic, you'd think students and academicians, if no one else, would be concerned about the world we're living in. Even now, you can't go out and catch fish without wondering if they are safe to eat--mercury. And fowl, how safe are they, with DDT, or PVC, or something not yet recognized as harmful. The world is becoming dangerous to man--for man is fouling it.

The recent Sente vote against the SST was great, but the fight has barely begun. National priorities result from such decisions. We should write our Senators, now, on the SST. Remember, public policy should be determined by the public, not the technologist.

Our children may never know a clear, free flowing river. If we don't do something today, we'll have dammed, heated, open sewers--the Connecticut isn't far from that today. The Army Corps of Engineers is planning to regulate the river by computer--shouldn't we be glad for such "improvements" on nature? Forget ecological considerations, it is feasable, so let's do it. Again, who should decide, the engineer or the public?

Sometime early in '71, fuel will be loaded into the Vernon Vermont nuclear reactor, just up river, to provide us with "cheap" invisable pollution. Beyond the chemical mess we are making of our life support system, now progress enables us to dump radioactive wastes into our air and rivers, that's what the Vernon reactor will be doing. Since the Atomic Energy Commission is promoting this, it is advisable to be indignant to your elected state and federal officials.

It is strange, monthly alarms about this, or that environmental depredation, with little or no public outcry over our increasingly fouled world.

Do you plan on living long?

Act! The need is great, the hour late, but all too few are fighting.

Get It Straight

Sir:

The Collegian has done it again. The article on Professor Best's lecture, "American Economics, Imperialism, Examined by 11th Hour Lecturer," MDC December 14, is appalling and a gross misrepresentation of the facts. Its author has attempted to write on a topic he knows absolutely nothing about; much worse, he has not only taken quotes by the lecturer out of context but even managed to garble the majority of them. For the purpose of illustration: "Fifty billion dollars of military aid is sent to Europe each year by the U.S. This is the most horrifying aspect. It is militarization of underdeveloped countries under the name of anti-Communism, Best claims." The fact is that most European countries are not regarded as underdeveloped; actually, many of them give economic and military aid of their own. Also, of the federal budget in 1969 of 180 billion dollars, total defense spending amounted to 80 billion. But apart from all this, the author neglected to stress the main points Professor Best was trying to put across to his audience.

We suggest to the writer of the article, and as a matter of fact to anyone else interested in a good treatment of the subject, to take Best's course on Latin American economic development to be offered by the Economic Department this Spring.

Murphy's Law

To the Editor:

Mr. Collier's research on the subject of flat tires was admirably summarized in his five point theory and its corollaries. (MDC 12/7/70). But he only touches on one small facet of a much more general law so far reaching in its consequences that the Collier Theory must, contrasted with it, become merely the Collier Corollaries.

I refer, of course, to Murphy's Law. First published some years ago in a noted engineering journal, Murphy's Law states (and at this I'm sure Mr. Collier will see the truth of my earlier comment). "IF ANYTHING CAN GO WRONG, IT WILL." Murphy, whose genius found daily occupation as an engineer, drew several corollaries from his field: 1) Parts will arrive with a speed inversely proportional to the need for those parts. 2) Units of measurement will always be expressed in their most unusable terms, i.e. Furlongs per fortnight. 3) (more generally) If an honest attempt is made to illustrate Murphy's law, it will not work.

Several others have published research in this area, notably C. Northcote Parkinson who, in a volume modestly titled Parkinson's Law (Houghton Mifflin Co. and Ballantine paperback), states: "Work expands to fill the time available for its completion." Who has not felt the power of Parkinson's Law the night before the term paper is due, and it is still being written. Of particular interest in the book is a chapter on ".....the Coefficient of Inefficiency".

A recent addition to this collection of works is "The Peter Principle" which made the best sellers list. It states: "A man will rise in an organization until he attains his own level of incompetency." Rephrased, "As long as you do the job well, they'll give you a harder one. When you reach a point where you start messing things up, you stay there." Corollary: "Work is accomplished by those who have not yet reached their own level of incompetency."

All of the above to perhaps give Mr. Collier, indeed any of us, something to meditate on the next time the task of changing a flat tire in the rain looks like it will take all the time available to it.

Progress?

To the Editor:

Hidden Fineline, co-ordinate of the Studen Groove Committee, spoke to an overflow crowd of fifteen in the Campus Center on the results of last Spring's "BlowOut".

He emphasized disillusionment of the oppressed workers with the mess they had to clean up when the move to end their oppression left the campus for the surf swept beaches of the country. The administration, it was noted, stayed hidden in the Whitmore Bunker. Their clever ploy of sending a man in an Oz Tippo suit to appear at teach-ins and meetings throughout the state apparently fooled no one.

The entire University was run by the democratically elected "BlowOut" committee chosen late one night at Yale. Some ten to twelve thousand students got into the movement by going home early to radicalize their parents.

This effective use of student power prevented anyone from flunking out, thereby striking a blow at the economic system, since for the first time everyone got all the credits they payed for way back in January.

Fineline suggested that an April 24 peace rally could be turned into another "BlowOut". In fact a "BlowOut" should be held every spring, after all once the basketball season ends what else does college offer?

New Teacher Training Method Proves To Be Successful

By R. RAINSFORD
Staff Reporter

An experiment in a radical form of art education for pre-school children has been claimed a success by the School of Home Economics. Under the guidance of Larry Frates, aesthetics consultant for the School of Education, Intern Teachers of the Human Development Nursery School have been attending retraining workshops concentrating upon a multi-media approach to the arts coupled with a reappraisal of the traditional 'methods' system.

"There has been too heavy an emphasis upon a child's creating products," Mr. Frates said in an interview today, "And not enough focus upon his productive thinking. It is, after all, the process of thinking that educators strive to develop. Too many schools for young children are paper-bunny-rabbit factories." Working on the hypothesis that art is easy and natural for the pre-schooler, Mr. Frates believes that healthy artistic impulses are repressed by artificial subdivision of aesthetic experiences into painting, sculpture, dance and music.

In the workshops he has encouraged teachers to allow their children the freedom to move easily from one art form to another without guilt. Using a theme suggested by the supervisor, the children accept responsibilities among themselves for carrying out aspects of the theme. Mr. Frates pointed out that children consistently resist accepting such responsibility if delegated by the supervisor. "It's a question of identity," he said, "A child seeks his identity, but he will only accept his own findings in understanding himself. He resents a teacher who imposes activity upon him." Referring to a recent workshop session, he told of a group of interns who were exploring one of paper media used frequently by the children. "it was amazing," he said, "when their activities were highly structured, they sat at the tables awkward, uncomfortable and admittedly rebellious. But as soon as they were free to do as they pleased with the materials, they found themselves sitting on the floor like little children happy as birds. It words for adults just as much as for toddlers."

The Nursery School has an observation booth with one-way glass windows so that the children may be watched at play without their being aware of it. The system can be seen at work with its remarkable results: At the suggested theme "Parade" by the supervisor, some of the children began making paper hats and uniforms, others creating animals, organizing a band and acrobatic displays. The latter produced interesting shadows on the walls and without hesitation the children began imitating animal shapes in these shadows. They outlined the shadows and made a game out of trying to fit back into the outlines. All of these activities, Mr. Frates noted, are normally difficult to encourage in children and yet are of major importance as a foundation for later healthy social integration with others.

Intern Teachers of the Human Development Nursery School are subjected to some of their own medicine in a recent art workshop stressing new teaching methods conducted by Larry Frates.

Many of the children are of non-WASP backgrounds and he said that they interact "beautifully" together. The only difference in behavior, he stated, was that in drawing and sculpture Oriental children consistently employ the occult oriental balance while Western children use the traditional European forms.

Janet Andrews, one of the interns, said that the workshop sessions had formed a new attitude in her towards art as being more than just paper and paint. Her co-worker Susan Connors found the concept of the multi-arts approach "exciting and filled with practical applications." Helen Raff, also a student teacher, stated that the workshops clarified the needs of children towards their creative activities rather than superimposing upon them the unrelated needs of adults.

Mr. Frates' method will be demonstrated at work in a motion picture shown at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, Dec. 16, in the Laboratory School at Skinner Hall. The public is invited.

Ed School Program To Be Cited On TV

The Teacher Corps project at the School of Education has been chosen as the subject of a special TV program as an outstanding Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) educational program.

The program, "You and the Real Africa," was produced by station WRC—TV in Washington, D.C., and is being made available to interested TV stations and others through the station and through the Educational Television Service of Bloomington, Ind. Its subject is the model African studies curriculum being developed by UMass in the Worcester Public Schools with Teacher Corps support.

Teacher Corps is a national public school teacher training program of NEW. A unique feature of the UMass Teacher Corps program is that all 25 Teacher Corps interns and five team leaders are former Peace Corps volunteers who have worked in Africa.

They are doing inservice teaching in grades kindergarten through 12 in Worcester schools "integrating Africa into the regular curriculum," in the words of Cynthia Shepard who directs the project for the UMass Center for International Education.

African materials are used in the teaching of humanities and social studies, "We've tried to put Africa into the regular program of studies to clear up some of the misconceptions and stereotypes," Mrs. Shepard explained.

"This is not a program of identity for black students," she added, "it's an academic study of a continent of people that has been neglected. What we're saying is that white children need to be taught about Africa as well as black ones."

The UMass interns will continue working in the Worcester schools until January; then they are scheduled to break up into six-member teams and work until June in an externship program in a number of school systems.

Two teams are slated to go to Florida and work in newly desegregated school systems, using the African studies approach to improve human relations. Another team will go to Boston to teach African studies to black students. Two will remain in Worcester, one to form a team teaching unit for sixth graders and the other to do teacher training in African studies.

The interns will finish the two-year training program in June and will receive master's degrees in teaching from the School of Education.

Nixon To Turn On Tree

WASHINGTON (AP)—When President Nixon turns on the lights of the national Christmas tree Wednesday, A.L. Hart will be watching on television like millions of other Americans.

Hart, an illuminating engineer from Cleveland, Ohio, designed and supervised the lighting and has done the job for the national tree behind the White House for eight years.

"It means sitting down some June or July to start planning," he said in an interview.

How does he decide each year on the design?

"Whim, I think more than anything else; I have the sole responsibility," he said. "Actually I have only a certain number of colors to work with - blue, green, red, yellow, white and clear."

This year the national tree, a 78 foot white spruce from South Dakota, has almost 6,000 lights, including 2,500 green ones, 2,500 blue ones and 900 yellow twinkle lights.

The 57 smaller, 12 foot trees nearby representing the states and territories will have red lights with yellow twinkle lights, too.

In all, there will be almost 15,000 lights on all the trees, plus a special top ornament, all donated by the General Electric Co. for whom Hart works.

Hart designs a new top ornament each year. This year it's a teardrop shaped wire sculpture enclosing a 250 watt lamp.

Last year the color scheme for the lighting was red and white. One year, in 1967, it was big blue lights, with white and red lights strung around like a popcorn string; in 1964 it was all red.

"I'm real pleased with the spruce this year," Hart said. "It has a real nice shape, but most of the national trees wind up having a good shape."

He plans one final check on the national Christmas tree lighting the day before the ceremony.

"Then," he said, "I go back home and watch it on TV."

Arms Race To Be Subject Of Colloquium

Dr. Jeremy Stone, National Director of the Federation of American Scientists, will visit UMass Wednesday for informal discussions and an inter- departmental colloquium. The Federation of American Scientists is a lobbying group which acts to see that government decisions involving sciences are made in a sensible way. Two of the main concerns of the FAS are the taming of the arms race and the uses and hazards of atomic energy.

Dr. Stone will meet at noon Wednesday with interested students and faculty in an alcove of the Campus Center cafeteria. Discussion on the topic "Science and Washington - The Role of the FAS" is planned. He will be available for informal conversations tomorrow afternoon from 2:30 to 3:30 in Hasbrouck 411.

At 4:30 p.m. Dr. Stone will speak on the subject "Washington and the Arms Race" at a joint colloquium arranged by the departments of government and physics. The colloquium will be held in Campus Center room 162.

Dr. Stone is a mathematician by training and a scientist by position.

Before becoming National Director of the FAS he served as an assistant professor of political science at Panama.

Chem Students Analyze Conn River Waters

Amherst, Mass. - Undergraduates in chemistry at the University of Massachusetts are taking a look at the Connecticut River as a new way of learning chemical analysis techniques.

It's part of a project co-sponsored by the American Chemical Society to ascertain the ability of chemistry undergraduates to undertake the analysis of waters to determine levels of chemical purity. It means students analyze actual river water samples to learn techniques rather than being handed a prepared laboratory sample.

Dr. Sidney Siggia of the chemistry department administers the program, assisted by Thomas Zajicek, Ramon Barnes and John Roberts of the chemistry faculty, graduate students Ken Blessel and Abbass Kamalizad and seniors Francis Plankey and Alan Schuler.

"It's designed to expose the student to the educational experience of using real samples," Dr. Zajicek explained. It also has another purpose: it's part of a pilot study by the American Chemical Society to find out if students can do satisfactory water analysis.

If so, Dr. Zajicek explained, the society plans to set up a system through which student analysis can provide a broad picture of water quality over the entire country.

Several classes at the junior and senior levels have been taking water samples at points along the river from Sunderland to Springfield. Students check such things as dissolved oxygen, acidity, conductivity and presence of phosphates and other minerals. They also analyze control samples that contain known quantities of contaminants as a means of checking accuracy.

Communist Party Talk To Defend Angela Davis

Communist Party Member to Speak on Angela Davis "The Case of Angela Davis: Prosecution or Persecution?", will be the subject of a talk given tomorrow night by Charlene Mitchell, chairwoman of the Black Liberation Commission, of the Communist Party U.S.A. The talk sponsored by the Young Workers Libeation League of Western Mass. will be at 7 p.m. in the Engineering East Auditorium.

Miss Mitchell was the Communist Party's candidate for president of the United States in 1968. She is also founder of the Che-Lumumba Club, the C.P.U.S.A. club of which Professor Davis is a member. Charlene Mitchell has spoken of the case many times and recently appeared on nationwide television in defense of Angela Davis. Admission to the talk is free.

Fine Foods And Wines Program To Be Offered

The Division of Continuing Education of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst has announced a special program for those who want to learn more about fine foods and wines.

A course of six Monday evening meetings beginning Feb. 8, 1971 will be given in cooperation with the University's department of restaurant and hotel administration and The Top of the Campus Restaurant, located on the 11th floor of the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center.

Cost of the program, which will include six dinners especially prepared to complement the wines which will be discussed and served, will be $45. It is under the direction of Dr. Donald E. Lundberg, head of the department of restaurant and hotel administration and well-known author and lecturer.

The first program will feature wines of the United States, and dinner will feature black bean soup, deviled crab, wild rice with mushrooms, cornbread with fruit marmalade and maple mousse. The second dinner will be devoted to wines of Bordeaux, with home style pate', beef bordelaise, Potatoes Anna, baked stuffed mushroom caps, and crepes with lemon souffle filling.

The third program, Feb. 22, will present wines of Burgundy, and dinner will include puree of carrot soup, braised pork chops with cream and mustard sauce, green string beans blanched and buttered, braised red cabbage in red wine with chestnuts, and poached peaches with raspberry puree. Program number four will feature Rhine and Moselle wines. Dinner will be typically German, including hot beer soup, roast duck with apple and bread stuffing, pineapple sauerkraut, potato pancakes and almond layer cake.

Wines of Italy will be the subject on March 8, with a dinner including assorted antipasti, sauteed veal scallops with marsala sauce, braised peas with prosciutti, ziti with tomato sauce and chilled chocolate loaf. Finally, on March 15, wines of Spain and Portugal will be highlighted, with a dinner to include cold fresh vegetable soup, saffron rice with seafood and chicken, mixed vegetable casserole and dried figs stuffed with almonds and chocolate.

Reservations for this program may be made through the Division of Continuing Education, at 545-0905.

FGAF To Sponsor Lecture On Academic Freedom

The Faculty Group for Academic Freedom at the University of Massachusetts will sponsor a lecture by Steven Kelman, Harvard '70, on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in 231 Herter Hall on the campus of the University of Massachusetts. The event is open to the public without charge.

Steven Kelman will speak on "The Student's Stake in Academic Freedom". Kelman graduated from Harvard summa cum laude in June 1970 and he is the author of Push Comes to Shove: The Escalation of Student Protest, a book that has been widely acclaimed by the critics. His syndicated column appears in the Boston Globe and he has written for leading periodicals.

Mr Kelman is past national president of the Young People's Socialist League (YPSL), the youth organization of the American Socialist Party led for many years by the late Norman Thomas. The lecture is co-sponsored by the YPSL chapter and the Interim Organization Committee of Students for Academic Freedom at the University of Massachusetts. The public is invited to attend.

JV Gymnasts Win Opener Boston State Is Victim

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

The UMass junior varsity gymnastics team opened their 1970-71 season by downing previously undefeated Boston State College, 116.85-110.38, in a dual meet held Saturday, Dec. 12 at Boston. The Little Redmen won four of the six events, in addition to taking three first places, five seconds, and two thirds.

Highlights of the meet included performances by co-captains Bill Henry and Phil Aubrey, Brian Hassig, Rich Seikunas, Steve Soumerai, Chuck Schwartz, and Jay Thompsen.

UMass jumped to an early lead in floor exercise as Henry took first place with a score of 8.0, and Seikunas captured second with a 7.75.

The Little Redmen, led by Hassig, increased their lead in the side horse event. Although Boyd took first for Boston, Hassig and Seikunas took second and third for UMass.

Boston State won the still rings event as co-captain Ferguson took first, with Simonelli of State placing third. Aubrey led the Little Redmen ringmen with a score of 6.50, which was good for second place. At intermission, UMass led, 55.80-52.45.

UMass dominated the long horse event as Thompsen and Soumerai placed first and third, respectively. Dave Montani, Boston's top all-around man, managed a second.

Parallel bars were also dominated by the Little Redmen, as Seikunas and Schwartz took first and second place for UMass. The Little Redmen outclassed Boston as they decisively increased their lead.

The final event, horizontal bar, was won by Boston State, as UMass could manage only one of the top three spots. Thompsen led the Little Redmen as he took second place. The final score of the meet read, UMass 116.85, Boston State 110.35.

The Little Redmen now have a two month lay-off as they prepare for their next opponent, Springfield College. This meet, which will open the Little Redmen's home season, will be held on Friday, Feb. 12 at 6 p.m.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo is extravagant tends to overdramatise, can be a wonderful friend but mainly demands more than most persons are willing or capable of giving. Women born under Aries find Leo men extremely attractive. The Leo man is dynamic, while the Leo woman is always apt to be center stage. Natives of this sign are creative and able to intrigue with their flair for the unusual.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Stress on need to change. Status quo is not apt to remain. You will be with young persons or those with young ideas. Many see you as leader. You can set example. Trust your own capabilities.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Accent on security, finishing projects which have direct effect on future. Strive to enlarge horizons. Avoid the petty. Plan ahead. Study special material which makes you knowledgeable.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Move about; get feel of what's going on around you. Display versatility. Neighbor presents idea which is workable. Go to it. Stress independence, originality.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Guard valuable. One who pretends to know all answers actually is groping. Realize this and respond accordingly. Recent effort is due to bear fruit.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Cycle moves up; there is daylight. You can see where you want to go. Key is to start. Indications favor new start, added independence. Social contact results in fine proposition.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Hidden matters dominate. Behind-scenes meeting may have direct effect on you. There are doubts and some confusion. Lie low. Wait for clouds to clear. Soon you will be in stronger position.

LIBRA (Sept. 22 - Oct. 22): Money from professional efforts is highlighted. Friends help you fulfill some hopes, wishes. Be ready for quick changes. One who is inquisitive reveals more than he learns.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Your ambitions come close to reality. You make adjustments which result in solid gain. Family member lends valuable support. Strengthen ties with loved ones.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Avoid seeing situation through rose-colored glasses. Distorted picture results if you insist on being naive. Realistic approach is a necessity.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Powerful emotions seem to dictate vital moves. Settle financial differences involving attorney, partner. Live up to money responsibilities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Better for finishing rather than beginning projects. Excitement about special agreement prevails. Maintain poise. Let dust settle. Permit others to take initiative.

PISCES Feb. 19 - March 20): Steady pace gets results. New employment feature is accented. You do best now by learning basic rules. Be sure and then proceed. Avoid extremes. Stress moderation.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you tend to absorb knowledge. You do best when you do what comes naturally. You have knack for earning money. You are attractive to opposite sex and usually succeed when you desire success. If single, matrimonial state is due to change.

Wrestlers Pin Rhode Island, 22-11

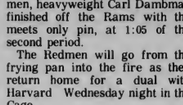
By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

Sparked by the last second victories of Nick DiDomenico and Ed Carlsson, the UMass wrestling team downed the University of Rhode Island, 22-11, on Saturday afternoon. The win was the second in two tries for the Redmen this season and the 12th straight regular season victory over the past two years.

The meet was much closer than the final score indicates and it came very close to being a Ram victory. DiDomenico was trailing in his 118 lb. match, 6-4, after two periods and the score remained that way until the final minute of the match. But DiDomenico irwhat was called a "tremendous effort" by coach Homer Barr, escaped from his opponent and then with three seconds left, scored a takedown and came away with a 7-6 victory.

Later in the meet, with the Redmen leading 14-11, Carlsson faced a similar situation. He trailed 5-1 at the end of the second period and a loss would have meant a tie score going into the heavyweight match. But Carlsson got an escape and a takedown and two minutes riding time to win the match, 6-5. If the Redmen had lost these two matches, the Rams would have been the victorious team, 17-16.

However, DiDomenico and Carlsson weren't alone in the Redman heroics. After DeDomenico's victory and losses by Gary Woods and Barry Godowsky, the Redmen trailed 6-3. Sheldon Goldberg, a 142-pounder, trailed 4-1 in the last period and he, too, scored an escape and a takedown to tie Catania of the Rams, 4-4. Junior Clay Jester tied the meet at 8-all with an 8-4 victory in the 150 lb. match which saw Jester in command all the way.



The Rams went back into the lead, 11-8, with a little help from the referee, in the 158 lb. match. Redman Brian Urquhart had seemingly held on for a 2-2 tie with Gamon of Rhode Island, when he was turned over at the buzzer and the official awarded Gamon with a reversal and a 4-2 victory, which was not too well received by the Redman supporters.

Kent Mignocci broke a 2-2 deadlock with a strong third period to win the 167 lb. match, 6-2, and once again the meet was tied, this time 11-11. Tom Andrews put the Redmen ahead to stay with a 4-1 victory in the 177 lb. match which he led all the way. After Carlsson's heroics iced the win for the Redmen, heavyweight Carl Dambman finished off the Rams with the meets only pin, at 1:05 of the second period.

The Redmen will go from the frying pan into the fire as they return home for a dual with Harvard Wednesday night in the Cage.

Redmen Go For Fifth Straight

Hoopsters Battle UConn In Conference Tussle

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

What has developed into a solid basketball rivalry will be resumed tonight when the UMass cagers contest the hoopsters of the University of Connecticut at Storrs, Ct. Both squads will enter the fray, slated to start at 8, with winning records as UConn is 2-1 and the Redmen are 4-0.

It used to be the case that UConn was a name synonymous with Yankee Conference basketball championships as the Huskies won the league's hoop crown ten straight years from the 1950-51 season all the way through the 1959-60 campaign.

They didn't stop there, however, winning YanCon titles in 1962-63, 1964-65 and 1966-67, and tying for the top in 1963-64 and 1965-66, both times with the University of Rhode Island.

UConn went into a basketball slump in the two years following its last outright title in 1966-67; UMass and URI shared the crown in 1967-68 and the Redmen won it all in 1968-69. The Huskies needed a man to lead them back and they found one in the person of Dee Rowe, who was head basketball coach at little Worcester Academy from 1955-1969, but who took over the UConn head coaching reigns with narry a hitch.

In the year before Rowe, the team from Storrs recorded a 5-19 mark. He revived them to the tune of 14-9 and a tie for the YanCon championship with the Redmen, both teams compiling 8-2 league marks.

And because Rowe has done such a fine job with UConn and Jack Leaman has led UMass to the top of New England basketball, the Husky-Redman match-up has become and will continue to be a great one.

Leaman helped build up the rivalry when, in his first year at the Redman helm, he gave the eventual Conference champions a couple of scares, losing by close scores of 66-59 and 60-59.

Over the following two years, UMass drove the Huskies nuts with four straight victories. The 1967-68 winter was marked by a two-point, 65-63, win over UConn on Bill Tindall's last-second bucket, and a 56-44 victory at Storrs, the first Redman away win at Connecticut in 32 years.

During UConn's 5-19 year, the two victories were easier, but Rowe's Huskies ended the four-game streak with an upsetting 88-71 win a year ago at the Cage. UMass got back at this team later in the year with 71-65, hard-earned victory at Storrs. And the rivalry should continue.

In tonight's big game, the Redmen will likely face a starting Husky five of 5'11 Boy Boyd, 6' Doug Melody, 6'4 Bob Staak, 6'5 Ron Hrubala and 6'6 Phil Hoagland. This starting quintet will depend upon the health status of Robert Taylor, a 6'5 forward who was ill when UConn played Boston University Saturday night.

Normally the Huskies play Taylor and Hrubala at the forwards, Boy and Staak at the guards and Hoagland at center. Against BU, they shifted the tall Staak up front and filled his guard vacancy with Melody, which they can be expected to do tonight should Taylor remain inactive.

Talentwise, these Huskies are really good. Boyd is a pesty guy with a good shot. He is a senior. Boyd was N.E.'s third best scorer last winter as he wizzed 'em through the nets at a 23.4 points-per-game clip.

When Boyd's shooting is off, the person who picks up the slack is Staak, also a senior. He is probably the best raw shooter on the team and certainly among the best in the Conference. A consistent point-getter, he has averaged 17.0 and 16.4 ppg over the past two campaigns.

Hrubala is another Husky senior and the squads best rebounder. He was fourth in N.E. in rebounding last year, and chipped in for UConn with 11.8 points each game.

Taylor, should he play, is the solid-unsung performer. A junior, he rebounds well and scores between eight and 12 points every game. Hoagland, the center, is another senior, which speaks well of the Huskies' experience. He played mostly a backup role a year ago but has always been dependable.

Melody, a junior, played very little as a sophomore, but he is highly regarded at UConn. Possibly the team's best defensive player, he will be a key player for the Huskies.

In compiling its 2-1 record, UConn has won two games in succession, over New Hampshire (74-71) and BU (64-62), after slipping in its opener to Yale (94-80).

UMass will probably go with the starting five that has led it to four victories and no losses, that being John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara in the backcourt and Ken Mathias, Chris Coffin and Julius Erving in the forecourt.

There are no more tickets available for this tilt, it is a sellout. However the game will be televised on channel, WNHC-TV.

Pucksters Still Unbeaten

UMass Hosts Yellow Jackets In Quest For Sixth Win

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

The team is 5-0. It's the best start ever for a UMass hockey team. Included in the record are victories against four very decent hockey teams--Pennsylvania, Vermont, Williams, and Middlebury. But Coach Jack Canniff was very reluctant to talk about the victories. Instead he wanted to look at the games ahead, particularly the game tonight against American International College at Orr Rink. Face-off is at 8 p.m.

With the team off to such a good start, some do not remember, but most do not want to remember the less than fruitful hockey seasons of the past. A good indication of the way things were is clearly manifested by the series record against AIC which stands at 19-5-1 in the visitor's favor. AIC is unbeaten in its last seven games against the Redmen with six victories and a tie.

The Yellow Jackets currently hold a 2-2 record so far this season with victories against Salem State, 5-3, and New Haven College, 9-1, and losses to Northeastern University, 6-4, and Oswego, 7-5.

The visitors have ten returning lettermen from last year's squad, with senior center and captain Dave Forbes heading the list. Forbes is leading the team in scoring with eight points in four games and needs only two more points to place sixth on the all-time AIC scoring list.

Junior goalie Roland Depew has been outstanding at times in the nets for the Yellow Jackets despite his goals - against average of 4.25. AIC generally tends to play a wide-open game, and subsequently Depew has been quite busy in the cage.

AIC yesterday received permission from the ECAC to use freshmen in varsity contests and plan to activate Mike Zagula, a goalie and Bill Ketchum, a defenseman. Although Zagula will not start, Ketchum is expected to see a lot of ice time.

The starting line-up for the visitors will have Depew in goal, Bousquet and Collins at the points, and Forbes centering for Serino and Urquhart.

Canniff did mention a few things which he thinks are contributing greatly to his team's success so far. One thing he noted is the fact that many of the juniors who played so much as sophomores last season have benefited greatly from the experience. He also mentioned that the sophomores are "all having real good years and seem to be jelling well together." The factor he stressed most however is the over-all hustle that the Redmen have shown.

B E T W E E N T H E BLUELINES.....There has been only one shutout in the AIC-UMass series which started in the 1949-50 season. This occurred in 1959 when the Yellow Jackets beat the Redmen 8-0...The record for number of saves in ECAC play is 79 set by UMass goalie Gene Masellis in 1957 against, you guessed it, AIC.

SPORTS NOTICES

NO UCONN HOOP TICKETS-Tickets for tonight's UMass-U. of Connecticut basketball game have all been sold. The game itself is a sellout.

* * * * *

HOLIDAY TOURNEY HOOP TICKETS-Tickets for the Springfield Hall of Fame basketball tournament, in which UMass will compete on Dec. 28, 29 and 30, are now on sale for the first two dates in room 255 Boyden. There are two prices being asked for these ducats, $2 and $3. For the 28th, the first round of the tourney, there are approximately 600 tickets still available. For the 29th or round two, the ticket office has 200 tickets available.

* * * * *

MSG HOOP TICKETS-Tickets for Feb. 27's basketball game, UMass vs. George Washington University at Madison Square Garden in New York City, will probably arrive at the Boyden ticket office sometime late this week or early next week. Balanced Frosh Meet Little Huskies

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Traveling to Storrs, Connecticut, the UMass freshman basketball team tips off at 6 p.m. tonight against the Little Huskies. In the prelude to the UMass-UConn varsity contest, the Little Redmen will be seeking to up their record to 4-0.

UConn, presently boasting a 2-1 record, will feature two 6'2 guards in the persons of Ed Harrison and Pat Mullin. On the front line, Larry Traster, a 6'6 center, will be flanked by Gary Custick, 6'7, and Cal Chapman, 6'5.

The Huskies, a team sited in pre-season by Coach Broaca as "one of our toughest opponents," have defeated the freshman squads of UNH and BU, while suffering their only defeat at the hands of the Yale frosh.

The Little Redmen, who looked very sharp against the Amherst frosh last Saturday, will need more of the excellent balance thatthey have exhibited throughout their opening games.

This fine scoring balance is headed by Rich Pitino, who is averaging 18.3 points per game, and followed closely by Peter Trow, with a 16.7 average, and Al Skinner, at 15.0 a game.

Offensively the frosh have averaged 79.7 points to their opponents 58.0. Tonight's game should be a good test for that 21-point victory margin, as the frosh stray from the confines of Curry Hicks for the second time this year.

Football Coach Screening Committee Named

A six-man screening committee has been named to search for a new football coach at UMass it has been announced today by Chancellor Oswald Tippo.

George Richarson Chairman of the Athletic Council and professor of chemistry, will serve as chairman. Other members are: Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education and Director of Athletics; David C. Bischoff, Associate Provost; Donald Junkins, associate professor of English; Evan V. Johnston, Executive Vice-President of the Associate Alumni; and Peter Pascarelli of Dorchester, Editor-in-Chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Dennis Keating of Arlington and John Hulecki of Leominister, next year's football co-captains, have been invited to serve the committee as consultants. Robert O'Connell, assistant director of athletics, will serve as non-voting secretary of the committee.

The committee will screen candidates for the position vacated on Tuesday, Dec. 8 by Vic Fusia, after ten years as head coach.

Revision Of Class Government Planned By Senate Sub-Committee

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

Class government is badly in need of revision, according to three Student Senators who held a meeting on the subject of reform last evening.

Senators Emory Rounds, chairman of the subcommittee, Kevin Kulakowski, and Jim Bouin also a class treasurer, met with the hope that people they had invited from the class governments would help them begin to redefine class government to give it a definite role. None of those invited attended.

Right now, the Senators are working on decreasing the amount of student taxes budgeted to each class, with plans to reform the government system itself in the future. They have proposed amendments to the Class Government Act which will cut the tax to no more than $1.00 per class member per year for the freshman, sophomore, and junior years, and not more than $3.00 per member of the senior class. The classes are getting $3, $2, $7, and $9, respectively this year.

If the proposed reduction in class budgets is approved by the Senate, the approximately $3600 maximum the classes would receive their first three years would be spent running minor concerts and holding picnics. Seniors need the $3 per member to pay for graduation expenses.

According to Rounds, class governments currently serve as little more than program councils. Their major function in recent years has been to schedule concerts on campus. The Student Senate may soon set up its own committee to do this, leaving class governments with even less use for their funds.

Rounds said, "I think that class government is only a shadow of the area governments." He foresees giving the money taken away from the classes to the area governments. Students lack a sense of class membership but define themselves more as members of their dorms and areas. The area governments would put the funds to much better use, according to Rounds.

The subcommittee on class government reform will continue its work next semester when it presents its amendments to the Senate. It also hopes to work with the members of class governments to determine a definite role for the governments to play on this campus.

Columnist Kelman On Acad. Freedom

STEVEN KELMAN

The UMass Faculty Group for Academic Freedom will sponsor a lecture by Steven Kelman, Harvard '70, tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. in 231 Herter Hall. The event is open to the public without charge.

Kelman will speak on "The Student's Stake in Academic Freedom". He graduated from Harvard summa cum laude in June 1970 and he is the author of Push Comes to Shove: The Escalation of Student Protest, a book that has been widely acclaimed by the critics. His syndicated column appear in the Boston Globe and he has written for leading periodicals.

Mr. Kelman is past national president of the Young People's Socialist League (YPSL), the youth organization of the American Socialist Party led for many years by the late Norman Thomas. The lecture is co-sponsored by the YPSL chapter and the Interim Organizational Committee of Students for Academic Freedom at UMass.

Hickel Note Met By 7-Week Delay

WASHINGTON (AP)—Former Secretary of the Interior Walter J. Hickel's written request for a meeting to brief President Nixon last September on a just ended tour of four nations was rejected in a White House letter signed by an assistant to an assistant.

The reply to Hickel's request, delayed three weeks in the writing and a month in delivery, bore the name of Hugh W. Sloan Jr., staff assistant to Special Presidential Assistant Dwight Chapin, the man who arranges Nixon's appointments.

The incident followed by five months the now famous letter to the President which Hickel wrote, as he later complained, because he could not reach the President or his top aids for what he considered an urgent consultation.

In August, Hickel toured Arctic areas of Canada and Alaska with Jean Chretien, Canadian minister of Indian affairs and northern development; soon after, he visited Finland and met with President UrhoKekkonen, then went on to Sweden and Norway.

On Sept. 11, Hickel wrote to Nixon, calling the Arctic "the storehouse of the world both in resources and natural beauty."

The reply was dated Sept. 30 but was not received by Hickel's office at the Interior Department-four blocks from the White House-until Oct. 13.

"As much as the President would like to be able to meet with you in this regard, the unusually heavy schedule which has been planned for the coming weeks makes it impossible for us to arrange an appointment for you. However, the President is most grateful to you for making this offer and sends you his thanks and warm good wishes."

Hickel was not to see the President privately until Nixon summoned him abruptly on Nov. 25, and fired him.

Poetry Session Planned

The third in a series of Poetry Readings sponsored by the Master of Fine Arts Program will be held tomorrow night at 7:30 in Memorial Hall Lounge. Sydney Campbell, Stephen Herman and John Driscoll will be the featured readers.

An open session will also be held to which members of the University community are encouraged to bring their own work and share it with others.

Further information may be obtained by contacting Bill Tremblay in Bartlett 308C or by calling 5-1882.

Campus Security Problems Worry Bromery

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

"Flashing green lights" installed on the University Police cars will give the campus security units "greater visibility" said Dr. Randolph W. Bromery at the Trustee Student Life Sub-committee meeting held during the SWAP conference in South Lee last weekend. But, more than "greater visibility", the biggest task of the University appears to be the "co-ordination" of all the security units on campus.

The University has filed a "deficiency budget" to the State Legislature which will provide for an additional police vehicle, 4 new officers, 16 green uniformed security guards and 10 transceivers plus a sum of money to provide overtime pay and better dorm security. The immediate plans for improving security will center around organizing the confusing maze of the "over lapping" responsibilities and un-coordinated actions of security guards, residence hall assistants, student receptionists, Area Coordinator Security people and University police on foot and in cars.

Meeting earlier this week, Sgt. Jerry O'Neil of the University Police, Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery Assoc. Dean of Students for the Central and Northeast area dorms, Michael West and Asst. to the Vice Chancellor Douglas Forsythe, seemed to agree that with the funds available for security at the present time, the only immediate improvements which can be made are in the "co-ordination" of the security forces presently available.

"In order for us to give the students the protection they deserve, the students have to co-operate" emphasized Bromery during the short conference held in the map room of the UMass Police Station. Michael West backed Bromery citing the results of a survey conducted in Orchard Hill Complex which showed that only "one out of four" thefts were being reported to the Police.

The discussion was set-up to explore some of the problems facing the security forces on campus.

West proposed that "police sub-stations be created somewhere on the eastern side of the campus, possibly in an office in the Central or Northeast residential areas. He pointed to the increased responsibility of the Area Coordinators in security matters, saying that there is a "need to organize security in the areas."

"We (the University) are still small enough" to make do with "what we have" responded Sgt. O'Neil to the proposal "It would cost a fortune," he added explaining that a "sub-station" would require at least five officers to operate it on a 24 hour basis.

Sgt. O'Neil was asked if he saw any "need" for a sub-station: "At this point, No." The security system "should be flexible" he added.

The police do operate foot patrols in the residential areas during the weekends, Sgt. O'Neil explained. Weeknights, the Security Guards maintain patrols, but the Sergeant remarked that the guards usually don't have adequate training to be effective on patrol. Any increase in the number of patrols would require additional manpower. "It involves money," he said.

One step towards what Michael West called "getting police involved in the areas" would be to have an officer serve as a special "consultant" to the Area Coordinator.

Bromery said that the administration would have to become more "flexible" in sifting through the "mass confusion" of the night receptionists, security guards and other security personnel. Bromery told the police to "fix your people" and "we'll fill in."

The task of assigning security personnel to all the dorms without fail every night was depicted as "impossible" by Sgt. O'Neil. He recommended that the people responsible for the dorm security (Area Coordinators, Security Guards and Police) would have to meet and "work together."

West pointed out that the Central, Northeast and Orchard Hill Area Coordinators have received enough money ($10,000.00) to provide student night receptionists for every dorm from 10:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m. for the remainder of this semester. The biggest problem is coordinating with the rest of the security forces.

Sgt. O'Neil commented that what the University needed was some people to "sit down" and begin to plan for the future needs of security on campus.

Laird To Visit So. Vietnam, Predicts No Pullout Problems

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced Tuesday he will fly to Vietnam next month for a personal assessment and said there is nothing developing militarily that would delay the U.S. troop pullout timetable.

Laird told a Pentagon news conference that he and Adm. Thomas H. Moorer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will leave Jan. 5 for meetings in Paris with U.S. peace negotiators, then fly on to Thailand and ultimately South Vietnam. The purpose of Laird's first visit to the war zone in about a year, he said, is:

"To assess the progress of the Vietnamization program; to assess the military situation in Southeast Asia; to assess the military assistance programs; and also to confer with Gen. Creighton W Abrams on what lies ahead so far as further troop reductions" are concerned.

Under questioning, Laird said "there is nothing developing militarily that would cause us not to meet or beat" the May goal of reducing U.S. forces in Vietnam to 284,000 men.

He said a planning conference will be held Jan. 4 in Hawaii to work out details for meeting that announced pullout objective.

The United States is slightly ahead of its withdrawal schedule and Laird predicted "we will be below 340,000 at the time that that planning conference takes place."

Pentagon officials say withdrawals may be throttled down for the next two months to be on the safe side in the event the enemy should Jaunch a lunar New Year offensive.

Laird said North Vietnamese major military actions are confined largely to Laos and Cambodia. Infiltration rates for this year will be somewhat below last year, the defense secretary said without expressing any opinion on the significance of this.

Despite President Nixon's assertion last week that the United States would bomb North Vietnam if there were a dangerous buildup or serious rise in the level of fighting in South Vietnam, Laird insisted "there's been no basic change in policy" on bombing.

In the past, the administration has used other grounds for U.S. warplane strikes against targets in the North- enemy firing on U.S. reconnaissance planes, serious violations of the DMZ by infiltrators, or shelling of South Vietnamese cities.

Undergrads Eligible For Grad Courses

By ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

Although most undergraduates are unaware of it, they are eligibile to enroll in graduate courses with the prerequisite being permission of the instructor teaching the course. In order to get this permission, however, a proficiency in the subject must be proven to the instructor.

According to Assoc. Dean of the Grad School, Arthur Gentile, most undergraduates are oblivious to the opportunities open to them under the auspices of the Grad School until they become upperclassmen. "Some seniors enroll in grad courses," he said, "but all undergrads should be made aware of their ability to enroll in grad courses of their choice."

"Application of credit is a different matter," he continued. "Undergraduates can apply credit earned in a graduate course towards their bachelor's degrees if they wish. However, if they attend UMass' grad school, they cannot apply graduate credit earned as an undergrad and applied towards a bachelor's degree towards their master's or doctorate degrees. "Similarly," he added, "if the credit earned before graduation is extra credit and not applied towards the bachelor's degree, it will be accepted as credit for a masters' or doctorate degree."

Information pertaining to graduate programs offered next semester can be obtained at the graduate offices in Munson Hall or by contacting one of the Deans of the Grad School.

Foreign Students Required To Take English Courses

At the beginning of each term, all entering foreign students are required to take an English proficiency examination administered by the Linguistics Department. The purpose of this examination is to determine whether a foreign student has need of further work in English, i.e. whether he has language difficulties which may impede his academic progress. Students who score below a certain standard are required to take a course offered by the Linguistics Department under the title English for Foreign Students (Linguistics 410).

The Linguistics Department wishes to call attention to the fact that this course is open to all foreign students (not just those who have been tested), and any foreign student who is experiencing difficulty with English (especially as regards his academic work) should include this course in his curriculum. In the Spring Term two sections of Linguistics 410 will be offered as follows:

Section 1. 8:00 AM, MWF Thompson 819--Mr. Hatch (School of Ed.)

Section 2. 4:00-5:15 TTh Machmer 201--Mrs. Baron (Linguistics)

Labs: 1. 4:40 TTh Bartlett B

2. 8:00 TTh Bartlett B

(The course is a non-credit course.) The English Proficiency Examination for students entering in the Spring Term will be held on January 23, from 10:00 A.M. to noon, in Thompson 106. For further information regarding the program in English for foreign students, contact Adrian Akmajian, Linguistics Department, Thompson 828 (5-0879).

Celler Report Links Douglas To CIA

WASHINGTON (AP) - Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas was linked in a congressional report Tuesday with the Central Intelligence Agency in one of the activities for which his House critics are seeking to impeach him.

The report of the special House committee that investigated Douglas indicates two men associated with him in a Dominican Republic literacy project had some connection with the CIA.

The connection is left unclear, however, because CIA Director Richard Helms refused to deliver a secret memorandum bearing on the Douglas case to committee investigators.

The committee has already announced its finding that it feels no grounds exist for impeaching Douglas. Its report, made public Tuesday, contains the evidence on which the finding was based.

The 924 page report is filled with letters, government documents, legal briefs and other material winnowed from 500,000 documents the committee says it examined during its five months investigation.

Chairman Emanual Celler, D-N.Y., in an accompanying statement, said, "I am sure all fair minded people, after studying the material in the final report, will agree there is no basis for impeachment of Associate Justice Douglas."

The other two Democrats on the committee, Reps. Byron G. Rogers of Colorado and Jack Brooks of Texas, joined Celler in the majority conclusion.

One of the two Republican members, William M. McCulloch of Ohio, declined to sign the report and the other, Edward Hutchinson of Michigan, wrote a minority opinion declaring witnesses should be examined under oath in public hearing before the committee reaches a final conclusion.

This is certain to be the demand of most if not all of the House members who touched off the investigation last spring. The Judiciary Committee, under Celler's urging, stepped in and took over the inquiry to head off an investigation by another panel selected from the membership at large.

Rep. Louis C. Wyman, R-N.H., one of Douglas's most persistent critics, has already announced he will introduce a resolution at the opening of the new Congress next month calling for such an investigation.

House Republican leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan, whose speech last April 15 formed the basis for the Celler committee investigation, says he will support Wyman's effort.

Restrictions Eased On Cambodian Involvement

WASHINGTON (AP)-A House-Senate conference committee Tuesday eased some proposed new restrictions on U.S. involvement in Cambodia while still another set of restraints became mired indebate on the Senate floor.

In the latter case, backers of the restrictions conceded President Nixon probably could not be barred as commander in chief from continuing to order raids, rescue missions and even small invasions.

The joint congressional committee reached agreement on a $66.5 billion defense appropriations bill that contains a provision barring use of U.S. ground combat troops in Cambodia.

It also restates a year old ban on use of such troops in Laos and Thailand.

But at the insistance of House members the committee added a paragraph saying "nothing contained in this section should be construed as prohibiting the President from taking action in said areas designed to promote the safe and orderly withdrawal or disengagement of U.S. forces from Southeast Asia or to aid in the release of Americans held prisoner of war."

On the Senate floor meanwhile, a set of much broader restraints on U.S. aid to Cambodia ran into prolonged debate. Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana said he doesn't know whether the bill carrying those restrictions could be brought to a vote before Congress adjourns.

The bill on the floor would authorize $550 million in aid to several countries with $255 million in military and economic assistance earmarked for Cambodia.

The bill would prohibit use of U.S. ground combat troops or advisors in Cambodia, states that approval of assistance does not commit the U.S. to defend that country and would require the President to seek congressional approval 30 days in advance of making any emergency aid available to Cambodia.

The Senate early in the day rejected an amendment by Sen. John J. Williams, (R) Del., that would have applied these restrictions to some $500 million already approved for aid to Israel.

Debate bogged down on an amendment by Sen. Mike Gravel, (D) Alaska, that would strike out the $155 million in new Cambodian money.

Gravel said that by approving new money the Senate would be approving administration policies and that the only way to end the war in Southeast Asia is to cut off the funds and bring the troops home.

SST Passes House, Heads For Senate

WASHINGTON (AP)—A $210 million compromise to keep development of the 1,800 mile an hour supersonic transport alive flew through the House Tuesday and headed for a threatened filibuster showdown in the Senate.

Senate apponents said they were ready to launch weeks of talking to keep the SST money out of a $2.6 billion transportation money bill. The opponents, led by Sen. William Proxmire, (D) Wis., carried thousands ofpagesof congressional testimony on the SST to the Senate floor, ready to read it aloud for hours on end.

The House passed the bill 319 to 71 and the only direct effort to cut out the SST money was shouted down by voice vote.

The leading House opponent of the SST, Rep. Sidney R. Yates, (D) Ill., said the $210 million compromise-an $80 million trim from President Nixon's request for $290 million-would only stretch out the program and ultimately add $180 million to the SST's cost.

The added cost would raise the taxpayers' share for developing two SST prototypes to an even $1.5 billion. Yates said, twice the $750 million ceiling President John F. Kennedy put on the federal money when he approved the plane in 1962.

"This is yo-yo financing of the worst kind," Yates said.

He quoted Secretary of Transportation John A. Volpe as telling House Senate conferees in a Dec. 9 letter that anything less than $250 million for the SST this year "would destroy the prototype program as we know it today" and obviously would increase the government's cost.

But he told the House that after the Senate killed all $290 million for the SST two weeks ago, the $210 million compromise was the maximum the House could get.

Springfield May Lose State School Aid

BOSTON (AP) - The state Board of Education voted overwhelmingly Tuesday to withhold $7.3 million in state aid to the Springfield school system next September if the city does not move to correct racial imbalance.

The board gave the city until April 1 to allocate $150,000 to move ahead on school construction plans and to submit plans to eliminate school imbalance.

Five of Springfield's 49 schools are adjudged racially imbalanced.

Springfield Mayor Frank Freedman told board members at the meeting that if funds were cut off, "it would cause chaotic conditions.

"The affluent whites would move out and Springfield would become a welfare city."

International Club To Show Chinese Self-Defense

Practically all Oriental martial arts have their root in China. For instance, it is interesting to note that three Chinese characters Kara Te Do (Pronounced in Japanese), or Tang Su Do (pronounced in Korean), mean the same thing: the way of Chinese Fist Fight. It is also worth noting that things like Judo, Aikido or Bojitsu are in one way or another a simplified version of a highly sophisticated Chinese martial art. More precisely, Judo has its origin in Chinese Wrestling and Aikido is derived from Chi-no. And the philosophy in both of them, i.e. soft movement can outdo mere strength, or Yin overcomes Yang, is based on the ideas of Tai Chi.

In Chinese, Kung Fu is a collective noun for all kinds of martial arts. It contains not only the arts and techniques of bare hand fighting but also of various (classical) weapons such as sword, spear, chain, stick, etc. The most elegant feature of Kung Fu training is not in its sophisticated excercises, nor in its effecient fighting techniques, but in its philosophy of self-discipline and sense of morality. The idea of Kung Fu is to build one's soul through physical exercises in order to live in harmony with the Universe. These sophisticated exercises, upon proper practice, become lethal weapon. One is not supposed to use it on another person unless it is for defense of his own life or for his country and family honor. Therefore, a Kung Fu teacher is highly selective in choosing his students lest he passes this lethal technique on to the wrong person. A student is trained to be very patient, patient enough to take in practically any insult; for patience is the greatest courage. He is also taught to be humble, for there is always more to learn. And finally, upon leaving his teacher at the end of this training, the studentreceives from the teacher a dagger which is to be used on himself should he ever do anything immoral.

A brief talk and demonstration of Kung Fu will be given at the International Club meeting at 4:00 p.m. this Thursday, December 17, in Colonial Lounge, Student Union. Everyone is welcome.

KUNG FU—Chinese self-defense. One swipe of a well-trained foot or hand and a lot of damage can be inflicted. Note the way in which these boards are splintered by one leaping kick.

Exchange Programs Outlined Tonight

Tonight at 8 p.m. there will be a meeting in Rooms 174-176 at the Campus Center at which all students--and all interested members of the university community--are invited to hear about and sign up for intercultural communications programs that will be offered during the spring semester. These workshops are being planned on the assumption that there might be numbers of students, U.S and foreign, who would like to learn more about each other's ideas, cultural backgrounds, differences and shared interests. It is also assumed that it could be useful to investigate the ways that stereotypes a particular cultural or national group has of others impede communication and interpersonal relationships. Finally, it is the belief of those planning the intercultural programs that a special effort should be made for the foreign students who will arrive on campus second semester to help them understand their new cultural environment.

Involved in making plans for the intercultural programs are a small number of persons drawn from the International Programs Office, Center for International Education, and Human Relations Center. At the session in the Campus Center they will outline what the programs will consist of and what they will aim at. Volunteering to lead the programs are Jacke Harris of the Human Relations Center, Bob Pearson, John Blacken, Dale Kinsley, Raymond Giles and Walt Johnson of the International Education Center, and Ann Silva of the International Programs Office.

Each program or workshop will be limited in enrollment. Each will have its own style and format. Each will include both American and foreign students. Both graduate and undergraduate students are eligible to participate. If you are a foreign student at UMass. and want to share your ideas on the U.S. and your home country, if you are an American student planning to go abroad next summer or next year and want to rap about what it's like to be a foreign student, or if you are an American student or foreign student and want to exchange views on why each can find it difficult having real communication with the other, come to the Campus Center tonight at 8:00 and sign up to be in an intercultural communications program in the spring.

Index Goes Liberal

A new policy has been established regarding dress for the senior portraits by the executive editors of the 1971 INDEX. Formal dress, coat and tie for men and the traditional drape for women, are no longer required. Dress is left to the individual's personal taste. The INDEX editors request some restraint, as wild attire detracts from the quality of the portrait.

The pictures are being taken this week, December 14-19, in the Norfolk Room on the second floor of the Student Union. All those students graduating in January or going on the ed block second semester should have their portraits taken during this time. Portraits for all other graduating seniors will be taken during second semester.

Flying Hatchets

You have to laugh sometimes at the intellectual elitists that permeate college campuses. You know the type. They sign New York Times Anti-War advertisements, write ten dollar checks for Biafran relief, read Partisan Review, wear their hair a little long, and in their self-satisfied way, sneer, mock, scorn, and try to destroy anyone who may be not so cultured, or may not have the same ideas of what culture is.

They are at work right now, trying to do a hatchet job on someone who does not want to play their phony game, who did something they thought not right, and who has tried to do something for his whole community.

Charlie Keenan, station manager of WFCR, the public radio station of Western Massachusetts, is currently being subjected to an inquisition, sanctioned by the Faculty Senate, because of a personnel change he instituted. I am not going to discuss that affair, although I have a definite idea of it, because I don't think it's my place to talk about internal personnel changes of any organization. I furthermore, don't think that the Faculty Senate has any right to take up the matter.

But I am going to gladly write about what Charlie Keenan has done for WFCR and for the community. In doing so, I will resist strong temptations to step into the gutter of vicious personality assassination, which Keenan's opposition has chosen.

WFCR used to be a little-listened to member station of the Eastern Educational network. It was listened to and directed solely toward those intellectual elite. It was in effect, musak for the snobs.

But when Keenan was appointed a little over a year ago, the network and the station were undergoing change. For the network had changed its name significantly to the Public Radio network.

The change makes no bones about the fact, that since public radio is paid for by all the public, it should be directed to as many parts of that public as can be done.

That has been done. WFCR presently produces "Que Tal Amigos", which was going off the air, Pre-Keenan, a program that is directed toward the large area Spanish speaking populations, especially in Springfield, Albany and Hartford. And the program has been widely acclaimed, to the extent that it will go on television in Hartford within the near future.

"Colors" a recently created program for the black community, a program incidentally, that was created over the strong objections of the departed liberal intellectuals, has also been widely acclaimed and is in the process of being syndicated for the entire Eastern Network.

The station has offered jazz programs, serious rock programs, children's shows, in depth news programming. And with all this, it still has provided over 70 hours a week of quality classical music programming, the thing that is supposedly being destroyed by the personnel change.

You could go on. But Charlie Keenan has instituted a general change of atmosphere at WFCR, which has resulted in extraordinarily good station morale, increased listeners, and a solid commitment to the community it serves.

As Keenan says, "We musy serve the whole community, and try to provide a voice for those many segments of the community that previously have not been heard. And I think we are only beginning to do the job."

But the hatchets are stilled bared and a person who seeks to help a community must still duck the blade.

Once Again Academic Freedom

Academic freedom is only a form whose content is determined by power. In the United States where power is mainly economic and this economic power is the virtual monopoly of very few corporations which are in turn controlled by very few individuals, the content of academic freedom becomes the needs of Corporate America. Under the regime of academic freedom, corporations have the right to buy research, thereby determining its direction, and the right to buy students, a purchase usually called "recruiting". In the United States academic freedom has become the ideological cover under which the university is controlled by the corporate rich.

The fact that academic freedom functions to cover corporate control of the university does not imply in the least that academic freedom should not be defended by radicals. Academic freedom is needed to protect dissenters on campus. Such protection or what Agnew might call the "coddling of radicals" is the price the ruling class pays for its ideological cover. It is a price, we must never fail to extract, if for no other reason than our own self-protection.

What we have to understand is the difference between form and content. The form, academic freedom, we defend. The present content of that freedom, corporate control, we oppose because it makes a sham of our freedom. But to fight the corporate content of academic freedom, we must find a power equal to their economic power. Such power exists when students and faculty act together as a mass movement with the goal of establishing their own democratic control of the university.

Let the May Strike serve as our example. Academic freedom was preserved-the Young Americans for Freedom were permitted without question to set up a table in the Student Union defending the invasion of Cambodia-but the content of that freedom was radically altered. Students set up their own classes in the form of strike workshops where they learned what was relevant to them, not to the corporations. Recruitment and ROTC, two of the main institutions by which corporate interests are served, were stopped. The University was run by a democratically elected strike committee of faculty and students, not by a Board of Trustees (For whom do they hold us in trust.).

What made possible the radical change in the content of academic freedom was the mass support the strike enjoyed on campus. True, this radical alteration of the University was for a bare three weeks, but to make it longer, we are going to have to build mass support not only on campus but off campus. That is the key to our future strategy; we must create a movement which has such massive support among students and non-students alike, that the corporate perversion of our freedom will be ended once and for all.

Happy Two Hundreth Birthday, Ludwig Von Beethoven

Today is Ludwig von Beethoven's two hundredth birthday. It is fair to say that awareness of this fact is directly traceable to one man, a man who for sixteen years has been of the brightest lights on the American Landscape. Charles Schultz, creator of Peanuts has made many people happy. To me this is something for which America owes the man the utmost thanks. I'd like to devote my column today to Peanuts. I feel safe to saying that Peanuts personalities are by now very widely known. Stars of stage and screen as well as daily newspapers and countless books, they are truly a part of our modern culture.

On the occasion of Beethoven's Birthday, it seems appropriate to start with Schroeder. I have to admire the artistic dedication he displays. We generally see Schroeder in only three situations: as a peripheral jock on Charlie Brown's losing teams, picketing to inform us as to how many shopping days remain until Beethoven's Birthday (the current figure is 365), or playing his toy piano. It is when Schroeder is playing the piano that I most enjoy him. Inevitably he must put up with an unwanted audience, an audience consisting of the most dislikeable person alive. Still, such is his dedication to his art that he has thus far resisted the temptation to belt her in the mouth. Truly a gentleman and a scholar, Schroeder.

The Van Pelt family provides a study in absolute contrast. On the one hand there is Linus. Linus is a fine example of the Aquarius personality. He is intellectual, kind, altruistic, truly one of nature's noblemen. The wisdom Linus utters in a week is more than most people can claim in a lifetime. That he does not win the most admired polls is as unjust as it is unimportant. It is no wonder that the others cannot share in Linus' belief in the Great Pumpkin. They lack both his higher vision and his purity of soul. There are not many men of his caliber.

On the other hand, we have his shrewish sister. Lucy Van Pelt is the kind of person I would cross the street to avoid. When she is not bothering Schroeder, she is picking on Linus, Snoopy, or Charlie Brown.

She is an obnoxiously disagreeable person. Whether it be her insane jealousy of an obvious better in her dealings with her younger brother, her wrath against seeing spontaneous joy when she sees Snoopy, or her know-it-all nosiness as relates to Charlie Brown, this girl has demonstrated for years that she is a royal pain. I don't like Lucy Van Pelt very much. It's a credit to her parents that they had another child after seeing their first turn out like her.

The flying ace is a big one. Schultz' affection for the "funny looking dog with a big brown nose" is obvious. Snoopy is always getting involved in long stories, whether he be lost behind enemy lines, leading Woodstock South for the winter (a disasterous venture of last month vivaled only by Tricky's POW raid, or playing Walter Mitty in the National Hockey League, Snoopy is a shameless showboat who will ham it up at the slightest provocation. He's cute, though, so he gets away with it.

Woodstock, the little bird who hangs with Snoopy, is a modern day Sisyphus. Life for Woodstock is analagous to playing opposite Deacon Jones when you're four feet tall and weight fifty pounds. Woodstock is always getting conked on the head when he goes out for a pass. He had to WALK to Florida because he's too small to fly. Yet he grins and bears it: he's a great little guy (bird?).

Finally I come to everyman's Everyman, the guy who could rewrite the Book of Job. Peppermint Patty calls him Chuck, but to the rest of the world he's known as Charlie Brown. He suffers. His love affair from a distance with the little redheaded girl is a classic tale of the self-destructive nature of shy people. His annual farce with Lucy Van Pelt, in which she offers to hold the ball for him to kick, then yanks it away in sadistic ecstacy, is a continued triumph of hope over experience. Yet Charlie Brown remains ever optimistic, though life deals him one cruel blow after another. We should all take inspiration from Charlie Brown, for he is truly a man of great fortitude. When our own troubles get us down, we should think of Charlie Brown. If you think you got troubles...

Charles Schultz' characters make people happy. I think that's great. Peace, Charles Schultz. That's my column. Peace.

PROTECTION OF MINORITY GROUPS from slander is taking group action at Brooklyn College. A story in a recent issue of KINGSMAN tells about "The Committee for a Group Libel Amendment" which is circulating petitions for a referendum to amend the Student Government constitution.

It reads, "No group or organization may libel, slander, or defame any racial, religious or ethnic group or incite to violence against them either through publications sponsored by the group or through policy or resolution endorsed by the group or through policy or resolution endorsed by the group."

The trick is now for the petition to win signatures of ten per cent of the student body for calling the referendum, and a vote of one-sixth to pass it.

Ah apatny, where is thy sting?

GRAFFITTI AT FRESNO STATE has been recorded in the campus newspaper, INSIGHT, by one Behroux Saba in a piece titled, "Student Sees Writing On Wall In Men's Room."

Among the goodies he has discovered, "Eat it, 5,000,000,000,000,000 can't be wrong" and "Better freak than Greek."

Also, F.S.C. (for Fresno State College) is taken to mean, "Fire, Santa Claus", while another wit admonishes, "Jesus Saves, Moses Invests."

MEANWHILE, at UMass, the campus police made their first arrest (at least the first made public) in a long series of bomb scare telephone calls).

The campus newspaper and administrators had been remarkably silent about some 50 calls the emptied classroom buildings, dormitories and offices since the beginning of the school year.

And the only hint to the campus community in the campus newspaper that the arrest had been made was a cryptic one-liner that had appeared in the "police log". The area newspapers made the announcement, complete with identification of the student arrested on the charge of "making a false report of explosives."

Managed news?

THE COMMERCIAL PRESS of the area also reported that some students sought refuge in local motels after seven different bomb threats in two days left 1,500 UMass students "shivering in 18-degree temperatures as police searched dormitories for explosive devices."

Better than panty raids?

SPEAKING OF DISTURBANCES, residents of men's dorms at Louisiana State have petitioned officials to take measures to curtail disturbances that "disregard the academic pursuit of fellow students," according to a page one piece in the DAILY REVEILLE.

Because of noise in the area of three dorms, "it is not feasible nor possible to engage in academic undertakings to properly rest one's body through the means of restful sleep," the petitioners said.

One solution offered is coed dorms, as one student noted that girls often instigate panty raids by phoning men and inviting them over.

Prep Schools' Money Tight

GILL - A plan for future operation of the Northfield and Mount Hermon Schools was outlined this week by administration officials in advance of the trustees meeting in January.

Two Companies

Howard L. Jones, president, said the report to the trustees will recommend separate dormitory coeducational campuses as has previously been discussed. The proposal calls for 150 girls to live on the Mount Hermon campus, and the same number of boys to live at Northfield. Special halls have been designated for the purpose.

The plan foresees an enrollment of 1050 students for the 1971-72 academic year, a decline of about 100 from the current figure.

Tuition is projected at $3750. Tuition at Mount Hermon presently is $3500 and at Northfield, $3600.

Financial aid, which amounts to nearly $1 million this year, will be held at the same per capita level. The payroll is expected to be reduced by 20 per cent. Normal attrition will take care of part of the reduction, but it was agreed there will be some hardships.

It has been agreed however, that no staff member will be asked to take a pay cut. Jones agreed that it reflects a form of "recession," stating costs keep rising while applications are down.

Receptions Planned

He said the reduction is an effort to take positive planned action to seek out the kind of student "we can serve best."

He also said that in January and February there will be 24 admissions receptions held in various New England cities. If the measures taken are effective, it may be possible to revise the estimates.

Arthur H. Kiendl, headmaster elect of the combined schools, announced numerous staff appointments. In closing he expressed optimism for the schools and for other independent schools with resources and ability to adjust to "new situations, new demands and the rigors of the present economy."

Something Else

To the Editor:

Friends, freaks, and fellow students: Are you tired of the kind of christmas parties that wreck your mind? Try something else. On Wednesday night, December 16, a 8 o:clock, a really together experience is taking place in the colonial lounge of the student union. This phenomenon known as College Life gives a view of college life as it can be rather than as it is and can really change your life. There will be entertainment and a door prize. There will be students telling of a life style that really works for them, based on a personal relationship with the greatest peace candidate of all time. There will be Boston University director Carl Galyon talking about Christmas as fact or fantasy. College Life is one Christmas party you can't afford to miss.

Tickets

To the Editor:

I have recently received another parking ticket. I parked in a certain lot knowing that it was illegal and I take responsibility for my offense. But what I cannot accept is the lack of logic and appropriateness behind the formation of some parking regulations. I am not in disagreement with the whole set up for allotting certain places for certain cars. I do object to the law's neglect of personal needs and daily necessities for getting around this huge campus. I commute by car to school and I have classes and meetings at different locations on the campus, yet I am allowed only one parking sticker. This means I can only legally park in my registered place (at the School of Education) and if I want to use the Boyden gym I have to drive all the way to campus, park my car a mile away and approach Boyden by waiting for a campus bus; then reverse the process to get home or elsewhere. This is bureaucratic and theoretical thinking and it wastes my personal and private time. I strongly object.

I would be more than willing to talk traffic officials about making certain regulations more reasonable. For example most cars do not move around campus during the day. Their owners only have business in one area. Why not experiment with 'stationary' and 'mobile' stickers whereby commuters and others who need to move around daily can do so. Even allowing only two stickers for mobile people would greatly improve the situation. There are probably enough such people to allow open parking spaces to occur every hour during class time (8:00 to 4:00) in every parking lot. I know when I park illegally now that it is relatively easy to find places to park; I find 10 to 20 empty places in most lots, if not more in the larger areas.

Since this is an educational institution, isn't this the place for seeking personal and reasonable solutions by negotiation and experimentation?

Sincerely,

RICHARD AMMON

Identity Crisis

To the Editor:

In reference to Don Glickstein's editorial on "WONDERING", I his next door neighbor took time out from my drug pushing, shooting, pimping, and urinating to write this letter. It seems that Glickstein himself suffers from an identity crisis which is common to many middle class adults. He views himself above and aloof from people deviating from his norm while not realizing that it is his failure and others that causes many people to act in this way. I'm speaking of the concept of interpersonal relations, where people interact and learn to deal with others effectively by recognizing their problems and apprehensions and accepting them at a common level. All the education in the world will not help people in Glickstein's condition unless they can learn to effectively interact with others. So Greenough will provide a new silver-lined home for the virginal, non-urinating Don Glickstein, to retire in at 10 o'clock and sleep peacefully forgetting about Project 10.

Honoring The Flag

To the Editor:

The Collegian article of Mon., Dec. 14 dealing with the Amherst College student arrested for wearing the American flag on the seat of his pants, reminded me of a recent article in the Boston Globe which described the arrest and sentencing of Martha Meyers, an Arlington High School student who had burned an American flag during a student demonstration last April.

Both students were fined and sentenced to jail terms. Both cases were appealed and new sentences issued: the Arlington girl was asked by the judge to "show her courage"--to march to Harvard Square carrying the court's 15 lb. flag. Martha accepted the "challenge". The Amherst College Junior accepted his new sentence also: he is to write an essay on the history of the American flag and "what it means to millions in this world"-- and then must read this essay to the next naturalization session in Northampton.

In both articles, the attitudes of the condemned toward their unusual punishment were never fully disclosed-- only their superficial acquiescence was reported. But it is the sentences, not the sentenced that most concern me.

The courts, which are at the center of our national experience, reflect the way in which our institutions attempt to impose an obsolete, repressive value system upon human energy that can be dealt with in no other way, given the terms of the institutions themselves. To suppose that such forced proclamations and hollow "Honor America" rhetoric will in any way improve the respect for and love of an America which for many has become an object of scorn, here and all over the world, is not only naive, but frightening. This behavior forces the assumption that by "honoring the flag" we are dealing with the institutions that this flag symbolizes.

This error tragically echoes in our schools. Rote learning rarely heightens consciousness.

Draft Counselor's Corner

It's Not Too Late To Reclassify

By Gilbert J. Salk
Staff Reporter

Let's cover the lottery one more time, even if it has been discussed several times already. Judging from the great number of questions I've been getting about it, things are still very unclear. Please. Save this, bring it home with you during vacation, and show it to your friends. It might save a life.

First, the following material applies only to those who were born before Jan. 1, 1951. You had a lottery number assigned to you in December of 1969, and are eligible to serve you priority year in 1970 (this year).

If you are I—A and your number is not called by your local board before midnight, Dec. 31, 1970, you have completed your eligibility year. There are two conditions which you must fulfill.

First, you must be I—A (or I—O or I—A—O). It is not too late to be reclassified. Technically, you have been reclassified as soon as your board receives a letter from your requesting that your deferment be dropped and that your classification be changed to I—A. Thus, you are eligible whether or not the board meets to formalize your reclassification. Be sure to send your letter Certified (not Registered) Mail, Return Receipt Requested. Keep a copy and staple your receipt to it when it comes back. This will be proof of the date when the board received your letter.

Second, your number must be higher than any the board has called for this year. No numbers over 195 are being called; your board may not have gotten that high. Check it out. If the highest number your board has called is 189, and your number is 190, you are safe. You should immediately write to your board requesting reclassification. This really means immediately! Don't play any wait-until-the-last-minute-games. You don't gain a thing, and Christmas mail slows things up. The board must receive your letter no later than Dec. 31 for you to be reclassified.

What happens once you're reclassified? You can, if you wish, request your II—S back when you register for second semester. In any case, you are automatically put into the second priority pool. In order for you to be drafted, the board must first call all 366 numbers in the 1971 pool, then return to where they left off this year and work up to your number. The odds are that the numbers will not go over 300 next year. so you are obviously safe.

Some important points: You do not have to be I—A for a full calendar year--1 day is sufficient as long as that 1 day is Dec. 31. You do not give up any chance for deferments by playing the lottery--if you qualify for them, you can get them at any time. The draft call can not suddenly be increased for December. Boards meet only once a month (most will meet this week) and they already have their calls for this month. The number they reach at this time will be the top number they reach for 1970.

If any of this is not clear, please get draft counseling before you go home for Christmas. Draft Counseling Services has an office on the second floor of the Student Union, and will have a literature and info table set up outside the Hatch the rest of this week. Use it.

Peace.

A Treat For Schroeder

The UMass Symphony Orchestra performs its opening concert of the season tonight.

Today is the two hundredth anniversary of Beethoven's birth.

In honor of the occasion tonight at 8:15 the UMass Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Ronald Steele will perform as their featured work Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major "Eroica".

Long considered one of the most monumental and powerful symphonies ever written, the work broke all eighteenth century traditions as it almost single-handedly opened new vistas in music.

Also on tonight's program will be Charles Ives, "The Unanswered Question." Ives was long neglected Twentieth century American composer whose recent revival of interest has placed him in the forefront of American composers.

Dwight Peltzer of the Music faculty will be piano soloist in Mozart Piano Concerto No. 12 in A Major, K.414, also on tonight's program.

The orchestra is made up of students of the Five Colleges and the concert is open to the public without charge.

Holiday Film Fare

School ends a week from today. The following is a quick review of some movies that are now playing or will be opening in Boston for the Holidays:

FIVE EAST PIECES
Jack Nicholson's new film, in which he demonstrates he is truly a fine actor. The story of a troubled young intellectual who goes to work at an oilfield. Playing at Abbey Two.

M*A*S*H
If you still haven't seen M*A*S*H, it might well be worth your while to do so this vacation. Donald Sutherland as Kawkeye Pierce, Elliot Gould as Trapper John MacIntyre, and Sally Kellerman as Hotlips Houlihan give great performances. One of the funniest movies in years. At the Charles Cinema.

WUSA
Adapted by Robert Stone from his novel "A Hall of Mirrors", this film stars Tony Perkins and the Newmans. An alcoholic disc jockey sells out to a fascist Ne Orleans radio station, where the patriotism is thicker than the accents.

WHERE'S POPPA?
George Segal and Ruth Gordon are the stars of Carl Reiner's "black comedy". It's hard to get rid of Momma, but Sonnie boy tried his best, to no avail.

CC Music Room Opening Soon

By PAT SUPRENANT
Fine Arts Staff

Music, slides, and movies will be available to students next semester in the Music Room located on the concourse level of the Campus Center.

Music ranging from classical to hard rock will be on file along with speeches of the Distinguished Visitors Series and any underground work the Campus Center can obtain. Students will also be able to listen to their own records and tapes. Twenty-eight stations with head phones will be the arrangement. Here students have eleven channels from which to make a selection.

According to Thaddeus Debrowski, Technical Supervisor of the Campus Center, "because of the limited twenty-eight stations, we will have to develop some kind of scheduling in an effort to accomodate everyone."

There will be four stations per round coffee table with chairs that match the decor of the building. Lawn chairs and lights will be set up during the summer in the court yard connecting the reading room and music room.

A high brightness screen where area photographers and students can show their slides and films will be set up. According to Debrowski, "The slides and films will be shown to intensify the sound stimulation."

According to the original specifications it was proposed that students be able to tape their own music. "But we are not sure now whether the equipment allows for this," he said.

Concern for the security and safety will be critical due to the expense of the equipment. The room will be completely staffed by students, and there charge for admission.

"If students have any suggestions for title selection of tapes drop them in the Campus Center suggestion box," Debrowski added.

Dukakis To Be In SBA Colloquium

Michael Dukakis, Democratic candidate for Lt. Governor last November, will be the featured speaker at an SBA colloquium entitled "A Critical Review of the New Massachusetts Auto Insurance Law" today at 3:30 in room 120 of the School of Business Administration. Dukakis is known as the "father" of the insurance legislation.

Also speaking will be Richard Hartzler, professor of insurance law at UMass, and David Carson from the Hartford Insurance Company. Hartzler will speak on the working of the present legal system and Carson will review criticism directed at the new law.

Following the speakers a question and answer period will be held. The program is open free of charge to the University community.

Wrestlers Host Strong Crimson

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The undefeated UMass wrestling team will face its first big test of the young season tonight when it hosts Harvard in a 7:30 encounter. The meet has been moved to the cage to accomodate the expected large crowd and will be preceeded by a JV meet beginning at 6:00.

Harvard brings a 2-1 dual meet record into the contest. The Crimson have recorded wins over Virginia, 23-8, and Franklin and Marshall, 20-16, while their only loss has come at the hands of William and Mary. The Crimson have also won the Greater Boston Wrestling tourney, over such schools as BU, BC, MIT, Northeastern, Tufts and Brandeis. Harvard wrestlers won nine individual championships out of ten weight classes and the tenth man came in second place.

UMass coach Homer Barr is definitely concerned with Harvard. "They have the advantage on us because they have wrestled more times and are probably in better shape," the coach said. Barr also feels that the Crimson will be psyched up for the meet because "they're considering us as their biggest meet in New England this year."

Barr rates the Crimson even with Yale, but behind Princeton in the Ivy League and on even par with Springfield as far as New England teams go. This should mean trouble for the Redmen since Springfield has been number one in New England wrestling for about 21 straight years.

The leading Harvard wrestler is Mark Fowler at 167 lbs. Fowler should prove to be an interesting opponent for UMass' Tom Young, who is making his first start of the year after winning the New England championship last year. Barr said that the Redmen must win in the lightweights because this is where Harvard is the weakest.

Last year the Redmen beat Harvard, 26-13, but this year the final will probably be much closer and may even be reversed. Barr feels that the first four or five bouts will determine the trend of the match and hopes the Redmen can get out in front early before Harvard's heavier wrestlers take to the mat.

Kent Mignocci has moved down to 158 lbs. to make room for Young in the Redman lineup. Dave Reynolds has moved back to 126 lbs. and senior Phil Davis will make his initial appearance of the year at 134 lbs. after recovering from an injury. The rest of the lineups are:

UMass	WT.	Harvard
Nick DiDomenico	118 lbs	Galeski
Dave Reynolds	126 lbs.	Manswhich
Phil Davis	134 lbs.	Henson
Sheldon Goldberg	142 lbs.	Peters
Clay Jester	150 lbs.	Coleman

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Libra woman seldom compromises on principles. She seeks to be fair in as many ways as possible — she refuses to go against her own beliefs. This makes it difficult for her to please too many persons. Some claim she is overly sensitive. But she also is sensitive to the needs of others. She can be gracious and ginorous. She seldom is coarse. Gemini men find her physically attractive. She often marries men born under Aries.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Not so good for speculation. Conserve funds. Consolidate gains. Fresh point of view proves helpful. Romance is very much in picture. Stress originality. Shake off one who leans on you.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Avoid tendency to permit impulsive actions to create dilemma. Think before you act. Caution should be keynoted. One who offers to share knowledge is sincere. Respond accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Hold off on unnecessary journeys. Avoid trying to be at too many places. Relatives may be argumentative. Maintain sense of humor. This could be your greatest asset now — act accordingly.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Follow through on plans. Otherwise, you could suffer financial reversal. Be aware of details. Check policies, appointments, special accounts. Care now prevents future problems.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Cycle remains high but, irritant from past reappears. Be flexible. State needs in forthright manner. You don't have to give until it hurts. Know this and conduct yourself accordingly.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Feverish activity will not replace careful planning. Throwing caution aside results in delay needless expense. Key to measure moves. Reunite with family member. It will benefit you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Don't get caught in middle of dispute among friends! What starts as informed debate could end in shambles. Word to wise should be sufficient. Take no unnecessary chances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Plenty of action is featured. You get things done. You receive dividends for past efforts, investments. Member of opposite sex pays meaningful compliment. Go all out — nothing halfway.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): What you thought was hidden may be exposed to harsh light. Be prepared. Undercover activity is not favored. What you do do openly. Finish specific area of ultimate goal.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): You may be tempted to overspend. Key is to take stock. Know what it is you really seek. Otherwise, your search could prove costly. Check with mate, business partner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): One in position of authority takes action to aid your cause. Circumstances turn your way; door of opportunity is opened. Act in manner which depicts confidence.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): You receive encouraging message from afar. Travel aspects are stimulated. Write and advertise. Make known your views. Help one who has been good to you in past.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you tend to make life complicated for yourself. Now you have chance to clarify matters. You will be released from heavy pressure, obligation. You get a rare, second chance. You can start with clean slate. Do so. Don't attempt to hang on to past. Look to a brighter future.

Hoopsters Earn 74-68 Verdict Over UConn

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

STORRS, CONN.-In a tense, tight basketball contest, before 4,447 loud fans, UMass defeated the University of Connecticut, 74-68, to remain unbeaten at 5-0 and to take over sole possession of first place in the Yankee Conference, as the Redmen now stand 4-0 in league play.

Two very big players for UMass were its co-captains, junior Julius Erving and senior Ken Mathias. Erving was the dominant figure in the game, grabbing many rebounds and keeping a steady hand on the overall movements of the Redmen. His totals for the night were 27 points and 20 rebounds, making him the games top boardman.

And Mathias had his biggest and best game of the young season. His main contributions to the win came in his rebounding as he latched on to 11 caroms, many of them in tight situations. He also tallied 15 points, most of them on under-the-basket hoops.

Also playing important roles for the winners were the junior guards Mike Pagliara and John Betancourt. They have developed into quite a tandem after playing two pressure games, against Rhode Island and here tonight, in the last three Redman outings. Not to be counted out are Rich Vogeley and Chris Coffin. The later was his usual aggressive self on defense, but when he got into foul trouble, Vogeley was there to fill his shoes and make some big baskets.

For UMass, it was a wonderful team effort.

For UConn, one name really stood out. Bob Staak. He was the game's high scorer with 32 points and was amazingly hot for the Huskies. Also performing well for UConn was Bob Boyd who scored 23 points.

Staak was shooting great over the first three quarters of the game. It was when he cooled off, although ever so slightly, that the Redmen captured a late four point lead that they were able to ride to victory.

Over the last six and a half minutes of the game, UMass' lead seemed to fluctuate between two and four points. It was a two point 66-64 edge with 1:49 to go. Mathias was at the line for a one-and-one situation and made the first. His second shot was missed, but Erving grabbed the rebound and was quickly tied up for a jump ball.

UMass won the ensuing toss-up and attempted to work the ball around and eat up time. However, Erving put up a hasty 12 footer. It missed, but Mathias went high for a clutch rebound. The Redmen called time with 1:13 showing on the scoreboard clock.

11 seconds back into the action Erving was fouled. He was faced with one of those crucial one-and-one situations. He hit for two and the Redmen were up by five, 69-64. The Huskies played over anxious ball from here on out, allowing the visitors to ice the game from the charity stripe. Five UMass free throws could only be answered by two Boyd baskets, and the contest ended on a 74-68 count.

In the early going Erving, Coffin and Mathias were playing the best for the Redmen, offsetting the offensive power of Staak and Boyd. Neither team could look over its shoulder; it was just plain nip 'n' tuck.

By half time the UMass backcourt had come alive, and Vogeley had hit a key hoop in Coffin's absence. The Redmen held a 35-32 lead at the half.

The second half was a carbon copy of the first, still it was a team effort by UMass that made the difference. Staak just couldn't keep up his outstanding pace, and the Redmen earned a very big victory.

HOOP NOTES-Right here a tip of the hat must go to Jack Leaman, head coach of UMass...He brought a team that starts four juniors into a foreign arena against a team that starts four seniors and one that is known for its terrific play at home, and he came away with a very important win...UConn is now second in the YanCon as its mark is 1-1...Mathias' 15 points were second best for UMass...Staak shot 50%, 14 for 28...Boyd was second high scorer for UConn with 23 points...Leaman will be the featured speaker at today's Varsity M Club luncheon, and this should make it an interesting affair.

Skaters Come To Life In Middle Frame To Top AIC, 9-5

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Dan Reidy and Pat Keenan combined for a total of 12 points last night as the UMass hockey team made it six in a row, 9-5, against American International College before another large gathering at Orr Rink. Reidy had two goals and three assists, and Keenan scored four times to go along with his three assists.

The Redmen were somewhat flat in the first period, particularly in their passing. They found themselves behind at the end of one after a Reidy goal on a powerplay had been countered with two quick goals by AIC late in the period. Bill Ketchum tied the game for the Yellow Jackets and Chris Serino put them ahead at 19:30 when his backhander found its way past P.J. Flaherty.

In the second period it was virtually all UMass. They put the pressure on AIC goalie Roland Depew right from the opening face-off of the second frame and tied the game when Reidy scored his second goal at 3:30 in a flurry in front of the AIC net with Depew apparently screened on the play. Keenan picked up his first assist on this goal.

About five minutes later Chico Shea went in alone on Depew, and his rather weak backhand trickled through the sprawling goalie's pads. This put the home team ahead 3-2.

AIC once again came back to tie it, however, on a beautiful play. Winger Clem Morrison came down the right side with only Brian Sullivan back. He faked the shot and made both Sullivan and Flaherty commit themselves then fired a perfect pass to Paul Pacific streaking down left-wing, and Pacific drilled it into the open left side.

UMass then tallied twice within 25 seconds, the first goal coming on a good individual effort by Keenan as he skated by defenseman Kevin Collins and slapped it by Depew, and the second when Dennis Grabowski threaded the puck into the far corner.

Late in the period, Flaherty suffered an injury to his collarbone when he absorbed a blast from the point. He finished out the period but sat out the third with sophomore Peter Erickson replacing him.

Jack Edwards increased the UMass lead to 6-3 at 3:44 of the third period when he put a backhander by Mike Zagula who had replaced Depew. Zagula was hindered by his defenseman in front and could not be faulted on the goal. Reidy and Keenan again figured in the scoring as they both picked up assists on Edwards' goal.

A good wrist-shot by Morrison hit the top corner of the cage past Erickson at 9:16 of the period to bring the Yellow Jackets within two goals.

Keenan made it 7-4 less than a minute later on a powerplay goal with Edwards and Reidy getting the assists.

A shot by Wes McKee somehow got through Erickson's pads after he was set up about fifteen feet out by Wally Stupak and Morrison.

It was the second hat-trick of the year for Keenan as he lit the lamp for the third time in the game at 12:21 on a powerplay goal with Dave Forbes in the penalty box for AIC with a charging penalty.

This made the score 8-5 and set the stage for Keenan's fourth goal of the night at 14:27. A shot from the point by defenseman Don Lowe had bounced off the side of the AIC net, and Keenan was there to knock in the rebound.

BLUE—LINE BANTER...One of the highlights of the night was a fight of some length and vigor that broke out in the stands late in the third period. If you bother to keep score on such things, the men in blue won 2-0 as they enjected two fans....The Redmen skated fairly well in the last two periods and held the territorial advantage for most of the game as is clearly shown by the fact that AIC managed only 19 shots on net against 45 by UMass.....AIC was plagued by disorganization throughout the game. They were especially sloppy on powerplays as UMass scored five goals with the Yellow Jackets shorthanded.

Three Senior Trackmen Best Ever To Compete For UMass

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Reporter

Track is one of those sports which does not receive the wide fan appeal; of say football, basketball, or baseball. The athletes who compete in the various events know this for a fact and welcome any spectator support that might come their way. So regardless of how small the following may be, satisfaction is derived from knowing that the element of interest exists.

Yet in the case of the UMass tracksters in recent years, the conditions imply haven't encouraged fan participation. Although bolstered with such phenominal senior standouts as Ron Wayne, Eddie Arcaro, and Dave Evans, the team has not been equipped with a track and has been lacking in facilities. Consequently this solid trio of record holders has never known the cheers of fellow UMass students.

In view of the situation head track coach Ken O'Brien offered these remarks: "These three guys are probably the best ever to perform within the circles of UMass track at their own respective events. Despite playing hard for the Redmen and setting individual records as well, they have never had the opportunity to compete in front of their class mates."

"In fact we haven't had a track to run on, indoor or outdoor, for the past five years. It's remarkable how these boys have accomplished it all without the benefit of one. But this year for the first time we'll have a brand new track which is adjacent to the varsity baseball field. Our initial home meet is scheduled for April 11th and finally it will allow some people a chance to view what these athletes are doing."

Wayne and UMass Cross Country have no doubt become, synonymous when reference is made to this past fall. The harrier sparkplug was unbeaten in dual meets, smashed six course records, captured both the Yankee Conference and New England Crowns, and finished 48th in the Nationals. Besides this the club captain paced his mates to YanCon and NE titles. with this much going for him there needn't be any explanation as to why he reigns supreme in his distance specialty on the track scene.

"Ron is probably our most seasoned performer, declares Coach O'Brien. "He's established a model of team leadership through example and has done it through a quiet, internal confidence. I think that's a mark of all good distance runners.

"He has been one of our leading scorers consitently for the last two seasons and this has been a result of doubling and sometimes tripling in dual meets. I'd say that he's able to do this week after week because of his complete dedication to running which elaborates on his workouts 365 days a year, twice a day maybe."

Wayne, a product of Brockton High, accumulated seven letters in his schoolboy span, competing in track, cross country, and basketball.

Asked if he intends to continue running upon graduation Wayne responded: "As for my future once I leave UMass, I've been invited to join the University of Florida track club. It's members, who are among the best in the country, have been in the Olympics and have been National AAU champs themselves.

I feel this would be an excellent opportunity to continue my education grad school wise and increase my running on a higher level."

Just as the lineman of football goes unnoticed, track's big boy doesn't get much notoriety either. Although his 74 points were tops on the varsity squad a year ago, Arcaro still looms as the unnerailed member

As O'Brien puts it: "I guess you could call Eddie the unsung herofor the success of the UMass track team. At a school that has been known traditionally as a school of runners, he has set records in the throwing events that have gone unnoticed.

"In pursuit of his goals in track the strong man of the team often finds himself shoveling off the shot put circle infront of Boyden in knee deep snow. His year round training and dedication was rewarded last year when he placed in three different events at the YanCon meet."

Arcaro, who excells in the shot, discus, and hammer throw, cultivated a skill in track in three campaigns while attending Medford High.

The three year veteran commented that he never experienced competing in a home track meet since his sophomore year in high school adding: "That new track is certainly going to be a boost to our program. Before we had to work in separate practice sessions, and when you got on the bus to go to the meet you didn't know half the guys-this was really a hinderance. But things will be different this spring. The track should help bring us together and make us a better track team."

Hardluck hampered Evans is perhaps the finest middle distance runner ever to put on a UMass uniform. And if he manages to put together an injury-free year, he, like Wayne, could be assumed as a national class athlete.

O'Brien is confident in Evans' prospects this year, but also realistically reflects his career course.

"Although he holds school records as well as being a member of three of the record breaking relay teams, I think he has yet to meet his potential. Each year that he has run has been cut short by injury

"Last year he was on the way to his best success after placing 4th in the IC4A 1000 yard run. But he then substained a severe ham string pull which sidelined him for the spring campaign."

A graduate of Masconmet Regional High (Topsfield, Mass.), Evans combined eight letters in cross country and track.

Evans best describes track as an individual sport. "You're forced to rely on yourself almost completely. It developes a sense of individuality and independence. If you are at all going to be successful, you have to have these things. It's individual accomplishment that keeps you going."

Frosh Hockey

The UMass freshman hockey team gained its first victory of the season over the weekend with a 4-1 win over the UConn freshmen. The record for the Redman frosh now stands at 1-3.

Leading the way for the Redmen were Tom Lyons with one goal, Jay Connors with a pair of goals and Bob Edward with his fourth lamplighter of the season.

The game was marked with many penalties and UMass skated short-manned for much of the game.

John Binkosky and Charlie Sheriden split the goal tending duties for the Redmen and both game up with fine efforts.

Dukakis Explains New Insurance Law

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

Michael Dukakis, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor last November, explained the new Massachusetts "no-fault auto insurance law" at the 37th annual colloquium series sponsored yesterday afternoon by the School of Business Administration.

Associate Professor Richard Hartzler, of the UMass business law department, and David Carson, Vice President and Actuary of the Hartford Insurance Company, were also featured speakers.

Background on the legal system within which the present techniques for settling conflicts between individuals involved in automobile accidents was provided by Professor Hartzler. Dukakis told the group just what the bill means, while Carson offered various criticisms charged against the new law.

The basis for the law of negligence was the assumption that every individual acts with no risk to the property of others, and all others are expected to act likewise, Hartzler said. He explained that this principle is used to place blame on a person in an auto accident, which is necessary if the injured party is to collect under the old system.

"Every person can control his behavior, and he is negligent if he fails to act in control," Hartzler continued. He said that to prove that fault exists one must rely upon the courts.

Legal representation in auto negligence is a very lucrative field, Hartzler declared. He said that with the burden on the plaintiff to prove fault, one needs a lawyer, and this involves the high costs contingent to quality representation or outside settlement.

The system of placing blame on individuals in order to collect has resulted in overpayment in small claims and underpayment in cases of severe injuries and losses, Hartzler concluded.

He said the discrepancies were due to the outdated system of compensation developed 200 years ago, at a time when 90% of the litigation in court were land disputes.

Dukakis explained that the basic protection insurance of the new no-fault bill that he "fathered" compensated on the basis of economic loss, paid by one's own insurance company, rather than proving an individual at fault.

"The advantage of such a system is that the involved people don't pick the threshold at which the others can be sued, he said. The new bill bases threshold on the amount of reasonable medical and hospital expenses, he continued. Compensations up to $500. per individual, with a total of $2,000. can be collected from the victim's own insurance company it was explained.

The $500. maximum is not expected to be taken advantage of because 80% of personal injuries don't amount to greater than $200. Dukakis said. He feels certain, however, that medical and legal associations will make efforts to inflate expenses.

"No matter what the deficiencies and drafting difficulties are, it seems clear that never again in this State will we return to the litigation system," Dukakis concluded, "because the 45% increase in the insurance cost would not be acceptable."

He added that the bill had saved motorists seventy-five to a million dollars.

The fact that the federal government would impose a system if the state did not act effectively also makes a return to the old system unlikely, stated Dukakis. The legislature would only correct inadequacies, in the case of the Supreme Court finding the bill unconstitutional, he said, rather than reject it.

Carson outlined the various criticisms towards the bill listing three different stands.

"Virtually no insurance systems agree that the torte system is right," he said, "because it is obvious to those who attempt to work in it that it is overburdened and expensive." He said there are those who believe the no fault bill to be wrong, though.

Some critics support the concept of no fault but believe the compromises are still too close in principle to the torte system, he continued.

Carter said he fears that these two groups of critics may eventually unite to oppose the third group which wholly accepts no fault, but believes the bill to be burdened with administrative handicaps, such as provisions for unusual claims.

Following the presentations of material about the no fault insurance bill, discussion was opened to the audience. Most debate centered about the need for the insurance reform and the cost of insurance in general.

Of interest to students would be the inquiry concerning the rates of college-age drivers as a result of this law. Carter said that the rates would decline, due to lower claim costs, but a higher proportional rate would be maintained because the group is still involved in more accidents.

Walgren Trial Continues Today

The trial of Eric Walgren, former UMass student, continues in Superior Court today at 2:00 PM.

Walgren was charged with disturbing the peace, trespassing, and assault and battery stemming from incidents last Spring in the infirmary.

One day last May, Walgren visited Geri Laventis, a friend who was admitted to the infirmary in an emergency case. He first left the building without incident about 6 PM when informed by an officer that visiting hours were not in effect and he would have to leave. At 6:45, 15 minutes after visiting hours started, Walgren received a visitors pass to see Mrs. Levantis. A police officer then issued a trespass order requiring Walgren to leave University property within 30 minutes. Charges were pressed when Walgren refused to leave on this second order. He says he felt at the time that he was there legally "in that lawful conduct can't be made into crime by a policeman."

Walgren claimed that the assault charges, added 2 months after the original charges, were based on his placing his hand on the shoulder of a nurse while calling the police officer a pig.

Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, and Dr. Thomas McBride will appear as witnesses for the defense at tomorrow's proceedings. The nurse testified today.

Summing up his feelings on the case, Walgren said "I'm being prosecuted not for any crime that I've done, but for my political beliefs against the war. The University is prosecuting me in order to intimidate me from exercising my first amendment rights to organize against the University."

Walgren also cited attempts before the trial of District Attorney Grife and Chancellor Tippo to make a deal because the Administration freely says they don't want me there."

Bruce Balboni, a former President of the Senate, sat back and relaxed as he bemusedly watched the proceedings of last evening's Student Senate meeting.

Senator Jack Little tried last night to have the Senate appropriate $500 to the UMass Craftsmen's Guild to use for operating expenses. The motion was sent back to committee for further study, as to who is to be paid a salary by the Guild.

Senator Bill Abbott (left) was joined by a member of the "Room to Move" drug center in explaining to the Senate the function of the center and how the $7,950. appropriated by the Senate last evening would be spent.

Society's Mistake: Not Dealing With Issue

Russell: Raps Lack Of Participation

By DEBBIE FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

Bill Russell who led the Boston Celtics to 11 championships rejected his label as a basketball player last night and spoke on everything from Vice-president Spiro Agnew to marijuana last night in the S.U. ballroom.

Classifying himself as "a man who plays basketball" rather than "a basketball player," Russell claimed that one of the biggest mistakes society makes is "to label and dismiss without dealing with the issue."

Russell, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program; advised students to think and participate, stating that thinking without "participating is a tragedy" while "participating without thinking is a danger."

Throughout his speech, Russell emphasized togetherness and responsibility.

"Things are not right for anyone until they are right for everyone," he said.

"No citizen is free," he added, "unless all citizens are free."

"You and I are part of the establishment...just by being alive," the former player-coach said.

"We are all responsible for every person who dies in Vietnam."

"We are all responsible," Russell continued, "for every kid who goes to bed hungry."

The response he suggested was acting "out of enlightened self-interest."

In travelling about campuses, Russell said he looked for "patriots," but not the type "with bumper stickers on his car Volkswagen saying America, Love it or Leave it."

"I want someone to say 'I care enough to expose myself to personal danger.' "

Russell noted that two months after the U.S. put men on the moon in less than their ten year time limit, President Nixon, ("a guy who watches football games"), stated he did not believe in instant integration. This, he said, was despite the over 15 year lapse since the 1954 Supreme Court ruling on school desegregation.

Turning to the drug issue, the former Celtics star pointed out that there has been a drug problem among the poor for many years. The problem has become prominent, he claimed, because the same dope peddler that was in the poor areas now entered white suburbia.

In rejecting drugs "including alcohol," Russell said "I am not opposed to getting high. I get high on people."

Three new draft regulations were offered by Russell who claimed that in nineteen years one has "not lived or loved enough to go to war." Draftees should be at least forty years of age, and earn at least $10,000 per year, he suggested. Top draft priority would be given to those running for and elected to political office under his proposed regulations.

Prejudices, the black athlete said, are part of having tastes and normal human characteristic. "Having them," however he said, "is one thing while the "reactions to them are something else."

While rightist organizations such as the Ku Klux Klan and Minuteman have stored weapons, Russell pointed out, only the Black Panthers get killed.

Although "into a lot of things" including Black Power, Russell denied hating whites. "Hating is a full time job," he added, claiming that the opposite of love is not hate but indifference.

On the welfare issue, Russell classified the oil depletion allowance, agricultural subsidies, and the SST (supersonic transport) as parts of welfare.

He noted the bad image of welfare recipients and pointed out that the majority of people on welfare are whites. Ten cents of every welfare dollar, he said goes to the recipient while the remainder are administration costs.

While Mississippi's Senator Eastland gets paid $17,000 per month in agricultural subsidies, people complain about the eight dollars per month which a poor child on welfare gets for food in the same state.

Education he cited as the "foundation used to think for yourselves." Turning to student athletes, Russell said that a school should not admit anyone who it did not want to participate fully in all aspects of campus life.

"This is the greatest generation of college students," Russell said.

If Vice-president Spiro Agnew's alma mater University of Baltimore, had higher standards, the nation might have had a bricklayer, Russell jabbed. Agnew, Russell quipped, was "the first guy to go on a panty raid and come back with a jock strap."

Russell stated, however, that Agnew has "done more for religion than Billy Graham," because now more people are praying for the president.

On a more serious note, the all-time NBA center, said "this is the most important time in the history of this nation because we have reached a saturation point in material goods."

"We've shown we could consume...it is now time to show not how to make a living but how to live," said Russell.

He concluded by advising the audience to have respect and be happy.

He reminisced only briefly about basketball including briefly remarks about some memorable moments in coaching.

Having self-respect and being happy were suggested to the audience by Russell in concluding remarks.

Senate Freezes Senior Class Funds

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

Senior Class funds were frozen by the Student Senate last night, because of what Senator James Bouin called "illegally constituted" spending by the class of '71 Executive Council.

Bouin, also the Treasurer of the Senior Class, presented the motion which will temporarily stop any member of the senior class from spending the class money.

The Senate also appropriated $7,950. for the "Room to Move" drug drop-in center, passed an act setting procedure for dorms to remain open during vacations and approved a proposal which will enable students to receive modular credits for a wide variety of studies and activities.

A motion to provide funds for a "birth control booklet" was postponed for one week.

In light of the recent controversy concerning major concerts, the Senate charged the sub-committee on Class Government to develop a better system for running them.

The freezing of Senior Class funds was called for by Senator Bouin because the Executive Council of the class, which does the spending, is "illegally constituted." According to the act which regulates class government, the Council must have 50 members on it. At this time, according to Bouin, only 44 Seniors are technically on the Council, and only 15-20 have been attending the most recent meetings. He pointed out that this small number of students is appropriating thousands of dollars and doing this without "any real constituency."

Of the $70,000 budgeted to the class this year, Bouin said, "I don't want to spend any money." He reported to the Senate that he has, through his jurisdiction as Class Treasurer, tried to freeze the funds on his own. He said that he has, however, received word that money is still being spent, in spite of various measures he has taken to stop such action.

Several Senators posed the question of whether the Senate could legally freeze the funds of a class. A move to commit the motion to freeze the budget to two committees of the Senate for one week's study was defeated. The motion then passed which freezes the funds until it is demonstrated to the Senate that the manner in which the class' money is being spent is legal.

The Senate spent three hours in regular business prior to dealing with the Senior Class funds. It appropriated $7,950. to the "Room to Move" drug center, to be spent mainly in paying the salaries of 18 people. Opposition was voiced to the payment of salaries to members of a student organization but it did not prevail.

Currently, 10 staff members are on salary at the center, with their salaries paid for out of $20,000 given the group by the office of the Dean of Students. $6,750 of the funds appropriated last night will pay the salaries of 18 staffers at the rate of $1 an hour for a 25 hour work week, for 15 weeks.

In other action, the Senate supported a proposal for the establishment of a University Special Credits program, as drawn up by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Senate. The Senate unanimously supported the plan which will enable students to receive modular credits for a wide variety of studies and activities, and it urged that it be implemented in the academic year 1971-72.

The Senate also last night charged its Student Government Activities subcommittee on class government to seek "a workable alternative" to the existing groups which run the major concerts on campus. The subcommittee is to develop a better coordinated and more efficient system, to be reported out by February 24, 1971.

By adding a new section onto a recent Senate bill concerning the use of dorms during vacations, the Senate made provision for any dorm which wishes to remain open for only its residents. The earlier bill had dealt only with dorms being used during vacations by outside groups. The new section allows students to stay in their dorms "provided that the house presents a security proposal (approved by a majority of its residents) to the area co-ordinator for his approval at least two weeks before the vacation period."

Opponents of the measure unsuccessfully argued against its bypassing of the Area Governments when it comes to consideration of the security proposal.

The committee compiling the birth control booklet is checking its legality at this time. The Senate was informed that there is a possibility that as much as 80% of the planned material is illegal.

The Senate was still meeting at the Collegian's deadline.

Senate Passes Measure Limiting Aid To Cambodia

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate approved a new U.S. aid program for Cambodia Wednesday, passing a bill containing limitations on American assistance after cracking through parliamentary readblocks of outmanned opponents.

By a roll call vote of 72 to 22, it passed and sent to conference a $544.2 million foreign aid authorization bill after rejecting, 61 to 33, a move by Sen. Mike Gravel, D Alaska, to delete $155 million of the $255 million for aid to Cambodia.

Gravel and Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D Ark., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, abruptly dropped delaying tactics against the aid measure after Sen. James B. Allen, D Ala., seized the floor in a parliamentary thrust and served notice he would force a vote on a move to table-and thus kill-Gravel's amendment.

"We have alerted the public to what is going on," Gravel told a reporter in explaining why he decided against further delaying tactics.

Enactment of the aid measure eliminated one possible barrier to adjournment of the 91st Congress which goes out of office legally on Jan. 3.

But threats of filibusters-extended debate in senatorial parlance-still hung over at least three other measures: the Department of Transportation appropriation bill containing $210 million for the supersonic transport; the $66.6 billion defense money bill in which Senate House conferees watered down a Senate ban on U.S. combat ground troops for Laos, Cambodia and Thailand; and the massive Social Security trade welfare bill.

Defense Cutbacks Foreseen By Laird

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congressional cuts in the defense budget will force additional base closings, manpower reductions and ship layups early next year and be more severe than previously planned, the Pentagon said Wednesday.

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced spending will be slashed $800 million during the next six months.

The action is being taken, Laird said, to make up for the $2.1 billion trimmed from defense appropriations by House Senate conferees which agreed Tuesday on a $66.6 billion bill.

Pentagon officials said the $2.1 billion will mean a reduction in actual spending of about $800 million during the remainder of the 1971 fiscal year which ends June 30.

The first cuts will be in the areas of operations and maintenance and will mean among other things fewer ship steaming days and fewer air flights because this is where it will have an immediate impact, these officials said.

"These cuts will increase the risks to our national security," Laird declared in astatement read to newsmen by Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim.

"In addition," Laird said, "it will be necessary...to go forward promptly with additional manpower reductions, additional civilian job reduction, base closings, and reductions throughout the country, and we will also need to reduce further the number of Navy ships."

Friedheim said specific cases and numbers would be announced in January and would be in addition to cuts previously scheduled but not yet announced as part of the Pentagon's long range economy moves to meet a budget squeeze.

Since the Nixon administration assumed office in January 1969, the Pentagon has closed or reduced operations at 849 bases worldwide. The civilian payroll has been trimmed by 271,000 to 1.6 million. The armed forces have been slashed from a Vietnam war peak of 3.5 million to about 2.9 million, the figure originally planned for June 30, 1971. "It is now obvious we will go below that figure," Friedheim said. The reported figure is 2.7 million.

The Navy has sent nearly 200 ships to scrap or mothballs, reducing the fleet to 704 ships as of Nov. 30 from almost 900 two years ago.

Army Spies On Senator

WASHINGTON (AP) - Army intelligence agents have spied on Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson III, former Gov. Otto Kerner and about 800 other civilians in Illinois alone, Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. said Wednesday.

Ervin a North Carolina Democrat who heads the Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights, said his information was supplied by a former Army agent who was assigned to political surveillance in Illinois.

"The Army investigated those men during their campaigns for office and while they were in office," said Ervin.

Ervin disputed earlier claims by the military that investigations of civilians were limited to those who demonstrated a penchant for violence or other illegal conduct.

"It was enough," he said in a statement, "that they opposed or did not actively support the government's policy in Vietnam or that they disagreed with domestic policies of the administration, or that they were in contact or sympathetic to people with such views."

Aside from Stevenson and Kerner, Ervin said, the Illinois target list of the 113th Military Intelligence Group - with jurisdiction over the Midwest - included Democratic Rep. Abner Mikva and a host of state and local officials, political contributors, newspaper reporters, lawyers and church figures.

Kerner, now a federal judge, headed the presidential commission on violence which submitted a report that stirred some controversy.

A spokesman said the Army is gravely concerned by the reports and is looking into them. He added that Army policy emphatically prohibits collection of information of the type reportedly gathered in Illinois.

At the White House, presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said in response to a question, "It's inconceivable to me that that would take place. We certainly don't condone it."

Body Count of 310 Reported At My Lai

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP) - A witness testified at Lt. William L. Calley Jr.'s court martial Wednesday that Capt. Ernest Medina reported a body count of 310 at My Lai, after invoking a cease fire by announcing "the party's over, that's enough shooting for today."

This was about noon on March 16, 1968, said the witness, Thomas J. Kinch, 24, of North Cape May, N.J. He also quoted Medina as exhorting his Charley Company troops in a pre My Lai briefing:

"When I come through the next day, I don't want anything living but GIs."

Calley, 27, is on trial on charges of the premeditated murder of 102 Vietnamese old men, women and children during an infantry assault by Charley Company on My Lai. The defendant was a platoon leader under Medina. Maximum penalty on conviction is death.

The defense contends, in part, that Calley at My Lai simply followed orders of superior officers, including Medina. The latter currently is undergoing the military equivalent of a grand jury investigation into his activities at My Lai.

Kinch, a weapons squad veteran of My Lai, testified Medina received a call on his radio while moving through the village during the assault. The witness did not hear what was said to the captain but quoted Medina as replying: "I don't know, I'll have to call forward and find out."

After a subsequent call, the witness said, he heard Medina announce the cease fire over the radio. Then, Kinch said, he and Medina moved forward until they came to an irrigation ditch just east of the village, containing 30 to 50 bodies of Vietnamese civilians. All of those deaths have attributed by the government to Calley.

Earlier, Calley's former platoon sargeant Isaiah Cowan, came to his defense, telling the jury he never saw the defendant shoot any Vietnamese civilians at My Lai. However, the witnesses admitted he didn't see much of the lieutenant at any time that day.

"During the operation at My Lai, did you see Lt. Calley shoot any civilians," Sgt. 1.C. Cowan 37, a defense witness, was asked.

"No sir, I did not," replied Cowan, a veteran of nearly 18 years of serice.

As he went through My Lai with the 1st Platoon, Cowan said he saw only about five dead Vietnamese - in contrast to the 102 Calley is accused of murdering.

Air Pollution Abatement Bill Approved

WASHINGTON (AP)—A House-Senate conference Wednesday night approved the most comprehensive and toughest air pollution abatement bill ever considered by Congress.

In its final form, the measure includes firm deadlines ordering the auto industry to reduce noxious exhaust fumes by 90 per cent and to do it by 1976 at the latest or face the shutdown of production lines.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D Maine, author of the Senate version of the bill, called the conference report "by far the toughest pollution measure ever submitted to Congress."

The final version, hammered out in days and nights of closed door sessions, is a complex measure that includes these major provisions:

—It allows citizen suits, filed by any individual or group, against polluters, against the administrator of the new Environmental Protection Agency and against pollution caused by the United States government itself.

—Sets national standards for all new stationary sources of pollution such as factories.

—Gives the government the right to inspect a suspected polluter's property and to subpoena his records.

—Gives the government the right to require a polluter to install at his own expense pollution monitoring devices and compels him to report the recorded emissions.

Draft Counselor's Corner

A Few Christmas Thoughts

by GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

Christmas rushes.....

For those of you who missed the Berrigan tape last week, it's happening again Tues., Dec. 22 at noon in the Colonial Lounge, Student Union. If you heard it last week, get the word to your interested friends.

Do you want to be able to help your friends and brothers solve their draft problems? There will be a Counselor Training Program offered in February by Draft Counseling Services. Watch this column early second semester for details. But think about it during vacation.

There is draft counseling available on campus. Draft Counseling Services has an office on the second floor of the Student Union, in Room 418E. Stop by to rap sometime....

This is the last column this semester. If you enjoyed it--or even read it for that matter--let me know. It's a strange thing not having any idea whether you have an audience or not...

Is there anyone who'd be interested in seeing a regular column on alternatives? Stuff on farming, education, cheap living, staying alive and out of the system? Write me if so...

That's it, I guess. Have a good Christmas. Make stuff instead of buying presents. Give money to the Panthers or CCCO or somebody in relatives' names as presents to them. If it's not to late, tell your folks to get a live, replantable tree which can be donated to your park dept. or transplanted in your yard after Christmas. Ecologically sound idea. Think about Christ, Buddha, or, for that matter, Richard Nixon in Vietnam shooting at people when you hear "Peace on Earth" and ask yourself why in Hell you should go....

For New Year's make a resolution to stop finding excuses for not doing it (no matter what your particular "it" might be) and DO IT. Stand up for your today.

Peace

Westfield Students Protest Off-Campus Living Rules

WESTFIELD - Westfield State College students are still disgruntled with what they consider a lack of communication with the administration, and picket lines are scheduled to be set up again this morning.

The main problem, as it has been for several months, has been the refusal of the administration to allow off-campus living for the rapidly growing college.

One student spokesman Tuesday night said that the issue was supposed to have been resolved prior to the Thanksgiving recess, and now it appears that it will be after Christmas. He noted that there are going to be problems at the college with accommodations for all who want to enter, and the students want a decision now, and have been relatively patient.

There was a Student Life Committee named, which included students, faculty members, and members of the administration, yet there has been no decision on the main problem of off-campus living.

Pickets will start again this morning in front of Parenzo Hall, the main administration building. There was no indication late Tuesday as to how many students would be involved, nor how long the picketing would last.

Anti-War Meeting Tonight

The antiwar group on campus, the Student Mobilization Committee, will meet tonight in the Plymouth room, second floor of the Student Union. "The recent massive increase of the bombing and the invasion of North Vietnam underlines the extreme need for such a group on campus" said a group notice.

Tonight's meeting will be to discuss the spring program and to organize committees to act on the proposals. SMC welcomes everybody.

Members of the Student Mobilization Committee attended the National Peace Action Coalition conference held two weeks ago in Chicago. Pamphlets telling what was proposed there as well as the SMC brochure which describes the movement on campus are available in the SMC office.

President Nixon Vetoes Manpower Training Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon voted Wednesday a $9.5 billion manpower training bill. He said it would relegate large numbers of workers to permanent subsidized employment.

Nixon objected to the form of the measure, not the amount of money involved, saying it "only perpetuates and extends the deficiencies in our manpower programs."

The bill passed the Senate 68 to 13 and the House approved it last Thursday 177 to 159.

Among other things it would have authorized $200 million immediately to stem rising unemployment by creating thousands of public service jobs. Separate legislation appropriating the funds would have been required.

In an effort to head off a vote, Senate and House conferees at the last minute trimmed $2.5 billion from the amount authorized.

The bill earmarked $2 billion altogether for public service employment. After the initial $200 million, spending would have risen to $400 million next year, $600 million in fiscal 1973, and $800 million in 1974.

Backers contended the program would create 40,000 jobs this year and up to 300,000 by 1974.

In his vote message to the Senate, Nixon called for a new bill with sound manpower reform, with a family assistance program and federal state local revenue sharing.

Secretary of Labor James Hodgson said, however, that passage of a new bill is "less than likely" in the brief time remaining in this session of Congress.

Nixon said his chief objection was that the bill provided "as much as 44 per cent of the total funding for dead end jobs in the public sector."

"Moreover," he said, "there is no requirement that these public sector jobs be linked to training or the prospect of other employment opportunities. WPA type jobs are not the answer for the men and women who have them, for government which is less efficient as a result, or for the taxpayers who must foot the bill."

Nixon said such a program would be a reversion to remedies tried 35 years ago.

Senator Gaylord Nelson, Wis., chief sponsor of the bill, said he sees no point in trying to over ride the veto.

The Senate might vote to override, he said, but the House would not since it passed the compromise version of the bill by only an 18 vote margin, far short of the two thirds needed to override.

Youth And Drugs Expert To Speak

Today, Joel Fort, M.D. will speak at 8:00 in the Campus Center Auditorium on "Youth, Drugs and Alienation." The talk will be sponsored by Room To Move Drop-in Center and the Center Program Council.

Dr. Fort has an M.D. from Ohio State University and is a world famous expert on drug use and abuse, public health and social reform. He has been a consultant on drug abuse to the World Health Organization, the United Nations and the Peace Corps. Dr. Fort was a defense witness in the trials of Lenny Bruce and Timothy Leary. He is now on the faculty of the University of California at Berkeley (School of Social Welfare).

Dr. Fort was the first to start a free clinic for street people, The San Francisco Center for Special Problems, in Haight-Ashbury, dealing with a wide variety of social problems including drugs, sex, suicide, and crime.

In his book, The Pleasure Seekers: The Drug Crisis, Youth and Society, probably one of the best in the field, he dispells many of the common drug myths, replacing them with accurate, factual information.

In a Playboy article, advocating the legalization of marijuana, Dr. Fort said: "I am sure...that in a truly open, liberarian and decent society, nobody would be inclined to any kind of drug use.

But, meanwhile, I must protest....against the bureaucrat who stands with cocktail in one hand and cigarette in the other and cries out that the innocent recreation of pot smoking is the major problem facing our society.... he would be doing us a true favor if he forgot about marijuana for a while and thought, a few minutes a day, about such real problems as racism, poverty, starvation, air pollution and our stumbling progress toward World War Three and the end of life on Earth."

TAs Are Offered Teaching Seminar

Any teaching assistant concerned about the quality of his teaching should be interested in the Graduate School's new weekly evening seminar series on college teaching. The first meeting is Thursday, December 17, 1970, at 7:30 p.m. in room 228 Herter Hall, to discuss topics of interest to be covered in the spring semester.

All graduate and undergraduate TAs, part-time lecturers and faculty are welcome. Also, portable videotape equipment will be demonstrated. TAs are encouraged to have their classes videotaped and evaluated by another TA. Taping is voluntary and entirely confidential.

This program is run by three experienced TAs, Bill Delamarter, Psychology; Sandra Hartzog, Botany; and Terry Krumm, School of Education. Their office is located at 206 Munson Hall; phone 5-0868 or 5-0666.

Voice Against The Empire

Dear people, please listen and understand. I am not trying to hit you over the head and I do not want to attack any individuals. I do not want your automatic allegiance. What I want is to communicate with you and for you to communicate with me. We can learn from each other.

I would like to present a view of the world which does not often get adequately explained. It is the view that America is a wealthy empire that has been built and continues to exist from the exploitations of people throughout the world. That in reality when American monies or troops are used to quell rebellions or insurrections in Africa, Asia, and the Americas, we are not protecting these places from totalitarianism, i.e., communism, but rather, we are protecting our vast economic interests. So that when U.S. troops go into, for example, the Dominican Republic or Korea it is declared a "police action" by our "leaders". So that when these "leaders", the ruling class (big businessmen, generals, politicians, etc.) say that we "lost" China and how if Vietnam goes we might also lose the rest of Asia, they are really talking about their empire.

What we mean by imperialism is U.S. big business exercising economic and political control over "underdeveloped" countries in order to reap maximum possible profits from their resources and people. Increasingly since World War II, the largest U.S. corporations have found it necessary to invest abroad for the better rates of profit available there. Currently investments in Asia and Africa and Latin America are returning profit rates four times as high as those in Canada or Western Europe. As U.S. News and World Report put it back in 1954 in an article entitled "Why U.S. Risks War in Indochina: It's the key to Control of All of Asia,"

"One of the world's richest areas is open to the winner in Indochina. That's behind the growing U.S. concern...tin, rubber, rice, key strategic materials are what the war is really all about. The U.S. sees it as a place to hold at any cost."

America's foreign policy makes sense only if we see it for what it is -- blatant attempts to crush anything which has the potential for revolution, for becoming an uprising against America's economic, idiological, and racist denomination of most of the world's people. Revolution is a threat to America's "free world" empire, an empire which manipulates the internal affairs and resources of third world nations to satisfy the greed of babylon's few large corporations. America's hysterical anti-communist crusade is a defense of an economic empire. The U.S. is fighting for freedom, the freedom to exploit the third world.

Of course, volumes could be written about Western capitalist imperialism. Many of you must disagree strongly with what has been said here. But if you do disagree, don't just call me an asshole. Know why you disagree. Don't wallow in ignorance.

Academic Freedom vs. The Strike

The time has come to lance the Carbuncles!

My articulate colleague, Mr. Carbuncle, has slickly glossed over the complex realities of our modern technological society in his analysis of the form and content of academix freedom. In any such analysis, it must be pointed out that academic freedom is not a "cover" for the corporate establishment, nor a sham, nor an insurance policy which covers us against the evils of political repression. Academic freedom is a vital element of any society which seeks to maximize the free proliferation and development of the human intellect. Mr. Carbuncle's analysis of the relationship between the power structure and the content of academix freedom leads us into a stone wall. He seems to ignore the fact that in order to permit intellectual development, the power structure must be restrained from abusing its power and arbitrarily restricting educational diversity. The fate of academic freedom rests ultimately on the conduct of those possession power. In this context, the governmental power structure has exercised great self-control. In other societies, such self control is virtually non-existent.

Last spring, in opposition to the governmental power structure, there developed a counter power structure on almost all campuses in the form of a "strike" against the U.S. military campaign against the Communist sanctuaries in Cambodia. This counter power structure, in comparison to the governmental one, exercised little or no self control. Students who opposed the strike were ostracized or intimidated. At Brandeis University, to cite one example, professors who refused to vote for the strike on the campus referendum were threatened by strikers with physical violence. Boston University had to close several weeks early because of the continued threats of violent disruption. Several thousand strikers threatened to storm the Massachusetts State House unless Governor Sargent agreed to lower the State House flag at half mast. At this campus, students who chose to go to classes to receive an "irrelevant" education were harrassed and jeered. If such intimidational tactics were initiated by the governmental power structure, there would be cries of "fascism!"

Mr. Carbuncle seems to feel that the corporations are perverting academix freedom. I would like to know when any capitalist has threatened to close down the MOBE office or deny anti-war activists their rights to coordinate their workshops and demonstrations. Have any strikers received threatening phone calls? Don't ROTC students or those who wish to do business with recruiters have rights? Or are they just irrelevant slobs? Does Oswald Tippo make bomb threats to strike committee members?

To sum up, the content of academix freedom under the board of Trustees as compared to academic freedom under the strike committee is like comparing the Enlightenment to the Dark Ages.

Day Care

To The Editor:

Day Care is one of the most important economic and political issues that the women's movement has chosen to act on. Free, twenty-four hour centers can play a large part in releasing women from their confining role in the home. Women are usually expected to take care of the children. The children's needs orient a woman around home activities and limit her opportunity to get involved in other interests. The third world woman who is alone and forced to work to support her family has neither time to herself nor time for her children. Day Care Centers provide a place where parents can leave their children while they work, go to school, or take free time for themselves.

Day Care Centers can be a more reliable and safe place for children than with baby-sitters or in some homes. Centers are licensed by the state and must meet rather strict requirements to gain certification. Staff members must meet prescribed requirements about experience and education. Centers must provide a ratio of 1 adult to every 10 children.

The concept that Day Care Centers should be free of charge is important. The entire society should share in the responsibility for raising children; that should not be the burden of two people who bear them. Society is beginning to respond to the needs of the elderly and must be prodded to look after the needs of its children. Some of these needs are for good food, companionship, and plenty of attention. These needs can in part be met now by Day Care Centers where some meals are provided and there are persons trained in child development who are concerned about children. Day Care must be regarded as a right for all, rather than a privilege of the rich.

At UMass, Women's Liberation has decided to try to coordinate the efforts of past groups and the graduate Student Senate to develop a large scale movement for day care on campus. At present, the group is involved in doing research on the issue of day care and on existing centers in other places. One group of women has worked out a questionnaire to find out what the needs of the university community are in terms of day care; what people's attitudes toward day care are; and what experience people have had with day care. Efforts are being made to find sources for funding a center that would place the responsibility squarely in the lap of the university, but without creating too much of a tax burden. There are a large number of people qualified for staffing a center -- university graduates, undergraduates who have to do field work with children, and the parents of children who would want to be involved in the center. Within our community we have the resources to meet our own needs -- all we have to do is.....DO IT!

You Are The Crown of Creation And You've Got Nowhere To Go

"YOU ARE THE CROWN OF CREATION AND YOU'VE GOT NO PLACE TO GO"

Those are the first lines of the Jefferson Airplane song "Crown of Creation." The song continues with these lines:

"IN LOYALTY TO THEIR KIND
THEY CANNOT TOLERATE OUR MINDS.
IN LOYALTY TO OUR KIND
WE CANNOT TOLERATE THEIR OBSTRUCTION!"

The question is: THEN WHAT???

I think of my sister Marjorie. She knew that she, like everyone and everything else, was "the crown of creation" and yet she "had no place to go." She knew this in her very bones because she had religious mystical experiences with - and more importantly - without drugs. She knew how holy the world was and how fine it was to be alive.

Yet wherever she went in the American capitalist system she was not tolerated. She found it hard to get enough money to eat. When she was in Boston she happened to be on HemenwaySt. the night that the Tactical Police Force attacked a block party and beat men, women, and babies. It was like history repeating itself. Chicago '68....They even went into buildings to destroy the property and beat people who had nothing to do with what was going on out in the street. And she was in the center of it, begging the police not to hit a pregnant friend.

She finally split out to Texas this August because she heard that it was such a fine place to be. Her friends told her that the cowboys were like freaks themselves with their bright clothes, big hats and boots. They said that everyone was really friendly there.

So the password was "Go West young girl...." And she did.

She left in search of a Social Utopia where she could start a combination commune and vegetarian restaurant for all the good people in the area. She was incredibly happy there for a few weeks. The land was beautiful. The people were great - a dream come true. Then the Nightmare came....

On August 16, 1970, Marjorie Carol Zelman was killed in Austin, Texas. She was swimming in a lake at sunset and a boat hit her in the head, killing her instantly. The police said that it was an accident. Yet there was an anonymous phone call to the police saying that if you want to know who killed Margie Zelman, go see this man ...The caller said that he had heard the man bragging to some people about how he had killed a hippie.

When he took a lie-detector test, he said that he had not taken his boat out the day before. This showed up as a true statement. The police did not even examine his boat in their "thorough" examination.

I don't know whether or not he did intentionally kill my sister. If he did, he killed someone I've did not even know. Perhaps he did it because of how she looked - i.e., like a "freak".

I believe that if he had had a chance to speak to her he would not have done it. Instead, they would have become good friends because she was so beautiful....

I am not bitter. She had a very full life. You could say the life force in her overflowed.

The question is not one of fear, hatred, paranoia and revenge. The karma of that is just more of the same. The moral cycle, or karma, would only continue, as the rock thrown into the water creates larger and larger circles.

For me the question is: how can I keep her spirit alive?

Her smile was the physical manifestation of her happy holy spirit. She expressed her joy through her facial expressions. Poet Michael McClure says that "The spiritual is the real physical acts which the body makes."

So she "dropped" her body and her spirit floats freely now. How can I keep it alive on earth?

It seems that I can do it only by keeping her joy alive in my mind and the minds of other people. Please help me do this.

Chasidic Judaism says "Praise the Lord with joy. The only sin is sadness."

I think of the lines from Crosby, Stills and Nash:

"Fear is the lock and laughter, the key to your heart."

But most importantly I think of the marvelous lines from the Incredible String Band who played some of her favorite music - (because of its holiness and purity):

"Caught inside of Hitler's jail and All I can do is smile...."

Winners Of Contest No. 8

Detour: Construction of the Fine Arts Center has created a major problem for those who wish to walk across the campus. The confusion is heightened because there are still some entrances to the site open, while others are now blocked by fences. The dogs on the left discovered that you can't from 3 Lot to Herter Hall any more.

People have just discovered a fence making the Ellis Drive route impossible between the Student Union and SBA. Above we see that the fence has been lowered temporarily. When it is restored we recommend that you cut between Mem Hall and the Chapel.

Record Review

Lennon Is All Together In "Plastic Ono Band"

By LANCE REIDY
Reviewer

John Lennon's Plastic ono band, Apple Records (Released December 1970) is a beautiful expositional recording. It is John Lennon's first unrestricted full album, is a series of reflective personal vignettes, and a classic illustration in structured relativity and meaning. It's a too obvious album, oftentimes deceptively so.

When you experience this, be attuned towards the ridiculously sublime and OBVIOUS. Now, John Lennon means exactly what he says though he says it very subtly (and how!!!!) "Yes...Now....You see, I found out.... in some ways, he ain't no guru whom your eyes can see through.

When you experience this, be attuned towards the ridiculously sublime and OBVIOUS. Now, John Lennon means exactly what he says though he says it very subtly (and how!!!! "Yes...Now....You see, I found out.....in some ways, he ain't no guru whom your eyes can see through. I seen.NOW, THAT, I SEEN.....THIS.....I know." (You'll have much fascination with "I FOUND OUT", just for starters).

This is an extremely coherant album. As was with "Sgt. Pepper", only more so, every piece of material Lennon communicates fits very, very nicely into his whole experience. This album is a manifest work of art.

I, personally, advise a good set of stereo headphones. Then dig what he actually says and counterpoint this in conjunction with what he has written on the lyric sleeve (and don't neglect his audio imagery....like the church bell tolling at the very beginning). If you take all of these communications and non-communications in the context of a lucid whole, you'll apprehend a flood of innuendo and obvious

This is such a fine display of a human that I now believe in more than ever before. "Oh....my love (.....), Oh....my love!!" John Lennon invites you to look and listen of him, and closely. I have hence come to comprehend and begin to appreciate more fully, and in a third dimension, the attitudes and perceptions of a truly thoughtful, religious, peaceful, and beautiful Being...(Human Being). Instant Karma kiss me right on my face.

Soviet Union Missile Buildup Leveling Off

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Soviets may be leveling off their buildup of long range missiles after a successful five year drive to overtake the U.S.

Cautioning it is not yet certain what the development means, the Defense Department said, "there are some preliminary indications that the Soviet Union may have recently started slowing somewhat" construction of huge SS9 missile complexes.

"University Without Walls" Planning Begun At UMass

A group of individuals have begun to come together around the possibility of affiliating UMass to the University Without Walls (UWW) Developmental Process. A major concern of the group is to do everything possible to keep the process at UMass an open one.

The group hopes to keep the University Community informed and to continually stress that any point in time is an entry point. Both during the planning process, and later, if and when the program is under way, any time people wish to make new inputs the group aims to create a welcoming atmosphere for their ideas.

As initially conceived by members of the Union for Experimenting Colleges and Universities (the initiating organization), the UWW Program seeks to meet the needs of a broad range of students by providing highly individualized and flexible approaches to learning in the community, on campus, and around the world.

Some key features of that initial conception include: inclusion of students, faculty, and administrators in design and development, a broad mix of resources for teaching and learning, flexible time units, a broad age range (16-60 and older), and use of adjunct faculty.

Also featured would be an extensive Seminar in the Field program incorporating faculty, adjunct faculty, and students, procedures designed to maintain continuing dialogue between students and faculty, design of special seminars and related programs to aid students in the development of skills necessary for learning on one's own, opportunity to participate in the programs and make use of the resources of the other 16 UWW institutions.

Once these programs have been developed, concern would center on cognitive and affective learning with periodic evaluation by students and their advisors. There would also be the expectation that each student would produce, before applying for his degree, a research study, a work of art, a community service, a publishable article or book or some other noteworthy and valuable contribution.

Some students, faculty members and an administrator went to a regional planning conference at Roger Williams College, in Rhode Island. On returning to campus these people began talking about the possibility of a UMass Program within the UWW framework both with individuals and through two presentations as part of modular credit week ("Something Else Seventy").

The concept has been faced with several difficulties. First, the resources to develop such a program are to come from a series of grants still being negotiated with the Office of Education and two foundations, so funding still is not definite. Second, the exact nature of what a UMass version of the UWW Program could be is wide open to what those participating in planning create and successfully negotiate.

UMass participation in the program comes by virtue of the School of Education participation in the Union for Experimenting Colleges and Universities. If the funds come through for the $70,000 developmental grant that is being sought for each participating institution, that grant will be administered through the School of Education.

Every effort will be made to allow the program to belong to the entire University Community. A large public meeting for the purpose of answering questions that will hopefully serve to involve a greater segment of the campus population in the developmental process will be held after the break for Christmas vacation.

Anyone interested in participating in a planning seminar for the spring semester should register for Education 299/599. Also, program information will be made available at F.U.N.E. (the Free University of New England) located in the Old Book Store, in the bottom of the Student Union.

For information, contact the School of Ed. at 5-0915.

GI Bill Allows Foreign Study

The Veterans Administration reported yesterday more than 11,000 persons trained under the GI Bill outside the borders of the 50 states during fiscal year 1970.

Veterans earn GI Bill educational benefits if they are discharged under other than dishonorable conditions after at least 181 days of continuous active military duty, any part of it after Jan. 31, 1955.

They also are eligible if discharged because of a service-connected disability.

VA urged veterans living in foreign countries and interested in educational benefits to apply at the nearest American Embassy or Consular office--or to the VA regional office in Manila, if they live in the Philippine Islands.

SWAP Seeks To Involve University Community

"Continuation of S.W.A.P. on campus could prove to be one of the most important parts of this year's conference," said a SWAP spokesman. "Expertise groups from the conference are to become the focal groups for continuation and action," he added.

Now that S.W.A.P. is to be brought to the campus, its main goals are involvement of the rest of the University community and implementation of refined proposals by carrying them through the proper channels.

The continuation committee itself proposes to be an organizing and facilitation force for implementation of the proposals of the S.W.A.P. expertise groups. Expertise groups have been strongly urged to continue to meet back on campus until proposals have been finalized. The continuation committee proposes to work with the expertise groups in organizing hearings open to the entire community so a broader scope of ideas may be used to finalize proposals. A tentative date for the hearings has been set for Wednesday, February 10, 1971.

After the open hearings the expertise groups along with any new members will formulate a list of priorities. The continuation committee will make certain the lists do not overlap and combine any overlapping proposals. It will then be the task of the expertise groups with the help of the S.W.A.P. continuation committee to carry the proposals through University channels with all due speed.

The next meeting of the continuation committee is Sunday, December 20. The committee is open to anyone who is interested.

Politella Named To Journ-Education Comm.

Dr. Dario Politella of UMass has been named to a three-year term on the Committee on Education for Journalism by the national Association for Education in Journalism (AEJ). The announcement was made this week by AEJ President Wayne A. Danielson, dean of the School of Communication at the University of Texas.

The committee is made up of ten nationally-recognized journalism educators who will be cooperating with representatives of the American Newspaper Publishers Association in establishing new standards of education for journalists.

Politella is one of only two appointments made this year. He is the only educator named from New England. Other committee members are from the University of Kentucky, Iowa State, University of Georgia, Washington, Illinois, Kansas, Oklahoma State, Arizona and Rutgers.

A member of the UMass English Department faculty since 1965, Politella has taught journalism subjects at Syracuse U., Kent State U. and Ball State U. in Indiana. He has been a professional newspaperman, magazine editor and writer, television writer and public relations practitioner in New York City.

At UMass, he teaches writing for the mass media and acts as consultant to the student publications staffs.

Program Council Notes Event-Apathy

The Campus Center Program Council met again Monday to discuss past and present events. The Special Events Committee cited its failure to advertise properly and great apathy among the campus community in the failure of Trim-A-Limb. It was noted that most students simply ignored the Christmas trees that were placed in the Campus Center and the Student Union.

The Craftsman's Guild placed a request for $10,453.00 for setting up a craft center complex in the Student Union. Action was delayed until Monday because of budget changes and chairman voting procedure.

The Chess Club was allowed to rechannel their budget in order to invite the members of the International Chess Club to UMass next year for their annual tournament.

The rest of the meeting was concerned with the involvement of the committee chairmen and the budget for the coming year.

Nixon May Call Congress Back

WASHINGTON (AP)-The White House announced Wednesday President Nixon will act quickly to call Congress into special session should it adjourn before its Jan. 3 expiration without acting on legislation he deems vital.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon made that known at an unannounced breakfast meeting with House Speaker John W. McCormack.

Ziegler said Nixon would call a special session should Congress attempt to quit before its legal term runs out without acting on the family assistance program, funds to continue developing a supersonic transport, increases in Social Security benefits, remaining appropriations measures and "a trade bill which deals only with textiles."

Keep Christmas Trees Safe Asks Fire And Safety Office

Christmas Trees look nice, but they can be fire hazards in your room. The Fire And Safety Office has released the following message about Christmas Trees in dormitories:

Christmas Trees

1-When selected, the Christmas tree should appear freshly cut. The needles should be felt to make sure they are attached firmly.

2-Keep the tree outdoors until it is to be set up.

3-When the tree is set up, it should be placed in the coolest part of the room, away from stairways, passageways, exists, radiators, heaters, fireplaces and any other source of heat.

4-Saw the tree trunk at an angle and stand it in water. A tree stand with a large water container in which the trunk can rest should be used. Most trees "drink" water fairly fast, so the water container should be filled daily. Keeping the tree moist is the most important safety factor.

5-Only electric lights should be used to decorate the tree, never candles. The lighting sets should be checked before they are placed on a tree. Those with frayed wire should be discarded. Only light sets bearing the label of the Underwriter's Laboratories should be used. The lights should be turned off when no one is in the area.

6-Electric devices should be set away from the tree. A spark from the device could ignite dry pine needles.

7-When the needles start to fall, the tree should be taken down immediately and discarded outdoors. All trees should be be dismantled before December 21, 1967 (Christmas Vacation).

8-Christmas trees are not permitted above the street floor in any dormitory.

Wax Candles

Where lighted wax candles are permitted, all precautions must be taken. Lighted candles should not be handled or carried by persons using net or gauze-like fabric for dresses or costumes. If loosely woven costumes must be worn, they must be flameproofed. When used for table decorations, a sturdy holder shall be provided.

Evergreen Branches

1-Freshly cut branches may be used for table decorations only.

2-Electrical artificial evergreen wreaths bearing the fire-retardant label may be used for window decorations wherever permitted.

Decorations

The use of ordinary combustible materials for decoration is not permitted. Use only non-combustible materials or materials that have been fire retarded and bear the Underwriter's label on the wrapper. Loose hay, straw, leaves, resinous evergreen branches or brushed rayon materials are not to be used.

Fire Retarding Christmas Trees

No fire retarding treatment yet tested on full-sized trees has convinced the Underwriters' Laboratories that any relaxation of the usual precautions to prevent ignition of Christmas trees is justified. Some treatments are not only ineffective in preventing the spread of flame, but also liberate large volumes of smoke and fumes beyond those given off by untreated trees.

Huskies Fail To Unbeaten Redmen

Redmen Romp...Slick backcourt ace, John Betancourt flaunted with Husky defense at Storrs Tuesday night as Coach Leaman's Cagers walked off the tartan surface with a clutch 74-69 win (upper right). Other half of the dynamic duo, Mike Pagliara, drives toward the hoop for 2 of his 14 points. The young Redmen have really come of age with four straight YC triumphs as UMass., 5-0 overall, streak to New England hoop supremacy. (MDC photo by Gary Slickman)

Carlsson Rescues Wrestlers Again

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

For the second time in less than a week, sophomore Ed Carlsson led the UMass wrestling team to victory as the Redmen defeated Harvard last night in the Cage, 22-13.

With the score 16-13 in UMass' favor and only two matches left, Carlsson was faced with a must win situation. This was almost identical to the situation he faced at Rhode Island last Saturday and he responded in similar fashion. Harvard's Dave Scanlon led 2-0 in the second period before Carlsson made his move. He scored an escape and two takedowns to one escape for Scanlon and he led 5-3 after two periods.

The third period saw only one point scored by Scanlon on an escape, but it was filled with drama. Neither wrestler could bring the other down and as the buzzer sounded, Carlsson walked off with a 5-4 victory. The win put the Redmen ahead, 19-13, an insurmountable lead with only one match left.

The meet proved to go just as UMass coach Homer Barr predicted. He felt the Redmen would have to pile up the points early and then hold on for victory and this is what they did. The Redmen led 14-0 after the first four bouts and it appeared as if it would be a rout. But the Crimson came roaring back with three wins and a draw to set the stage for the Carlsson heroics.

As has been the story many times before, the tough Redmen lightweights got UMass off to a flying start. Nick DiDomenico brought the large crowd to its feet with a second period pin over Harvard's Mark Galesky. It was the only UMass pin of the night and put them on top, 5-0. Dave Reynolds upped the lead to 8-0 with a see-saw victory in the 126 lb. match. Reynolds came up with a strong third period to top Steve Mongolich, 11-7.

UMass got a big lift in the 134 lb. match in the form of a great effort by senior Phil Davis. His opponent was Josh Henson, son of an Olympic wrestling champ, and Henson entered the match undefeated in 8 appearances. But Davis was the aggressor in the early going and held on in the third period for a 9-6 win. This was Davis' first match of the season after an injury and he turned in an inspiring performance.

142 pounder Sheldon Goldberg put the Redmen ahead 14-0 with a 5-1 win over Pat Coleman, another one of Harvard's undefeated wrestlers. The match was a typical Goldberg bout, a cat and mouse affair, which saw his opponent completely frustrated at the end of the contest.

It was at this point that the tide began to turn. Clay Jester got caught on his back in the 150 lb. bout and was pinned in the third period. Then Harvard's undefeated Mark Fallor proved his buildup as the team's best wrestler, defeating Kent Mignocci, 16-4 and all of a sudden the score was 14-8. Each team picked up two points in the 167 lb. match as Tom Young and Harvard's Tony Raynor battled to a 1-1 tie.

The Crimson continued to close the gap as Rick Starr topped Tom Andrewes, 3-1, in the 177 lb. match. This narrowed the score to 16-13 and the Redmen had to count on Mr. Carlsson. After he iced the victory, the other half of the sophomore dynamic duo took the mat in the person of Carl Dambman. Dambman brought the crowd up early with two near pins, but couldn't put away Tom Tripp and held on for a 12-10 win.

Redmen notes: The win was the third of the season for the undefeated Redmen and dropped Harvard's mark to 3-2. It was also the 13th consecutive Redmen victory over the past two seasons and second in two tries with Harvard...There was a fine crowd in the cage but many left after UMass built up the early lead and weren't around for the spectacular finish. The large crowd obviously inspired the Redmen, as did the not so impartial introductions of announcer Bob Willman.

Gymnastics Win Over S. Conn. St.

Girls Gymnastics team posted a decisive victory over Southern Connecticut State College last Friday in New Haven. The final score was UMass 95.70, Southern Connecticut 85.35.

Anne Burmeister took two firsts, scoring 8.15 in floor exercise and 8.20 in balance beam.

Last week's high scorer, Margie Combs, won uneven bars scoring 8.05, came in second in vaulting and second in floor exercise. Junior Barbara Holt won side horse vaulting with 8.40, highest score of the meet. Captain Linda Seikunas captured second place on the balance beam and third in floor exercise.

Hoop Stars Highlight Local Dinner Affairs

By JOHN SULLIVAN

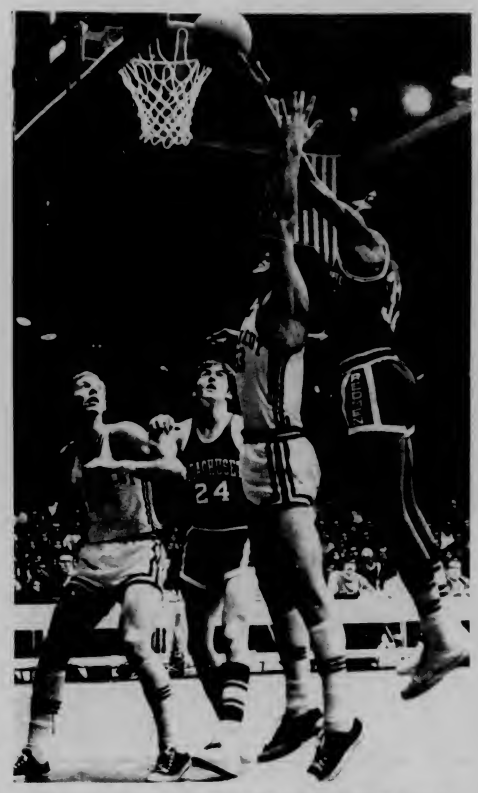
Yesterday was quite a day for luncheons that featured sports figures. At 12:15 p.m. it was the weekly Varsity M Club luncheon at the Newman Center with head basketball coach Jack Leaman and several members of the 5-0 Redman squad. A little later on, it was a 6:15 dinner-type affair especially prepared for a Bill Russell who couldn't get there until about 7:45.

A good-sized crowd made it to the Varsity M affair to get some inside looks at the undefeated cagers and their coach on the afternoon after their big victory over UConn at Storrs, Ct., a win that gave them undisputed possession of first place in the Yankee Conference.

The two starting Redman guards, John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara, were given seats at the head table and were both called upon to talk about the team. Each of them stated that they thought UMass was still a young club and one that hadn't played up to its capabilities as of yet.

Betancourt made it clear that the Redmen were looking forward to the challenges that are in store for them the rest of the way, and he pointed to the Boston area teams as the squads UMass is anxiously awaiting to go up against. Pagliara put in a plug for the spirit of this present crop of Redman hoopsters, saying, "We all have this one thing in common; we all want to win."



Also on the Varsity M tab was Leaman, who talked about the Redman successes over the past week, which included three victories in the YanCon, over Rhode Island, New Hampshire and UConn.

In citing the wins over URI and UConn, both achieved on away basketball floors before boisterous home fans, Leaman remarked, "They showed that they could play under pressure." The head coach agreed with his guards when he termed the Redmen as a young team, but he reassured, "Every game we get a little bit better..."

About Tuesday night's win over the Huskies he had this to say, "I think we won it with a five-man effort," and added on behalf of the Redmen's winning attitude, "I don't think anybody on the floor had any thought of losing..."

Available for this segment of the Varsity M were basketball films from the second half against Connecticut, played only a matter of hours before, but ready for the enjoyment of all present.

The later eating affair was great because Russell was present, although he couldn't make the dinner on until late, his presense was definitely felt. However, because of a lack of time and space right here, Russell and the presense he extends will be discussed in tomorrow's sports pages.

Frosh Overcome Early Jitters To Post 4th Straight, 78-65

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

STORRS, CONN. Overcoming early game troubles, the Little Redmen swept the victory number four over a talented Connecticut freshmen squad 78-65. The Tuesday night crowd saw their freshmen team drop to a 2-2 mark, while the visiting Redmen remained undefeated due to some excellent shooting from both the field and the line.

In varsity type fashion, the frosh started slowly, but so slowly that it looked as if they were going to be blown off the court. Three successive times the Little Redmen came down and turned the ball over. Each time UConn hit from the outside, and before UMass had gotten used to the green floor, they were down 8-0.

The eight point bulge held through most of the first half, as two UMass spurts brought them within three, only to see Cal Chapman, UConn's fine forward, hit for a couple of hoops and rebuild the lead. But Chapman, the game's high scorer with 24, could do little about the third Redmen surge.

It began at 5:30 of the half, when Peter Trow hit on a foul shot, his first of 12 of that night. Two beautiful plays by All Skinner, the freshmen's first half standout, brought the score to 29-27, as UConn quickly called time out.

But nothing could cool off the freshmen, as a Skinner steal set up the Redmen score that put them in the lead to stay. It was a John Olson hoop, and the 31-30 score was the closest UConn could get for the last 23 minutes.

The scoreboard read UMass 37, UConn 31 at halftime, climaxing a 15-2 streak for the visitors that covered the final six minutes of the half.

The second half picked up right where the first half left off, with a couple of Redmen hoops. Finally UConn hit a field goal, breaking a 10 minute drought, but by that time the visiting frosh held a 40-31 lead.

UMass kept the spread near seven points, but fouls started hurting them. First Olson was replaced, then Skinner, and things tightened. But Rich Patino, with some of his customary slick passing and excellent floor play, kept the Huskies at bay.

Defensive maneuvering highlighted the closing minutes of the contest, as UMass showed their 1-2-2 and 1-3-1 zones, after having used their man to man defense throughout the first half.

UConn, who had been in a man to man defense for the greater portion of the game, started to press with seven minutes to go. The Huskie press forced UMass into their four corner offense, one which they had used against Dartmouth, their first opponent away from home. The four corner offense was working well enough, but for every easy layup that the Redmen earned, a turnover would halt their progress.

Thus with 4:20 left, the Little Huskies were very much alive, trailing by six, 61-55. It was then that a magnificent tip-in by Olson upped the lead to eight. The basket was quickly countered, but Olson was there again, taking Trow's pass and converting, to give UMass a 65-57 lead, and for all intensive purposes the ballgame.

With the Huskies trying madly to get back into the game, UMass made free throw-making their business. Three times, in a space of 50 seconds, Trow went to the line for one-and-one situations. All three times he came through. Trow's sixth foul conversion put the frosh out ahead 74-63, and 47 seconds later the 78-65 final gave them four in a row.

PERSONAL FOULS.....Said Coach Broaca, "I'm very pleased to win, its always nice to beat UConn." And at UConn too.....The Little Redmen shot a remarkable 57% from the field, and an even more impressive 91% from the line.....But fouls rid the Redmen again as the front line of Skinner-Olson-Levine picked up 13 fouls amongst them.....The win again exhibited the freshmen's fine balance as Trow, Patino and Skinner all took game honor's for the frosh with 18.....That makes two victories at home and two away, who knows what lies ahead?????

The scoreboard read UMass 37, UConn 31 at halftime, climaxing a 15-2 streak for the visitors that covered the final six minutes of the half.

The second half picked up right where the first half left off, with a couple of Redmen hoops. Finally UConn hit a field goal, breaking a 10 minute drought, but by that time the visiting frosh held a 40-31 lead.

UMass kept the spread near seven points, but fouls started hurting them. First Olson was replaced, then Skinner, and things tightened. But Rich Patino, with some of his customary slick passing and excellent floor play, kept the Huskies at bay.

Defensive maneuvering highlighted the closing minutes of the contest, as UMass showed their 1-2-2 and 1-3-1 zones, after having used their man to man defense throughout the first half.

UConn, who had been in a man to man defense for the greater portion of the game, started to press with seven minutes to go. The Huskie press forced UMass into their four corner offense, one which they had used against Dartmouth, their first opponent away from home. The four corner offense was working well enough, but for every easy layup that the Redmen earned, a turnover would halt their progress.

Thus with 4:20 left, the Little Huskies were very much alive, trailing by six, 61-55. It was then that a magnificent tip-in by Olson upped the lead to eight. The basket was quickly countered, but Olson was there again, taking Trow's pass and converting, to give UMass a 65-57 lead, and for all intensive purposes the ballgame.

With the Huskies trying madly to get back into the game, UMass made free throw-making their business. Three times, in a space of 50 seconds, Trow went to the line for one-and-one situations. All three times he came through. Trow's sixth foul conversion put the frosh out ahead 74-63, and 47 seconds later the 78-65 final gave them four in a row.

PERSONAL FOULS.....Said Coach Broaca, "I'm very pleased to win, its always nice to beat UConn." And at UConn too.....The Little Redmen shot a remarkable 57% from the field, and an even more impressive 91% from the line.....But fouls rid the Redmen again as the front line of Skinner-Olson-Levine picked up 13 fouls amongst them.....The win again exhibited the freshmen's fine balance as Trow, Patino and Skinner all took game honor's for the frosh with 18.....That makes two victories at home and two away, who knows what lies ahead?????

Trustees May Name Barnard As Ombudsman

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

English Professor Ellsworth Barnard will probably be named the University's first Ombudsman at the Board of Trustees meeting in Boston Monday, the Daily Collegian learned last night.

A search committee, operating under Faculty Senate authority since last Spring, recenly submitted the name of its top choice to Chancellor Tippo and he is reportedly ready to ask the Trustees for final approval Monday.

Barnard's name, generally known to be at the top of the selection committee's list for sometime, was mentioned privately by several informed sources last night.

When contacted by the MDC, Barnard released the following statement explaining his conception of the office.

I would think that one main function of the office would simply be to supply information about where a person can go to get his problem dealt with; and when necessary, to cut the administrative red tape and break through the bureaucratic barriers that are inevitable in an institution as large as UMass.

Secondly, where there seems to be a persisting grievance, I see the Ombudsman's job as bringing together the opposing parties and trying to get them to settle the matter voluntarily. If conciliation fails, however, it will then be his duty to make a specific recommendation, and to do his best to see that the recommendation is carried out. The resolution passed by the Faculty Senate is intended to give the Ombudsman real authority and Chancellor Tippo has assured me of his firm support. (This does not commit him to approve of every recommendation that I may make!)

The services of the Ombudsman will be available to all members of the student body, faculty, administration, and professional staff. (Members of the non-professional staff are represented by unions and have their own grievance procedures.) There will be a central office, probably in the Student Union which will be open daily during the week.

CEQ Multi-media Show Scheduled For Weekend

Friday, December 18th, the Coalition for Environmental Quality will present a multi-media show featuring the rock band "Clear Sky."

A photographic slide show and light show will be part of the presentation. There is no admission charge for the 9 to 12 p.m. show in the Student Union Ballroom.

The "Clear Sky" band members have varied and experienced backgrounds and all presently are students at UMass. The lead guitarist was a studio guitarist who worked with Joe South and Billy Joe Royal in their recordings. The drummer comes from "Brillig" and the bass player comes from "Scorpion". Both of these groups have played in the area before. The second lead guitarist and the lead singer have been in various rock groups for the last six years. The type of material that "Clear Sky" plays ranges from "Crosby, Stills and Nash" to the "Rolling Stones".

The slide show is unique in that it uses two slide projectors focusing on one screen creating an infinite number of multiple and single images. Most of the slides were taken in Martha's Vineyard and the Connecticut Valley. There will also be slides from the C.E.Q. Raft Trip down the Connecticut River.

This will be the first time that the elements of a rock band, a slide show, and a light show have been put together on the UMass campus. Please do not rip off the hand-made yellow, blue and green posters until after Friday the 18th as they are hard to make and are reusable.

He Knows If You've Been Bad Or Good

Don't Spend Xmas in Jail!

Student General Counsel Richard M. Howland has warned students that arrests for shoplifting in area stores, arrests for the stealing of Christmas trees and ornaments, and the taking of evergreens growing on private property have increased markedly in the past several weeks.

Attorney Howland says, "Students should know that shoplifting offenders are being arrested at an increased rate. And they should also know that public Christmas displays are not sources of evergreens from peoples yards is also an offense."

CC Governing Board Plans Vacation Housing

The Campus Center Governing Board met last night to discuss student housing in the Campus Center Hotel during the Christmas vacation.

It was decided that housing would be on a first come first serve basis at $2.50 a night, with the Governing Board absorbing the remainder of the cost.

Room sign-ups will be taken by the normal procedure, through the Dean of Students office.

The Governing Board also decided that the ninth floor meeting rooms of the Center would be open on a twenty-four hour basis during the final examination period. Free coffee will be provided.

The Building Committee reported that three color television sets will soon be placed on the first floor concourse.

Kelman: "Academic Freedom Puny In Context Of World Problems"

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

Many of us see academic freedom as being so basic, that we have a feeling of exasperation, and we feel like yelling when people bring it into question, said Steven Kelman, a 1970 graduate of Harvard, and author of "Push comes to Shove: The Escalation of Student Protest."

Kelman, who is also past national president of the Young People's Socialist League, spoke on "The Student's Stake in Academic Freedom", sponsored by the UMass Faculty Group for Academic Freedom.

"For many of us, academic freedom has taken on the character of an axiom", said Kelman, who spoke on academic freedom from two aspects: 1. the student's stake as an individual, and 2. the student as a member of society, a more humane, concerned role.

"In dictatorship countries, people our age suffer the most in processes of indoctrination", he said. Those in power always believe that the last generation has failed to see the great, new, wonderful ideas that have come along, and each new generation that comes along receives the "most loving concern" toward attempts to indoctrinate young people to the new regime, he continued.

Kelman brought up the question of what life would be like in a university where academic freedom does not exist. He then made reference to Nazi Germany, Communist China, and the autocratic rule in Greece. Topics for term papers would be extremely limited, "browning up" of instructors, such as we know today would increase, and students would be subjected to courses in ideological indoctrination, he said.

It is "not a 1984 vision", and the question of academic freedom seems to be affecting professors mostly, though it has reached students somewhat, he said. Kelman thentold of a professor at the University of Chicago who asked each student to describe his political philosophy at the start of the course, with the implication that it would influence his future.

"I think we do have to realize the right of persons to not be interested in politics, we would become aware of this if we were in universities where over politicization occurs", he said. "The case for students' interest in academic interest is utterly overwhelming, there is nothing to gain and everything to lose", he continued.

Research may be going on that students find repulsive, and may bring up the "which-is-more-important-argument", like: "sure there should be academic freedom, but what about people starving in India or what about the war in Vietnam?

"Academic freedom becomes puny in the context of world problems", he said. "First it is necessary to consider that if academic freedom were abolished, whether radical change would occur", he continued. "Those who have control in society are those with the most power....in such a power game, those who favor dissenting against (the former) are bound to lose", said Kelman.

Freedom, particularly academic, is in the favor of those who have less power, and it is one of the few ways to attempt to check abusive power, he continued. If academic freedom were abolished tomorrow, war research and counter-insurgency would go on, and SDS would not go on, he said.

Eliminating academic freedom would not slight the injustices that go on around the world, indeed the whole experience of modern history suggests that a society without freedom particularly academix freedom, is likely to be profoundly unjust, Kelman continued.

The situation becomes worse the more advanced the country is, since the lack of free universities is harmful to the production of technicians, and just "yes-men and lackeys" are the result, he said.

Kelman then spoke of "intellectual skepticism", the belief that there is no such thing as absolute truth, and that there should always be free debate with decisions made on a democratic basis.

We should protect our own academic freedom, and "once we have gotten this done, we can go to the concrete work that can be done in the political arena," he said.

Speaking on academic freedom last night in Herter Hall, Steve Kelman, columnist for the Boston Globe, told his audience that the flexibility taken for granted by students is not so established as it is widely assumed.

Alleged Bank Robbers Arrested In Southwest

Two persons, neither of them UMass students, were arrested in Southwest yesterday by F.B.I. agents and campus police in connection with a New York City bank robbery.

William Trusty, 18, was arrested as he left the Kara Mia restaurant just outside of S.W. at 5:40 p.m. yesterday by F.B.I. agents led by special agents James Hanley of Boston and Walter Brady of Springfield.

Robert Earle, 20, was arrested two hours later in a Patterson dorm room by seven F.B.I. agents and campus police. Both were taken to Springfield and are now awaiting extradition to New York.

They are accused of holding up a Queens N.Y. bank on October 16, 1970 with three others. $54,858 was taken and one bank employee was injured by a shot from a sawed off shotgun. The three others involved in the holdup are currently in custody of N.Y. police.

The pair is also wanted for the September 24, 1970 robbery of another N.Y. bank.

Requiem For The Noodle

By ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

"We need a place that smells good, that is quiet, friendly, warm and relaxing; we want to bring people into closer contact with the process of making food."

So said Demian concerning the Noodle, the once and future (?) macrobiotic restaurant which is ending its struggle with capitalism, disinterest and RSO today, Dec. 19th. Food will be served free of charge, a policy which has been in effect for the past week in an attempt by Demian and his staff to eat up the profits."

Almost from its conception, the Noodle ran into problems. Funded originally by a grant of $500 from Program Council, which went towards the purchase of food, ads, and a pressure cooker, the restaurant ran into financial, sanitary, and management problems.

Program Council funded the Noodle as a three week trial restaurant. At the end of the three weeks, Demian went before SUG board in an attempt to secure additional funds to keep the restaurant open and have salaries for the four full time workers and the two part time helpers.

He also asked for use of the Hatch dishwasher to comply with sanitary regulations, extra room to accomodate the dinner hour rush, and more kitchen space.

However, his attempt to circumvent RSO delays by going through different channels failed; SUG board financed the Noodle for the period ending December. 18th under a non-renewable funding plan and told Demian to petition RSO if he wished to continue his enterprise.

Upon considering the hassles of operating through RSO, the operators of the Noodle decided to retire from the business world. As Demian said, "Our next move is to rest. Seek more answers. It's no shame that the Noodle has ceased present operation; it will be a crime if nothing better arises."

North Vietnam Negotiation Offer Rejected By US In Paris Talks

PARIS (AP) - North Vietnam offered Thursday to negotiate a cease fire in South Vietnam if the United States suggests any "reasonable date" for the complete withdrawal of all its forces.

Xuan Thuy's proposal to the 95th session of the Vietnam peace talks was a modification of an earlier demand for complete American pullout by next June 30.

U.S. delegate David K.E. Bruce reiterated that the United States refuses to agree to any such arbitrary withdrawal on Communist terms. He again proposed a cease fire so as to "resolve the other issues in an atomosphere free from the use of force."

Thuy said he considered the United States to have rejected the June 30 deadline, fixed by Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, head of the Viet Cong delegation, last September.

"If the United States is not willing to accept June 30, 1971, as the date for final withdrawal of all its troops, then it should suggest another reasonable date," Thuy said. "In that case, we are immediately willing to consider the American suggestion."

Thuy and Mrs. Binh indicated that North Vietnam and the Viet Cong were prepared to give American troops safe conduct out of South Vietnam in return for a commitment to a total and unconditional withdrawal.

As long ago as May 14, 1969, President Nixon said he refused to fix any advance date for the total withdrawal of American forces because this would "completely destroy" the prospects of a settlement at the Paris talks.

In the same speech, the President said he was prepared to reach a tacit understanding for withdrawal of North Vietnamese forces that would spare Hanoi the loss of face of having to admit publicly that it was pulling out.

The President has consistently rejected demands from Hanoi or from peace advocates in the United States that American forces should completely withdraw from South Vietnam in the absence of a similar withdrawal by North Vietnamese forces. Bruce made it clear that this remains the American position.

Army Denies Spy Allegations

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Army strongly denied Thursday ever spying on Illinois members of Congress, saying such allegations "are without foundation in fact."

Secretary of the Army Stanley R. Resor said that after a preliminary check "I can state that neither Sen. Stevenson, Rep. Mikva nor former Gov. Kerner are or ever have been the subject of military intelligence activities or investigations related to political activities."

The denial came in response to charges made Wednesday by Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr. D N.C., that Army agents collected intelligence information on Sen. Adlai Stevenson III, former Illinois Gov. Otto Kerner, now a federal judege, and Rep. Abner Mikva. All three are Democrats.

There were reports by a former Army intelligence agent that the military also gathered data on several other Illinois political figures, but Reser's statement was limited to Stevenson, Mikva and Kerner.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said allegations concerning other individuals would have to be checked out separately.

Resor declared that had any of the activities been carried out they would have been in violation of Army policies.

The White House issued a statement opposing domestic spying and presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said "It will not be done under this administration."

In the wake of Ervin's statement, it was learned that the Defense Department recently rescinded a memorandum telling military intelligence agents how to spot potential subversion at an Air Force base in Texas. It ordered the rules revised and then reissued them, but since has dropped the directive entirely.

Resor said his denial that the Illinois men had been subject to surveillance was made on the basis of preliminary reports and said the investigation is continuing.

With regard to Kerner, Resor said, the Army conducted a background investigation in connection with his military duties but the last entry in his file was made in 1952. Kerner was an officer in the National Guard and this type of investigation was routine, Resor said.

"I want to reaffirm the Army's desire to continue its full cooperation with Sen. Ervin and other members of Congress who share my concern that there must be no abuses whatsoever of military intelligence responsibilities," Resor said in his statement read to newsmen by Friedheim.

Berrigan's Friends Indicted For Harboring A Fugitive

PROVIDENCE (AP)-Lay theologian William Stringfellow and Poet Anthony Towne, who said they befriended the Rev. Daniel Berrigan because of his "uncommon conscience", were indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury on a charge of harboring the anti-war priest when he was a fugitive.

Two hours later, Stringfellow, a 42 year old attorney, and Towne, also 42, attired in sports coats and ties, surrendered to the U.S. marchal and pleaded innocent at their arraignment before U.S. Dist. Judge Edward W. Day.

They were released in $2,500 personal recognizance each. Through their attorney, the pair declined comment to newsmen after the arraignment.

The maximum penalty upon conviction of harboring a fugitive is five years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Father Berrigan eluded authorities for five months after he and his brother, The Rev. Philip Berrigan, were convicted April 9 of destroying draft records in Catonsville, Md. They are now serving three year terms at the federal prison in Danbury, Conn.

"I don't fear prosecution," Stringfellow said after Father Berrigan's arrest. "I know we are in jeopardy but everybody is in jeopardy in this country."

Towne and Stringfellow said in a statement following Father Berrigan's arrest: "A Christian does what he must do as a Christian. Father Berrigan is our friend and is always welcome in our home. Any visit from him is an honor for us because he is a priest of uncommon conscience, he is a citizen of urgent temporal purpose and a human being of exemplary courage."

The indictment alleged that the two harbored the priest from Aug. 7 to Aug. 11.

Stringfellow, a native of Johnston, R.I., moved to Block Island three years ago from New York because of ill health and had been collaborating with Towne on a number of books. Stringfellow relied on a cane at the arraignment.

The Berrigan brothers were recently accused by FBI director J. Edgar Hoover of being ringleaders in a plot to kidnap a high government official or White House Aide.

Hoover told a Senate committee the group wanted to hold the official as ransom for an end to U.S. bombing in Vietnam and release of so-called political prisoners in the United States.

Pentagon Issues Directive To Curb Racial Discrimination

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Pentagon issued new get tough directives Thursday to rub out racial discrimination which a top official warned threatens the combat effectiveness of the armed services.

Problems between black and white GIs have reached a critical point with "the level of frustration and anger among blacks" higher than anticipated, declared Frank W. Render II, the Pentagon's chief civil rights officer.

Acting on recommendations made by Render following a tour of U.S. bases in Europe, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird authorized the removal or transfer of civilian officials and military officers "who fail to produce satisfactory results" in dealing with racial discrimination.

Laird armed base commanders in the United States with power to declare off limits apartment houses, stores, taverns and other establishments that discriminate against blacks and other minority group servicemen.

The new directives also call for the setting of quotas and timetables to increase the numbers of minority group members in Defense Department jobs and the application of sanctions for noncompliance against defense contractors under existing Pentagon equal opportunity regulations.

Beginning next year, Render said, servicewide education programs in race relations will be given to all military personnel from generals to recruits.

Render, a 34 year old Negro, headed a 15 man Pentagon team which toured Air Force and Navy facilities in England, Spain and Italy. However, most attention was given to Army bases in West Germany where there have been several violent clashes between blacks and whites.

In one incident, black soldiers tossed a grenade into an officer's mess occupied by whites.

At Mannheim and Karlsruhe small cores of alienated blacks were found who could not be reached.

"They angrily told us that they had no reason to be fighting in a white man's army and in a white man's war" and only wanted to return to the United States with guns and ammunition, Render said.

In a 17 page report, the Render team said "the most single overriding factor" was the failure of commanders to exercise their responsibility and authority in facing human and racial problems.

TV Show Aimed at Spanish Speaking Community

Imagine yourself living in a large American city. The evening news is on TV: the film clips are familiar, the announcer's voice has the measured tones of newscaster's everywhere, but there's just one thing wrong -- you don't understand a word he is saying. You see, this city is in Latin America and English is a foreign language here.

Now add to your initial disorientation the societal effects which derive from the language barrier itself: discrimination at every turn, constant alienation, and a critical lack of information in virtually everything outside your immediate experience. What you then have is an idea -- a weak abstraction at best, but still an idea -- of what Spanish-speaking citizens experience every day in the United States.

What they share is a common disaffection born of long years of hardship and discrimination, and the mainstream of American society has reciprocated with a singular lack of interest in the increasingly serious plight of this segment of the population.

The failure to communicate lies at the heart of the problem, and so pioneer attempts to open the channels of communication are noteworthy for the basic changes they may precipitate in the lot of minority groups. One such effort is presently underway at the School of Education's Media Center at the University of Massachusetts.

After several months of planning, the Media Center, one of whose stated goals is to use its resources to benefit outside communities, has announced final plans for production of a weekly television program in Spanish. This program would serve the needs of the more than one quarter of a million Spanish-speaking citizens who live in New England yet currently lack any effective television source of information in their native tongue.

Present plans call for weekly broadcast of a half-hour program over one of the regional outlets of the Public Broadcasting Service (educational TV), with expansion to other stations throughout the country a possibility in the future.

Juan Caban, a Media Center faculty member and producer of the television program, is working with area broadcaster Julio Torres to develop the show's distribution. The title of the program, "Que Tal, Amigos?" ("What's Happening, Friends?"), has been chosen to capitalize on the popularity of the daily radio program that Mr. Torres and his wife Sonia Vivas have been presenting for the past year.

Originating at WFCR in Amherst (Five College Radio), their popular half-hour broadcast is carried by FM stations in Boston, Albany, and Waterbury, Conn., and they are thus well-known in Spanish-speaking circles throughout New England.

A seasoned professional with nineteen years of broadcasting experience behind him, Julio sees the move to television as the natural extension of the functions of his radio program: "Our show is regularly followed by a great number of the Spanish-speaking people in the Northeast. For many of them it is the main source information, of entertainment, of education about their common cultural heritage. The desire to provide access to TV for these people on a regular basis is only natural."

Juan Caban, producer of the planned enterprise at the Media Center, agrees: "The need is there. Now, with the combination of the Center's production capabilities and Julio's broadcasting experience, that need can be fulfilled."

The proposed format of the program is flexible and will incorporate interviews, news, and entertainment geared to Latin American tastes and points of view. Since 80% of the 250,000 Spanish-speaking people in New England are of Puerto Rican origin, the program is directed to them, although the essential point is that the content is designed to appeal to a Latin American audience and thus will include news and features from all of Latin America.

An integral part of the program will be public service announcements and features of topical interest to the Spanish-speaking community, a service which in large part accounts for the considerable measure of trust and respect which Julio commands among his radio audience.

In the past, Julio's concern for the situation of his countrymen has ranged from personal involvement in the plight of migrant tobacco workers in the Connecticut Valley to the giving of detailed instructions concerning continuing education programs for members of minority groups. It is hoped that encouragement and information on such topics as health care, educational assistance, work programs, and the like will be even more effective with the addition of the visual medium of TV.

Mr. Caban sees this television project as part of a larger effort with which the School of Education's Media Center is concerned. Thus the Center is working with Maria Reyes of the Puerto Rican migrant workers office in Boston on plans to expand its operations to the field of television.

In addition, members of the Center's staff are planning a project with Miss Reyes' office to bring mobile drama troupes to migrant workers' camps, a plan that will provide new means of expression by appealing to workers in terms of their own cultural experience.

This sort of direct and clear communication, Mr. Caban stresses, is a crucial step in helping to forge a sense of identity, a sense which helps to break the relentless syndrome of alienation and desperation so common to the Spanish-speaking members of our society.

Julio Torres, Maria Reyes and Juan Caban, of the School of Education Media Center discuss the new weekly television program designed to help New England's Spanish speaking peoples.

Under charter to the UMass Marine Station, the Peggybell heads into Gloucester Harbor on a trip to measure salt content, temperature and other factors relating to the circulation and pollution level of the water.

UMass Marine Station Opens In Gloucester

Although workmen are still putting the finishing touches on the laboratory building, the UMass Marine Station in Gloucester is already in business.

With the 10-member staff operating out of temporary quarters, work has already begun on marine research supported by the UMass Water Resources Research Center, the Atomic Energy Commission and the National Science Foundation.

At the same time, a $35,000 remodeling job is in progress on a laboratory, office and classroom building that will be the station's permanent home. Located at Hodgkins Cove on the Ipswich Bay side of Gloucester, the site includes two buildings and a large granite pier that can accommodate ocean-going vessels drawing 18 feet of water.

"Our main research interests are in a subject we call primary production," explained Prof. Charles S. Yentsch, Director of the Marine Station. The term refers to the photosynthetic process by which marine phytoplankton begin the ocean's food chain.

Studies in this area have direct application to pollution problems, Prof. Yentsch explained. "These things begin to react to pollution very quickly and are good indicators. If you begin to add excess nutrients, for example, you begin to see changes in the phytoplankton and these changes stand out loud and clear," he said.

The UMass marine station is designed as both a research and a teaching facility with a resident student body. The ultimate mission of the station is to provide a marine research facility not only for the University but also to serve marine-based enterprises throughout the state via research and extension programs.

Who Speaks For Humanities

It's been a long two weeks since the deadline for nominations by faculty and department heads to the last remaining position in the Chancellor's Cabinet.

One day soon then, will come the casual announcement that So-and-So has been appointed as "Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs."

And if the administrative cards fall according to recent pattern, the Technocrats will be served.

For there will still be no one at the upper levels of University administration to speak for the Humanists on the campus.

Consider the fact that every top-level appointment since our Botanist-Chancellor took office last June has gone to a type scientifically-oriented by virtue of training, academic discipline and disposition.

The Acting Provost is a physicist.

The Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs is a geologist.

The Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Affairs is an engineer.

The Vice-Chancellor for Public Affairs is an engineer.

So, who will speak for the humanities?

The decision will be regurgitated by the computer during the Winter hiatus, no doubt.

And Technocracy will again be served.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR must be typed, double spaced, at sixty spaces and must carry the writer's signature, address, and telephone number (all of which will be withheld upon request). The limit is one page and the deadline is 5 p.m. the day prior to intended publication. The editors reserve the right to edit all letters.

Washed-Out Semester

For the longest time it seemed as though last semester never ended. The strike gradually wound itself down and people drifted away from campus. There was none of the tense final exam fever which traditionally marks the end of semesters here. Things just slowed down, and stopped.

It was well into June before anyone really realized what had happened last May. The strike had come and had taken away the rationale for academic work. School stopped on May first and people drifted away during the two weeks that followed.

And the Summer came and people got jobs and went swimming and forgot about the strike and the war and the panthers.

By the time this semester rolled around people looked on the strike as some distant and past event which everyone lived through. It was like looking back on 1967 when the Red Sox won the pennant or on the Convention in Chicago in 1968.

But the war still continued and the panthers still hid the universities reopened, none the worse, or better, for the experience.

And then came Thanksgiving and now its Christmas. Exams begin in two weeks or so and then the semester will end in it's normal manner. There will be no strike committee meeting lasting until dawn, the only people marching in Dickinson hall will be ROTC cadets and the faculty will be able to grade students as they always had, with no concern for special policies and directives.

The students of this chool, like the students at just about every other school in the country, have gone back to their prestrike academic lives.

But this semester was more calm than even the semesters preceeding last Spring. Nothing happened at UMass. There was a Dow chemical demonstration and a Rockefeller demonstration and both of these had guerella theatre shows. But nothing happened.

Students didn't even worry about open house or coed dorms or rent hikes. There was some talk for a while about getting a new Cage and there was violence on campus when students knocked down the Cage doors at a Homecoming concert. But nothing happened.

It was the semester when everybody just rested. They were tired of the great wave of concern and fashionable radicalism which swept them into the strike last Spring. No cares. No concerns. Just getting up at 9:05 on Monday for Botany.

Next semester will probably not be much different from this one. Sure, more exciting things may happen. Second semesters always get more demonstrations than first semesters do; students get tired of studying by March and demonstrations are more fashionable than softball games.

But by the time next May rolls around the students of the University will just settle down to finals again, dropping any cause which they might have picked up during the Spring.

One year after the Great Strike of the Youth Culture the students will remain unchanged, the nation will remain unchanged. The war will continue and Richard Nixon will begin to think about 1972.

How They Merged St. Nick

WASHINGTON--Although there was a great deal of excitement at the time of the merger of Santa Claus and the conglomerate of Consolidated Consortium United, it did not work out as well as everyone had expected.

If you recall, a press conference was held at the North Pole where Harley B. Dickens, the chairman of the Board of Consolidated, announced that his company had bought out Santa Claus for $150 million worth of Consolidated stock, which was then selling at $144 a share.

Mr. Claus was reluctant to sell the operation, but his wife had insisted. "You're getting old and you have to think about your security when you stop working," she said.

Dickens told the press there would be absolutely no change in the Santa Claus operation, and it would continue as it had in the past. Santa Claus would still be in charge, and the only thing that CCU would contribute would be top flight management, resources and efficiency. Dickens pointed out that since CCU was a worldwide company, more children would benefit from Christmas than ever before.

"We are not changing the image of Santa Claus," he said. "We'll just be streamlining it."

After pictures were taken of Mr. Claus and Mr. Dickens, the chairman returned to New York and for several months Santa Claus continued to operate as he had done in the past.

But one day a CCU systems analysis expert reported to Dickens that he made a study of the Santa Claus setup and he had several suggestions as to how to improve it.

"The idea of children writing individual letters to Santa Claus is time-consuming and wasteful. It takes 10 elves working eight hours a day to open and read all the mail. This is wasteful and inefficient and requires overtime to fill all the orders.

"I therefore suggest that we make all children write to Santa Claus on computer cards, checking off the toys they want. We would put a warning on the cards that any child who bends, folds or mutilates a card would be automatically cut off Santa's list."

Dickens okayed the idea, and although Santa Claus protested vigorously that it would take the personal touch out of Christmas, the chairman assured him that Consolidated would run a large advertising campaign explaining that the computer card would actually make writing to Santa more fun.

A computer complex was installed at the North Pole and several gnomes were hired to feed it.

Unfortunately, a few months later, while Santa Claus and his elves were hard at work, the Consolidated stock started slipping. From $14 a share, it went down to $10, Dickens ordered economies. First he depleted the work force in Santa's toy shop by 50%. Then, instead of a list of 100 toys for children to choose from, he cut it down to three.

He announced "regretfully" that because of the state of the economy, there would have to be a handling charge on every parcel delivered more than 30 miles from the North Pole.

Once again, Santa protested, but to no avail. The Consolidated stock was now selling at $2 a share, and Dickens telexed Mr. Claus, "Get rid of the reindeer."

This was too much for Santa Claus, and he took his life savings, $2,500, and offered to buy back his own company. By then Consolidated had filed for bankruptcy, and the creditors were happy to take anything they could get.

"We were millionaires on paper," Santa said to his wife as he put the last touches on a doll house. "But I stopped believing in myself."

"I was wrong, Santa," Mrs. Claus said tearfully. "Better you should work for yourself and die with your boots on."

The first thing Santa Claus did before making his deliveries this Christmas was to load the computer on his sleigh and drop it on Harley Dickens' home.

High Cost of Calls

To the Editor:

As the students' attorney I must express my personal concern at the number of spurious bomb threats still being received in the Southwest Area. As the Collegian recently reported, one young man who allegedly made such a telephone threat has been apprehended and faces the distinct possibility that he will be sent to the Grand Jury & ultimately answer to charges which, if convicted, might require him to serve ten years in the state prison (c. 269 Mass. Gen. Laws sec. 14) or one year in the federal penitentiary (18 U.S.C.A. sec. 837 (d) plus lesser punishments and fines.

In this posture it seems quite clear that whatever the Campus Police are doing by way of investigation and apprehension (which by its very nature we cannot fully know), it is quietly and relentlessly effective. Regardless of the view any individual may have regarding making bomb threats as pranks or whatever, it strikes me that since the police quite obviously can apprehend persons suspected of this particular offense, and since my own evaluation of the views of Southwest Area residents involved suggests that they are pretty fed up with the whole business and are not likely to conceal an offender for very long, its a pretty foolish (perhaps, stupid) type of activity to engage in.

In cataloguing the rather foolish and unnecessary activities that some people seem motivated to engage in, this is one of the real losers. Since that particular activity has engaged the attention of the United States Congress, a violation necessarily involves the F.B.I., which unwelcome spector I would personally prefer not to be investigated by for such an unproductive and ill-considered undertaking.

It is neither my function nor desire to preach morality of any student's personal behaviour or his predilection to commit criminal offenses if that be his aim. I do not do so here. I do want to simply point out that the cost of any such phone call may be ridiculously high in terms of the sanctions imposed and the anticipated legal fees which may run to some thousands of dollars.

I do hope that those who are inclined to indulge themselves in this way will consider the total investment that such a call represents.

Dear Misinformed

To the Editor:

Since I was substantially misquoted in an interview with reporter Kerry Kelley last week ("Money, Food Needed For Dorchester, S.C.," Daily Collegian, Dec. 10, 1970, I offer here-with some factual corrections.

In the first place, the UMass Committee on Poverty is not "starting to reorganize its campaign to send food, money and clothing to the poverty-stricken county of Dorchester, South Carolina." The Committee this year has not supported the drive as a body; in fact, at its meeting of Tuesday, December 15th (after Miss Kelley's article was printed), the Committee voted 8-7-1 to declare a "moratorium" on the drive and withdraw use of its name because of alleged "ambiguities" concerning the drive. From this, one should assume that the project was, and is, being actively supported only by individuals acting from individual concern.

Second, Dorchester County is not "basically comprised of two smaller communities--Ridgeville, which is black, and Four Holes, which is made up of American Indians." Even a casual glance at a South Carolina road map will verify this.

Third, I am not chairman of the Committee, having resigned that position in September to work as campaign manager for F. James Gensheimer, who made a strong but unsuccessful bid for the office of State Representative, First Franklin District.

Fourth, I never said anything about using the University community chest as "a possible means of expressing the university's conscious (sic)" in the Dorchester County drive.

Other facts, of less importance, were distorted in the article, and I would advise Miss Kelley to be more careful in future attempts. She did emphasize one fact, however, which I judged to be worthy of mention: that in this country, with its trillion-dollar gross national product, there are poor people--thousands of poor people--slowly starving to death. Our fund-raising drive is aimed to provide food and medicine for only one of many crisis-areas in the U.S. Concerned individuals may address donations or inquiries to: "Dorchester County Relief Fund" in care of: Ann Nichols, B-3 Emerson House, 546-7234.

Honesty Is Better, But . . .

To the Editor:
Dormitory Residents:

Due to a phasing out of night receptionist security personnel, the protection of life, limb, and property has appreciably decreased all across campus. In recent months, students have been subjected to assaults at knifepoint, robberies at gunpoint, loss of property, and late night bomb threats. These incidents have resulted in an unprecidented deterioration in the overall quality of residence hall life, and many students have been anxious to know how we can reestablish normal living conditions. Some residence halls have already responded by locking their dormitories as early as seven o'clock on week-ends, but these initiatives cannot at present be funded.

In January a $167,000.00 deficiency budget request, a part of which will go to increased student and adult night receptionists will come before the state legislature. If this budget request is passed, we can all look forward to more secure dormitory living. But this bill may not pass unless you and your parents support this legislation by telephoning or writing appropriation committee, Rep. Anthony Scibelli, (Dem. Springfield), whose address is as follows: Chairman House Appropriations Committee, State House, Boston, Massachusetts.

Tell these legislators how badly we need increased security, and urge them to support this bill.

WFCR

To the Editor:

As the member of the Faculty Senate who, at the request of a constituent, introduced the original resolution calling for an investigation of the dismissal of the Callads from their positions at WFCR, I should like to comment on Peter Pascarelli's remarks under the heading "Flying Hatchets."

Mr. Pascarelli deserves praise for defending a person who he thinks is being unfairly treated. This is the way many people feel about the Callands.

Mr. Pascarelli is also right in assuming that the policies of WFCR are a matter of concern to a wide community of listeners, although this community cannot be precisely defined. The issues in the present case appear to be basic, and the members of the WFCR community are entitled to know the facts. It seemed that the only way to get at them was through an investigation by an impartial committee.

Writing Is Dead

I think writing is dead! Not just lying there numb or tired, but truly dead -- spiritually, physically, and emotionally.

Perhaps this is for the better, though, for writing may be one of the main causes of the downfall of humanity. This shows how important writing is; as writing dies, so does humanity.

Pollution, murder, abortion, cults that use murder to reach their desired ends, revolutionaries -- this is what our world is made of. Writing has contributed a great deal to it.

Writing is the root of all evil. Without writing would revolutionists be able to spread propaganda? Without writing would cultists get the publicity they want? Without writing would women know of abortions and how to go about getting one? Without writing would murderers be able to buy deadly weapons through mail-order catalogs? Without writing there would be no need for paper mills that pollute our streams and skies, would there?

The answers are easy.

It all started a long time back when that revolutionary, Guttenberg, had to go and make a block printing press. Since then the world has been going straight downhill. Just look back into history and you'll find examples of the downfall.

The Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence -- or how about all those papers the early revolutionaries of our country wrote? Even that great British writer William Shakespeare wrote of death, murder, and treason. Now we are told to read him, but all he does is fill our heads with ideas.

Samuel Clemens wrote of skipping school, stealing, and just plain mischief. It's gotten even worse today, though. Look around you. Isn't it terrible? Bob Dylan, John Lennon, Simon and Garfunkle, Burt Baccarach, and Hal David; what a line-up that is! All of them writing about love, peace, and raindrops falling on your head. Things that are really dead.

I must confess that I contribute to this mess, too. Take a look at this theme; what a mess? If I hadn't had to do it, I would have had a lot more free time. I would have saved ink. Most important, you wouldn't have had to read this and suffer through 300 words.

I truly pity you. Writing is dead.

Stigma And The Homosexual

"Free, in other words, exiled among the living. I have made myself a soul to fit my dwelling. My cell is so sweet. Let me therefore live between these walls for a man's lifetime. I can continue to die until my death, amidst all these widowers. Lamps, washbasin, regulations, broom. And the straw mattress, my spouse.

Jean Genet, Our Lady of the Flowers

In order to understand the homosexual personality, it is important to grasp the concept of stigma. Stigma results when there is a discrepancy between one's virtual and actual social identity. A deeply discrediting attribute which deviates from the norm constitutes a stigma, and it allows people to reduce, in their minds, the stigmatized individual from a whole and usual person to a tainted, discounted one. It is important to realize, however, that no characteristic is inherently stigmatic. Stigma results when a given attribute comes into conflict with the social expectation; with what society defines as normal. Since stigmatized people internalize the same social rules and expectations as normals, they also have a negative reaction to their stigma. In American society, homosexuality is a stigma and spoils the homosexual's social identity. It cuts him off from society and from himself so that he stands a discredited person facing an unaccepting world.

The homesexual has two options in managing his spoiled social identity or stigma. He can openly assert his homesexuality and experience negative social sanctions, or he can learn to "pass." Since the homosexual in a heterosexual society is different, he becomes more acutely aware of the imbeded and routine norms operating in society. He must learn these rules well in order to "pass," or he opens himself to the negative mechanisms of social control employed by society to maintain social order.

The consequences of possessing a stigma are many and varied. The initial realization of one's difference can be shattering. It throws the homesexual into a whirlpool of confusion where he must learn to swim quickly in society's waters or drown. Society's negative social sanctions of guilt, shame, and anxiety are so effective, that the initial awareness that one is homesexual is excrutiating torture. Even more devastating then rejection by others is rejection by the self. Usually, one realizes his sexual identity during adolescence, a time in which one affirms with joy his growth and integrates his personality. For the homesexual, adolescence is a time of needless pain, confusion, and disintegration. Instead of experiencing the joy of an emerging sexuality, the homosexual must cower in the loneliness of his difference.

After the initial, cataclysmic anxiety of realizing one is homosexual, the process of "passing" must be perfected. This requires a thorough knowledge of the social rules and a developing expertise in manipulating these norms. Unless one is completely open about his homosexuality, there is always a consciousness that one is playing roles and switching the masks at the appropriate times. Thus, in the present American society, the homosexual is unable to assert his authentic self without experiencing either self-inflicted or societaly inflicted negative social sanctions.

Since most of the difficulties homosexuals experience result from the social reaction to their stigma, homophile organizations attempt to give the homosexual a social context in which to experience his authentic self freely. They also attempt to provide the homosexual with an atmosphere of mutual support where he can begin to remove the debris of personality destruction created by society. Loneliness, guilt, despair, alienation and persecution are all phenomena which the homosexual must come to grips with. For the homosexual, these organizations provide a means of coping with the often deafening silence of the spheres.

Hi Ho Silverbus!

Free U Bus To Return

Silverbus may be returning from Houston soon. The 1960 International Harvester bus was converted last year by eight students in the College of Arts and Sciences as an experiment in exposure education.

The bus went as far south as Cuernavaca, Mexico last year but blew its engine outside Houston on its way back to Amherst during the Strike.

Sponsored by Free University its occupants sought to encounter and participate, observe, analyse and record culture and counterculture, political events, national and whole - earth trends.

Other programs sponsored by free University which are aimed at bringing people together include University Without Walls, Credit-bargaining, Counter-classes, Cooperatives, Cosmic stuff and Kam Sutra. Free University is interested in and promotes anything that you want to learn, anything you want to teach.

NES Christmas Party To Round Out Semester

The final special event of this semester for N.E.S. tutoring will occur this Saturday. A Christmas party is planned for the Springfield centers.

All tutors and interested parties are invited to participate. A Student Senate bus will provide the transportation and will leave from the lobby entrance of the Whitmore Administration Building at 12:45 P.M. tomorrow.

Activities for the party will be centered around decorating each center and the singing of carols. However, the main emphasis will be to have a good time, which means tutors will come back exhausted.

Although the Christmas party is the last special event, tutoring will not end until December 22, 1970. Therefore, the buses running to Springfield will not be making the trip next Wednesday. A finals schedule has not been worked out yet for buses but the Centers in Springfield will be open.

Tutoring for the Spring semester and a new orientation will probably start once again during the first week of February. The new year will bring a concentrated effort to deal specifically with problems and methods of tutoring. There is a plan to have a day when all the colleges involved in the tutoring program will meet and have a brainstorming session.

With these new plans in mind, we hope the students at the University of Massachusetts look to the next semester with equal excitement and hope. Also, to the student body, we of N.E.S. wish you a Merry Christmas.

Grass: Why Not Make It Legal?

Editor's Note:

This article is part of a weekly series dealing with such topics as drug research, the "drug culture", drug addiction, drugs and religion, altered states of consciousness, and the use of drugs in other cultures such as the American Indian. This series will be sponsored by Room to Move, but will encourage readers to react to the articles by mailing or bringing in questions, rebuttal, original statements, or interesting excerpts from various publications, c/o John Dunphy, Room to Move, Student Union (located in the old barber shop across from the post office). The hope is that this series will become a medium for an ongoing exchange of views on drugs and related uses.

With the possible exception of speeding (highway), marijuana smoking is certainly the most widely committed crime in the United States today. Despite extremely severe penalties against its use, an estimated twenty million Americans have smoked pot at least once.

The dilemma we find ourselves currently embroiled in is the question of prosecution of "criminals." Should all offenders be arrested and carted off to jail with the rapists, robbers and murderers or is our society to adopt a very lenient stance as regards this rather significant minority in American Society? Certainly most would agree that the penalties are much too harsh and should be lessened, while varied portenders of the future talk about the legalization of "mother nature." As with other things, time will tell.

For now, let us consider the two foremost agencies which will have a great deal to do with the courses of action taken in dealing with marijuana: the medical profession and law enforcement agencies. Seeing that smoking grass is a perplexing situation for these two big brothers to oversee, the focus will be on the problems presented relative to the smoking of marijuana.

For the medical profession it seems that this weed, which was used in far away China in 2737 B.C., for who knows what, has presented some rather pressing problems. With all due consideration, it seems fair to state that the medical profession in general and the American Medical Association in particular, have based their objections to marijuana on what they do not know about it rather than what they do know.

The AMA describes grass as "a dangerous drug and as such a public health concern," while the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) believes that, pending further study, marijuana "must be considered a risk to the mental and physical health of users." It seems then, that given certain legalistic realities, the medical profession given certain legalistic realities, the medical profession is engaged in some sort of stalling action at the present time.

The legalistic realities spoken of, it might be pointed out, originated in the 1930's through strong lobbying efforts by the liquor industry for reasons which are only too obvious.

As alluded to previously, there is a trend at present within law enforcement agencies to sort of look the other way when confronted with the casual user of pot. Thus we have witnessed the birth of so called "free zones" where grass may be smoked without fear. On a grand scale Woodstock seems to have led the way for the campus and the festival, while the other bastion appears to be the middle class living room.

If, then, marijuana use is accepted to such an extent, then why not rationalize the situation and make it legal?

If, then, marijuana use is accepted to such an extent, then why not rationalize the situation and make it legal? Simple! According to a recent poll, about 165 million Americans, all with enough problems of their own, feel, "uncomfortable with the thought of altered states of consciousness." And that, gentlemen, is the opinion of the majority.

"Clouds" Ceiling Is low

By JOE BYRNES and BOB NESTI
Fine Arts Staff

Wednesday night the UT production of CLOUDS opened and most of it just floated above the audience. The adaptation of Aristophanes' classic is infused with references to make it relevant to its 1970 audience. It doesn't work, and despite some excellent individual performances, the play fails to achieve its goal.

The action takes place in Athens in the time of Socrates and concerns the conivings of Strepsiades in trying to evade paying his debts through the use of Socratic logic. The plot rambles too much, especially in the first act which has the tendency of boring its audience until the entrance of Stephen Driscoll and Stephen Schnetzer about an hour into the production. The second act is better, but one comes away with the feeling that he just watched a cartoon not having seen the feature.

There is much additional material added to this production which makes it both confusing and out-of-focus. Much of the social satire evades the viewer, the bits about the Kennedy's for example, and some of it's overdone.

The play is hardly bawdy, more often than not it's caught up in its own wit which seems only to amuse a limited audience. What is funny in the script, such as Socrates and his extracurricular interest in his students, is only vaguely hinted at. The character of Socrates wavers from a brawny he-man to a screaming queen, as the director obviously has difficulty in defining this character.

What salvages CLOUDS and makes it worth seeing are some of the most original and entertaining performances seen on this campus in a long while. Donna Rossini, chorus leader of the Clouds, Goddesses of Heaven, is the girl to watch as she holds this production together. In an amusing spoof of the Gods, she plays the role of a dumb flooze with a Brooklyn accent, she never seems static and intrigues the audience into eagerly awaiting her every line.

The previously mentioned duo of Stephen Driscoll and Stephen Schnetzer, as Sophistry and Philosophy respectively, give most of what substance there is to the first act in their difficult debate between the Old and New ways of

CLOUDS a review

Education. Driscoll is more than convincing as the shrewd, sniveling, effeminate pederast whose every gesture seems fitting to his obnoxious character.

The subchorus has perhaps the most difficult aspect of the production to work with, yet handles it well. How Tom Leek keeps his facial distortions for the length of time he does is just plain mystifying - Ned Daly will probably walk around this campus for the next semester looking like a fish out of water.

The female chorus of Clouds are effective thanks to the fine choreography of Janet T. Craft. John Warchol is again excellent but unfortunately he is once more type-cast in a small character part. He brings the needed humor to a comedy with far too few comic moments. Unfortunately the rest of the cast does little to enhance the production.

Gary Stewart has once again done a fine job but even the best of direction can not hide the flaws flagrant in the script. He uses Jeff Fiala's imaginative, thrust-stage set to all its possible advantages.

However in utilizing it some movements are contrived and meaningless. Unlike most UT productions, the lighting is stagnant.

The costumes are perhaps the best aspect of the play in catching the intended, bawdy atmosphere. Liz Weiss uses bright yellows, reds, and oranges and an assorted collection of free-flowing phalli which bring more life and humor to the production than the script could ever achieve.

The original music score by Jay McAuliffe, more mediocre than original, causes one to leave Bartlett whistling favorite musical numbers--all from other shows. The score is bland and imitative to the point of embarassment and the music at times has the effect of slowing down the proceedings rather than enlivening them.

Although some of the lyrics are adapted from the translation, someone wisely allows them to go without credit. It would seem that with all the liberties taken with the original script, the banal lyrics would have been eliminated. Actors must be the most understanding creatures on Earth to bravely stand on a stage and, unflinching, mouth lyrics like these. CLOUDS, hardly the production anticipated to be, does contain some interesting and funny moments and may be worth seeing for some performances alone. A good deal of the satire is vague as this adaptation attempts too much with too little coming across. Perhaps the play is best described through a malicious description a character uses for another cast member's phallus: presposterous.

Gymnasts Face Army In Home Opener

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity gymnastics team will open their home season as they host a challenging Army squad tomorrow at 3 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The Redmen, who opened their regular season last weekend with a 157-149 triumph over Southern Connecticut State College, hope to extend their winning ways against the undefeated Cadet squad.

Army began its season Dec. 15 by scoring 137 points in a win over the University of Pittsburg. The following week, with an improved team effort, it defeated the Merchant Marine Academy by scoring 146 points. With their continuing improvement, the Cadets will give the Redmen stiff competition.

For Army, Amidon, Rutherford and Leger share the all-around honors. Cadet coach Frank Wells is faced with a situation where none of his all-around men are strong in all six events, but Army has a number of outstanding specialists who pose a real threat.

UMass will go with basically the same lineup it used to defeat So. Conn. Representing the Redmen in the all-around event will be Norm Vexler, Tony Vacca and Rich Seikunas. Coach Erik Kjeldsen will be relying on strong routines from John Calabria in floor exercise, Rick Riley on side horse, Jay Aronstein on rings, Bob Henry in the long horse vault, and Tom Mysliecki on high bar, all of whom were outstanding in last week's win over So. Conn.

Frosh Hoopsters Host AIC

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

After winning four games in a row against no losses the UMass freshman basketball team will battle the American International College frosh, who are 3-2, in the Cage tonight at 6 p.m.

Led by a very balanced scoring attack the little Redmen will be up against a very quick team from AIC. To date the UMass frosh have four players averaging in double figures: Rick Pitino (18.3), Pete Trow (17), Al Skinner (15.8) and Art Levine (12). Also, center John Olson has been averaging 9.8 points per game.

In five games the AIC frosh have beaten Westfield State, Springfield Tech, and So. Connecticut, but have lost to Bryant and Stratton, and Leicester Junior College. Against Leicester AIC's 6'4 center Skip Thompson, probably the best player, scored 27 points. The other four starters for AIC will be guards Clarence Cooper and Dan Gould and forwards Gary Gradzicki and John Wrzesien.

The little Redmen will be hoping to keep out of the kind of foul trouble they got into in Connecticut. If UMass can keep up the kind of play it has shown in its first four games it should be able to come away with a victory.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Places children tend to adopt the habits of companions. This being so, it s imperative for parents of the little Pisces girl or boy to keep close watch ou friends. Places is quick to lean over in direction taken by associates. Without appearing meddlesome, the wise parent of a Pisces zeonaster sees to it that good influences are available for children to emulate. Otherwise, problems build and the Pisces child can be trapped in a dilemma between what is wholesome and what is destructive.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Avoid exerting undue pressure on those who perform special services. Light touch wins your way. Build solidly for future expansion. Don't rush. Study terrain.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Good tunar aspect coincides with creative endeavors, relations with children, other loved ones. Give and you also will receive. Be ready for breakthrough. Decide on special relationship.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Stick to what is familiar. This is no time for radical innovations. Older family member deserves attention. Heed voice of experience. Strive to put across idea with clarity, precision.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): You move about — there is change in basic pattern. Relatives make overtures; reunion is indicated. Be diplomatic. Someone is about to present you with pleasant alternative.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Take care with finances. Mistake to wear rose-colored glasses. There seems to be a catch in money proposals. Be cautious in this area. Then you will avoid unnecessary waste.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Mystery clouds waft away, leaving opening for real opportunity. Take initiative. Make inquiries. Stress greater independence. Invest in your talents.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22) You find that what you have been seeking is likely to be ultra-elusive. Accent on mystery, hidden matters, the end of special activity. What you seek is already at hand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Friends play significant role. You can make new start toward greater independence. Accept social invitations. Pounce on opportunity for happiness, fulfillment. No more delay.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): You can be at right place at right time. Key is to check authoritative source. Take advantage of any foreknowledge. False modesty does not fit in with current scheme of affairs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Accent on communications. Publish, write and advertise. Break through red tape. Consolidate travel plans. Look ahead. Stop brooding about past. Concentrate on current opportunities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Settlement indicated in legal affairs. What seemed a roadblock is cleared. Know this and don't sell yourself short. Key is to check investment possibilities. You will obtain what is needed.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Accent on marriage, partnership, relationship of a permanent nature. Knowing this, don't involve yourself in games. Stakes are high — and for keeps. Take it slow and easy. Wait, observe.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are capable of helping people out of their difficulties. However it is not too often that others actually aid you. Thus, it behooves you to be more discriminating. Don't take for granted that motives of others are beyond reproach. Contact made last year has led to situation which has demanded time, attention and money. Last October, you began to see situation with greater clarity. Now, base actions on what you learned.

Survival at the Cage

We were stranded for three hours outside in the freezing cold night. Coming from inside, the sound of a basketball bouncing off a hardwood floor brought the freezing crowd to a frenzy, thrusting them a full six inches forward towards the "reluctant coliseum". Throngs of basketball Groupies were exchanging statistics as we watched in awe, the mass of people about us. Suddenly, without the slightest warning, the waxing aroma of a ham and Swiss cheese sandwich, mingled with the curling steam of hot coffee, struck our olfactory senses. We turned and faced an eminently happy individual chowing down right before us on a beautiful ham and Swiss sandwich while quaffing the hot coffee.

"Where d'ya get that?"

"Over at the Campus Center," he replied between obviously pleasurable gulps,

"You also get a package of cupcakes, potato chips and another sandwich along with a great cardboard box you can keep — for a pretty cheap price, too!"

Before we could speak again, we found ourselves carried inside.

After the game, we spotted him again carrying the telltale box, "Hey, how d'ya like the game?"

"It was great! Especially the Tuna sandwich I saved for the last half."

Redmen Have Memories Of Last Year For AIC Tilt

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Although it occurred almost a year ago, UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman is not likely to let his charges forget what happened last December 19th. For on that date, the Yellow Jackets of American International College dealt the Redmen one of their most discouraging defeats of the season, 73-72.

But this is a new season and AIC is a much different club than the unit which upset UMass a year ago. New head coach Hilton White does not have the talent nor the experience that his predecessor Bill Callahan had on his squad that went to the NCAA nationals.

Gone from the Yellow Jacket basketball scene are such stars as Greg Hill who averaged 24 points and 19 rebounds a game in 1969-70, Mike White, Bob Rutherford and Alan Bush. The loss of these key players has been quite evident in the performance of AIC thus far.

Coming into the UMass tilt, the Yellow Jacket have a 3-3 mark against some mediocre competition. In its most recent outing, AIC nipped Southern Connecticut, 76-70, on Wednesday night.

The only real veteran returning from last year's NCAA squad is captain Tom Doyle. At 5'11 he was the team's top backcourt reserve and has emerged as the team's leader in 1970-71. Considered an excellent defensive guard, he can also be damaging offensively as his 21 points against So. Conn. attest.

Joining the veteran Doyle in the Yellow Jackets small but high-scoring backcourt is sophomore Al Alvarez. He scored at a 15.3 points per game clip as a freshman and netted 21 in the Yellow Jackets last victory.

In the pivot for AIC is junior George Kastrinakis. Although he managed to nab 10.8 caroms a game last season, he was a bit disappointing at times and the Yellow Jackets will need more from the 6'6 center if they are to go anywhere. Evidence of this is the fact that when he pulled down 18 rebounds, his team was able to defeat a tough So. Conn. unit.

Helping out up front are the forwards, Steve Washington and Forrest Bateman. Washington is a graduate of Westchester Community College and his ability to adapt to the Yellow Jacket style of play will have a lot to do with AIC's success. At Westchester, the 6'3 junior averaged over 20 points per contest. Bateman, a 6'3 senior, has little experience and is a sign of AIC's waning basketball fortunes.

Beyond these five, the Yellow Jackets have little to offer. John Clendenin, a 6'6 senior forward, and John O'Hara, a 6'7 junior forward, could add some much needed rebounding help up front. But after these two, the AIC bench has little to offer coach White.

The Redmen, coming off of an excellent win over UConn should be more than ready to exact the revenge for last year's upset. After encouraging performances at both Rhody and Connecticut, UMass basketball fortunes are looking better than ever.

A win in this one would be doubly sweet for UMass not only because it makes up for last year's heart-breaker but also since a Redman win here would tie the UMass record for consecutive regular season victories of sixteen. The Redmen won their last ten games of 1969-70 and have captured their first five this season. The old record was set way back on January 16, 1935 and culminated a winning streak begun back in February of 1933.

Coach Leaman will likely go with the same starting five that has done so well so far. That would mean that John Betancourt, Mike Pagliara, Chris Coffin, Ken Mathias and Julius Erving would be on the court for the opening tap. Game time is at 8 p.m.

Cartoon by Fred Rosenthal

LAYUP LINES - In a recently released New England basketball poll, the undefeated Redmen were placed in third position. Leading the poll was likewise unbeaten Holy Cross followed by perennial power Providence. Considering the play of these two units thus far, the Redmen will have their hands full if they are to repeat as New England champs.

Skaters, Grapplers In Action

Two of UMass' undefeated winter squads take to the wars of competition this weekend as the hockey team takes on Norwich tonight and the Wrestling team travels to New York U. tomorrow for a quadrangular meet with N.Y.U., Gettysburg, and Westchester State.

The skatemen are riding a six game winning streak into this 8 p.m. encounter with an always tough Norwich team.

The grapplers take a two match unbeaten record into their meet.

Tracksters Meet More Ivy Tomorrow At Brown

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

The UMass track team finds itself, for the second week in a row, in the confines of the Ivy League when it travels to Brown for a dual meet tomorrow with the Bruins with the first event set to begin at 2 p.m.

To date Brown sports a 2-0 record with victories over Boston University and Northeastern, the second place finisher in the New Englands in both indoor and outdoor track last year.

The Bruins are strong in several events, but as coach Ken O'Brien has indicated they are strong in the same events that his Redmen are strong in and here is where the meet will be decided: in head to head confrontations in these common strong events.

Coach O'Brien went on to say, "the winner of the meet will be decided on who runs hardest tomorrow."

The hurdlers, sprinters, jumpers, and distance men comprise these confrontations. In the hurdles Brown will match Robbins and Miller against the UMass tandem of Jim Graves and Bill Landry.

In its first two meets Brown has been able to sweep the sprint, but the Bruins will have their hands full with the strong Redman foursome of Walter Mayo, Ron Harris, Tony Pendleton, and Kevin Filley. O'Brien calls the sprint "the key event in the meet."

The high jump pits two Bruin high jumpers who have cleared 6'4" and 6'2" against the trio of Cal Carpenter, Ed Shaughnessey and Bill Hackler, who cleared 6'4" in last weeks season.

The distance events, the mile and two-mile, feature Cosgrove of Brown who has run 4:17 this year against Ron Wayne and Rick Barry in the mile and Bob Enright and Joe Pluta, who have run under 9:30, against Wayne, Barry, and Larry Paulson in the two mile.

These are the men and the events who will probably decide the outcome of the meet.

In this the second meet of the season coach O'Brien points out, "in a first meet, mistakes are expected to be made, but in this the second meet, we'll know who wants to compete."

He concluded by saying, "this meet comes in a good time in the schedule. With us being at almost full strength it will give us a real good idea as what to expect from the team. After the meet we'll know what we have to work on after vacation."

Unbeaten Cagers Show Their Stuff

WITH THE HUSKIES ASIDE—The UMass basketball team scored a very fine victory over UConn the other night, 74-68, and these photos depict some of the key action. However, the Redmen have put this big win in the backs of their minds as they prepare for an important game against American International College tonight. Back to those photos, at left is UMass' number one reserve, sharp-shooter Rich Vogeley, who is driving for a key bucket against Husky competition. At right is Ken Mathias (42) of UMass latching onto one of his many big rebounds, much to the displeasure of UConn's Bob Boyd (15). The middle picture shows heads-up guard John Betancourt (right) tying up the Huskies' Bob Staak in the late stages of the contest. "Voices Of Hunger" Titles This Week's "Focus" Broadcast

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA's "Focus" will broadcast "Voices of Hunger" -- a presentation expected to contrast sharply with the sights and sounds of last-minute preparation for Christmas festivities.

The 60-minute program will feature an interview recorded exactly a year ago with Mrs. Victoria Dulles of Ridgeville, S.C., founder of the Dorchester County Freedom Association and longtime civil rights activist of South Carolina. Mrs. Delee visited the UMass campus in November, 1969, to appeal for help on behalf of impoverished blacks and Indians -- many suffering from severe malnutrition -- in the Ridgeville-Four Holes area of Dorchester County, S.C.

The program which will include some editorial commentary by Eunice Goodrich, host-moderator of Focus, is coming immediately in connection with a fund-raising drive for the Dorchester County area.

Interested persons are invited to call [illegible] or visit the Student Union Activities Office on the third floor of Emerson House, hopes to raise at least $1,000 by Christmas.

All funds collected will be wired to Mrs. Delee and used for the purchase of large quantities of high protein food and medicines to combat widespread hunger and disease prevalent among the people residing in the Dorchester County area.

Rockefeller Grant Accepted By Five-College Students

By ROBERT SCHEIER
Staff Reporter

The controversial $25,000 grant offered by John D. Rockefeller III to students from the five-colleges for ecological work has been accepted by the group.

The decision, made last week, will not be formally announced by the group until January, after a planning meeting. Although no specific reasons have been given for the decision, spokesmen for the group have cited questions such as whether or not the offer was an exercise in "cooptation" or "cooperation."

When Mr. Rockefeller offered the money December 6, he said the purpose of it was to show that students and older people could work together in solving major problems, but the students felt that "major questions" had to be considered and discussed before they agreed to the plan. When Mr. Rockefeller appeared on campus to offer the money, he was greeted by a demonstration and a skit showing his alleged role in shaping foreign policy through his industrial holdings.

The grant would be used by the committee to form a student-run corporation which would identify one environmental problem in the Connecticut Valley and work to solve it.

The acceptance vote was taken Wednesday by members of the Five College Student Interim Planning Committee, according to Richard Bemish, director of public relations.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER

In Rockefeller's proposal the corporation would be non-profit and would consist of various leaders from the valley who would seek solutions to environmental problems.

When Rockefeller came to Hampshire Dec. 6, he was greeted by a 20-minute "minor" demonstration by the "guerilla theater" which satirized Rockefeller for his complicity in activites such as involvement in the shaping of the cold war and determining the country's foreign policy by use of the Rockefeller Fund and related charities.

At the ceremonies, students told Rockefeller that they wanted more time to study the implications of the offer, thus, rejecting the grant, at least, temporarily.

Franklin Patterson, president of Hampshire College, said at the time, the students rejected the offer because they felt serious questions existed and were seeking an open discussion.

Eric Walgren Given Three-Month Sentence

Eric L. Walgren, 31, of Gulf Road Belchertown, was sentenced to three months in Hampshire County Jail after a superior court jury found him guilty of three counts stemming from an incident at the UMass imfirmary last Spring.

Judge Samuel Levine, of North Adams, imposed the Jail term after a jury of 6 men and 6 women found Walgren, otherwise known as "Eric the Rat", guilty of trespassing on UMass property, causing a disturbance at the infirmary and assaulting a nurse on duty there.

The defendant Walgren chose to act as his own counsel.

Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery was subpoened by Walgren to testify for the defense. After the trial Bromery called the sentence "unfortunate."

Judge Levine sentenced Walgren to concurrent three month terms on the "simple assault" and disturbance charges. He also placed him on probation for two years and as a condition of probation, ordered Walgren to stay off the UMass campus and the campuses of "any other institution of higher education in the Commonwealth."

Walgren was found innocent of a charge of battery.

Walgren, a 1965 graduate of Amherst College with a degree in art and a graduate of Rutgers University Law School, acted as his own defense attorney in the three day trial. All the charges against him weremisdemeanors

The defendant testified he went to the infirmary to visit a friend who was a patient there and that he "had words" with members of the hospital staff and campus police when they told him to leave. The simple assault charge stemmed from when Walgren said he tapped a nurse on the shoulder to get her attention to ask her about governing visiting hours.

ERIC WALGREN

Walgren described himself as a semi-professional artist, specializing in wood cut and silk screen prints. In addition he said he was an "ordained minister" of the Universal Life Church.

Walgren said he is presently self-employed as a carpenter and house painter.

He also faces a charge of escape from Hampshire County District Court that stems from the same incident at UMass. Court souces say that the charge may be dropped.

Walgren indicated he would appeal the sentence.

Teacher Evaluation Studied By Committee

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Teacher evaluation: is it desirable campus-wide? How should teachers be evaluated? How should the results of an evaluation be used? These are some of the major questions which the recently appointed faculty-student committee on teacher evaluations will seek to answer in the coming months.

According to Terence Burke, chairman of the committee, the committee was formed out of the growing recent concern over the quality of undergraduate education at large universities such as UMass. Modeled upon a similar committee set up last year within the College of Arts and Sciences, the committee will seek to explore all facets of the objectives and means of teacher evaluation.

In attempting to do this, Burke stated that the committee will be faced with deciding whether or not there is any one form of teacher evaluation which will be satisfactory to all segments of the community. A primary consideration in this facet of the committee's study will be the fact that teaching techniques, situations and demands vary from one department to another and even more so from one individual course or instructor to another.

Burke commented that the great variety of views and departments represented on the committee would be an asset in finding a means of teacher evaluation which is satisfactory to all while still preserving the objectives of a teacher evaluation system.

He stated that the current student-teacher evaluation and the presence of its coordinators, Thomas Filmore and Charles Hallberg, on the committee would prove to be important in determining student and needs as well as the value of student evaluation of teacher performance.

He also cited professional colleagues and administrative study as other means of teacher evaluation which the committee will be concerned with before it makes its final recommendations on April 1st.

Burke also stated that the committee would also be concerned with the proper use of evaluation findings so that they might benefit the whole community-students, administrative and faculty as well.

"I feel that if we can come up with reasonable recommendations, that they can be used as a sound basis for the improvement of campus activity particularly in the areas of teacher self-improvement, administrative decisionmaking and student guidance."

Committee members, in addition to Burke, Filmore and Hallberg, include Theodore Bacon, Jeffery Eiseman, Harold Hartzler, Allen Ivey, Richard Kofler, Terry Krum, Harry Schumer, Jeanne Sherrow, Ian Thomas and Robert Wilson.

Bank Robbery Suspects Fail To Meet $100,000 Bail

Two New York City bank robbery suspects described as "Black Panther" Party members by federal agents and police failed to meet $100,000 bail set before a U.S. commissioner in Springfield.

On Campus

Robert H. Earl, 20, and William H. Trusty, 18, both of New York were arrested at UMass on Thursday. They had been staying with two girl students in Patterson dormitory for women for five days, police said.

Commissioner Paul A. Tamburello of Pittsfield conducted the hearing in the Federal Building in Springfield. The youths are charged with robbing a branch of the Chemical Bank of New York of $60,000 on Oct. 16.

Tamburello was interrupted several times during the hearing. "You have no right to judge me," Trusty said at the close of the arraignment.

He also questioned whether it would be possible for him to be tried by a jury of his "peers."

Tamburello ordered Trusty to be silent.

Trusty countered, "I have freedom of speech."

The hearings were continued until Dec. 23, pending the arrival of certified copies of the indictments charging them. At that time, court official said they can waive or fight extradition.

No attorney represented the two at the hearing. Tamburello advised them of their right to counsel at the Dec. 23 hearing. They are being held at Hampden County House of Correction in Springfield.

The two were arrested Thursday night in a raid by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and police on Patterson House.

The two girls, whom police would not identify, told officials that Earl and Trusty had attended classes taken examinations and used gymnasium facilities, while on campus.

Earl and Trusty had been described as "armed and dangerous" but no weapons were reported found in the dormitory room.

Sources in Patterson said women from throughout the low-rise building in the Southwest Complex rushed to the second - floor room during the raid in a state of excitement.

The residence hall supervisor said there are 342 girls in the dormitory.

In The Nation And The World

Subcommittee Reviews Arms Placement

WASHINGTON (AP)-A Senate subcommittee says there are indications the Nixon administration is reviewing the placement abroad of U.S. tactical nuclear weapons.

And, in a report released yesterday the subcommittee said the Soviets may move to "break out of the nuclear ring that has been drawn around them."

The Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee, headed by Sen. Stuart Symington, (D) Mo., a former Secretary of the Air Force, spent 22 months studying American security agreements and commitments abroad.

Commenting on the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, in which the Soviet Union deployed and later removed missiles 90 miles from the U.S. mainland, and on reports that Russia is building a submarine base at Cuba's Cienfuegos Bay, the report said:

"We must assume that the Soviets, as they view our placement of tactical nuclear weapons in countries far closer to their borders than Cuba is to ours, will seek to break out of the nuclear ring that has been drawn around them."

The subcommittee said the U.S. government has stamped such a high security classification on the review of nuclear warhead deployment that no one could discuss it with senators.

This, said the subcommittee, is "obviously absurd and is used to cover up questionable policy and practice, is unconstitutional and against the best interests of the United States."

Deployment of U.S. nuclear weapons on foreign soil has aroused deep concern in the Soviet Union and Red China but is not generally known by Americans, said the subcommittee.

The report urged Congress to keep a close watch on U.S. political and military commitments, and criticized what it called U.S. agreements to hush up aspects of military assistance programs which might prove embarrassing to other countries.

Christmas Travelers Harassed In E. Berlin

BERLIN (AP) - East German harassment of Berlin access continued yesterday despite a protest by the Western allies to the Soviet Embassy in East Berlin.

The protest was lodged Saturday night when the HHARASSMENT BEGAN BECAUSE OF A West German political meeting in West Berlin. The meeting opens Monday.

Both the Russians and East German Foreign Ministry had protested the meeting of Social Democratic party federal and state parliamentary leaders. The Communists contend West Germany has no rights inside isolated West Berlin.

Western border officers said traffic was light early Sunday and that delays were not long but stretched as the day went on and traffic swelled.

By nightfall, Western border officers reported serious delays of two of the three main Berlin access roads. At the main autobahn entrance point into East Germany, Helmstedt, a line of trucks more than half mile long stood waiting as well as cars by the hundreds. Waiting times to get processed were running up to five hours and more.

The main point of interference again was opposite the West German border crossing point at Helmstedt. Officers said the East Germans were flashing green for go lights for only a minute at a time.

A newswoman arriving in Berlin late Saturday night said she had to wait five hours just to cross into East German territory and then another hour to be processed by East German border guards.

Polish Officials Resign After "Bloody Rioting"

WARSAW (AP) - Communist party leader Wladyslaw Gomulka, President Marian Spychalski and three other top officials resigned yesterday following bloody rioting in parts of Poland over government imposed price increases in essential goods.

Radio Warsaw announced that Eduard Gierek, former first secretary of the party in the coal mining area of Katowice, had been named to replace Golumka.

The broadcast said Gomulka quit because of illness. He will be 66 Feb. 6.

Gierek told the nation in a television broadcast the party "must always keep a close link with the working class and with the whole nation."

Gierek said the nation's new five year economic plan -- due to have started in January -- will "have to be reconsidered."

He added: "We will consult the working class."

The radio also announced the resignations of:

- Boleslaw Jaszcuk, the economic czar.
- Zenon Kliszke, considered the Communist party's idiologist.
- Ryszard Strzelecki, regarded as a close associate of Gomulka.

Around the time of the announcements of the resignations, a broadcast from Szczecin said workers in the shipyards of that riot torn city agreed to end their occupation of two main shipyards.

Earlier broadcasts reported a return to normal in the Baltic tri city area where the riots started almost a week ago.

Reports outside Poland said Soviet troops and heavy artillery were moving toward the Polish borders.

Gomulka had been the first secretary of the Communist party since 1956, after a comeback from a Stalin era purge. He was thrown out of the party in 1949, arrested in 1951 and released at the end of 1954.

The Communist party news paper Trybuna Ludu indicated earlier that a party struggle would result from rioting. It said the outbursts "must be come a serious lesson for the whole party."

Homeward Bound GIs Delayed

SAIGON (AP)-More than 300 Americans GIs who have finished their tours of duty in Vietnam were delayed yesterday night in returning home for Christmas because the South Vietnamese government refused landing clearance for a Boeing 747 jumbo jet at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut Air Base.

The Pan American jumbo jet-the first ever scheduled to land in Vietnam-was at last report still in San Francisco awaiting instructions. It had been scheduled to bring tons of Christmas mail and packages to Vietnam and carry about 35- GIs home.

William R. MacElhannon, director of Pan American World Airways operations in Vietnam, said the 747 was chartered by the U.S. military command and had been due at Tan Son Nhut Sunday night.

"There was a question by the South Vietnamese government of the feasibility of landing at Tan Son Nhut," he added. "The runway is long enough, but the shoulder is eroded and the condition of the shoulder does not meet Federal Aviation Agency criteria for this type of operation.

"There was also the question of air traffic control, whether or not they could clear the facilities properly without disturbing other things."

Tan Son Nhut handles both military and commercial airliners.

"From our point of view, there's no question we could do it," MacElhannon said.

"The problem is still being worked on. Everyone is trying for a solution. We may try to bring the 747 in at Bien Hoa Air Base or Cam Ranh Bay." Bien Hoa is 15 miles northeast of Saigon, Cam Ranh 190 miles northeast.

A spokesman for the U.S. Command said he had no information on it.

South Vietnamese officials were not immediately available for comment.

Officers at the 90th Replacement Battalion at Long Binh, 12 miles northeast of Saigon, said there is a backlog of GIs who have completed their tours and are waiting to get home.

One officer said the battalion was running from half a day to a day behind in shipping men home and a major problem was the Christmas rush.

Some men were not leaving until two days after their normal retation date.

They Start 'Em Early In Texas

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP)-"The Hoot Owl" frowns on bad candy, breakfast cereals, dirty movies, insensitive adults and people who frown on "The Hoot Owl."

It endorses Halloween and hamburgers, zoos and toys, most kids, the Dallas Cowboys, pro football team, certain civic projects and people who subscribe to "The Hoot Owl."

The Owl, you see, is a newspaper produced "by kids...for kids...about kids."

It is unencumbered with conventional editorial policies, fears no one, leans heavily toward "good" news and "violates every rule of good newspaper management."

It's got a lot of things going for it. Unfortunately, money is not among them.

But what other publication has a 6 year old managing editor, a movie critic who reviews only "g rated" movies and a "roving editor" who must get his mom's okay to go roving.

Can a sports editor anywhere boast of a Little League batting average of .633?

And where else would a special features editor, at 15, be a year away from retirement?

That's The Hoot Owl, a tabloid produced twice monthly by a seven member staff, 10 correspondents, a "silent publisher" and a shoestring.

Staff members draw $5 monthly. Correspondents once received $1 an item but this practice was abandoned as rank commercialism.

Contents range from columns to stories about two-headed snakes, youth activites, tree houses, pets, dinosaurs, records, fashions and sports.

There's a comic section, a peewee TV guide, a "fun page" of puzzles and games and an editorial section.

The Owl has been published since August by Dane Edwards of Arlington, who supervises, edits, writes when necessary and rides herd on his youthful staff.

His son, Joey, is managing editor and the author of a travel column, "Journeys with Joey." Joey can read and print, but writing is not one of his strong points.

He dictates his column to Debbie Hatfield,11, the society editor.

In its brief lifespan, The Owl has campaigned vigorously against carelessly produced, potentially dangerous candy; nutritionless breakfast cereal; ineffective youth programs and destruction of an historic logcabin.

In an editorial calling for preservation of the 116 year old cabin, Sarah Cunningham, 15, senior staff member, wrote: "I think it should be restored and moved...to preserve some history for kids like you and me."

The cabin was spared, prompting a congratulatory telegram from Gov. Preston Smith.

In an attack on inferior candy and unwholesome cereals, roving editor Lonnie Ginn, 12, observed: "I know we're only kids. We spend dimes and nickels. But we should not get items that endanger our health...I've stopped eating candy."

The newspaper claims a paid circulation in excess of 3,000, with subscribers in 11 states, Canada and Germany.

But at 10 cents a copy, an annual subscription rate of $2.20 and advertising procedures that at best are unorthodox, The Owl is anything but financially healthy.

Kids, churches, theaters showing children's movies and certain youth oriented groups may advertise without charge. A recent edition had two paid ads.

Hamburgers, soft drinks and shoes for Job Corps workers have been traded for advertising space. The ads must be aimed at youngsters.

"The Owl," says Edwards, 34, a former contributing writer for the North American Newspaper Alliance, "is highly impractical, very idealistic and definitely unprofitable."

Edwards said he started the paper as a hobby because kids needed a vehicle to express their views, a publication with which young readers could identify.

The Owl is assembled after school hours in a converted garage at his home and printed without charge by the Arlington News Texan. But it has not captured overwhelming support of the business community and its future is cloudy. Edwards says the operating capital has been wiped out.

"We're not going under," vows Janie Edwards, Dane's attractive wife and a kind of denmother for The Owl staff. "We don't know how we'll continue, but we're not going under."

Russian Repression Growing As Soviet Congress Nears

MOSCOW (AP) - Growing political dissent in Soviet science and the arts appears to be in for a severe test as hard line Kremlin ideologists prepare the populace for the biggest propaganda show in five years - the Congress of the Communist party next March 30.

The buildup is gaining momentum with a series of pronouncements and intimidations that could end in the crippling of what remains of organized dissent in Soviet society.

In the past week:

- A visiting American physicist was expelled from the country after two brief conversations with Dr. Andrei Sakharov, one of the leaders of the semi underground Committee for Human Rights.

- Two of the most outspoken political dissidents were summoned by the KGB secret police and warned to stop their "anti Soviet activities" or face long prison terms.

- One dissident activist was warned he will be "beaten up or killed" if he tries once more to evade his plainclothes "tail" in Moscow.

- A press campaign branded the dissidents "rascals and schizophrenics" and referred to some unnamed foreign correspondents as "enemies of the people."

- Minister of Culture Yekate rina Furtseva publicly berated an American correspondent for "poking his nose into our internal affairs" when he asked a question related to the case of disgraced novelist Alexander Solzhenitsyn.

Diplomatic observers have concluded that these developments are not coincidental, and probably are inspiredfrom the highest level as part of the preparations for the party congress.

Experienced observers believe further that the tightening of control, which traditionally precedes party congresses, could be used as a convenient excuse to silence dissenters who have not yet been locked up in insane asylums, sentenced to labor camps or exiled to remote regions of the country.

The expelled physicist, Dr. Wayne J. Holman of the center for theoretical studies in Coral Gables, Fla., told the U.S. Embassy before he left the country that he had had only two talks with Sakharov, the most prestigious of critics inside the scientific establishment.

Dr. Holman was working as an exchange scientist in the Institute of Theoretical Physics, headed by Dr. Vitaly Shelest, in Kiev. Dr. Shelest is the son of Pyotr Shelest, a Kremlin Politburo member and thus one of the most powerful men in the Soviet Union. Young Shelest is an advocate of broader contacts with foreign scientists and technicians. Whether he intervened in Dr. Holman's case could not be learned.

Both talks dealt only with the physics, Dr. Holman told the embassy. Sakharov apparently has not been punished.

Sakharov's committee was formed this fall and just 10 days ago took in novelist Solzhenitsyn, winner of the 1970 Nobel Prize for Literature. Membership is believed to total less than a dozen.

One of the committee organizers, also a physicist, already has been warned by the KGB to be ready to "bear full responsibility" if police judge its activities to be anti Soviet.

Hughes Empire Run From Total Seclusion

LASVEGAS, Nev. (AP) - Howard Hughes ran his billion dollar business complex with the help of five assistants, on hand day and night. But the man who headed Hughes' Nevada operations had never met his boss face to face.

The seclusion in which Hughes has cloaked himself for two decades was well known, but its extent was made somewhat clearer during a two week power struggle, in and out of court, for control of the billionaire's Nevada holdings.

Since moving here four years ago, Hughes had remained isolated in a penthouse apartment above the Las Vegas Strip while Robert Maheu spent $300 million of Hughes' fortune acquiring casinos, hotels and land.

During this time, Maheu said in court, he communicated with Hughes solely by telephone and written messages ferried back and forth by the five male assistants. Hughes' messages, scrawled on yellow, legal size paper, always went back with the messengers.

From statements in and out of court, this picture emerged:

Like many other top people in the Hughes organization, the five aides are all Mormons and have been with Hughes from six to 20 years. They neither drink nor smoke and lead outwardly serene existences in nondescript homes throughout the city, qualities that apparently appeal to Hughes.

The five assistants work in eight hour shifts, with seldom more than one off duty at a time. While Hughes - now believed to be in the Bahamas after a secret departure Thanksgiving Eve - was in Las Vegas, many people could get to the other rooms of Hughes' ninth floor retreat in the Desert Inn Hotel, but only the assistants could enter the three room inner sanctum-two bedrooms and a living room - where Hughes lived.

Following Hughes' departure, the 10 man board of directors of Hughes Tool Co. flew in from Texas and fired Maheu.

Fighting their take-over, Maheu said he has a personal arrangement with Hughes which Hughes alone could terminate. He obtained a court order preventing the tool company takeover.

The two week courtroom battle that followed ended Saturday when state District Court Judge Howard Babcock ruled the company could dispense with Maheu and run Hughes' affairs in Nevada.

Samuelson: Battle Against Prices Working

WASHINGTON (AP) - Dr. Paul A. Samuelson, 1970 Nobel Prize winner in economics, said yesterday he believes new steps taken by the Nixon administration against inflation are working.

But he added he doesn't feel the steps are big enough.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor has been a strong critic of President Nixon's economic policies in the past. He said yesterday, however, that "I like better what I have been hearing coming out of Washington in the last month or two."

Asked if he thinks the administration could do better than it is now doing, Samuelson replied "Yes. I think for example an opportunity was lost in the beginning of 1969 to use Presidential leadership to back up fiscal policy, to back up monetary policy.

Samuelson recommended earlier that Nixon turn the spotlight on labor unions and industries that fail to hold the line against wage and price increases.

He said Sunday he would recommend also compulsory arbitration of disputes that effect the national welfare but added "there must be a focus of public policy from Congress, from public opinion, from the President.....that the settlements be in the public interest.

More Aid Requested By Egypt From USSR

MOSCOW (AP) - Vice President Ali Sabry of Egypt led a high level delegation to Moscow yesterday to request increased military and economic aid from the Soviet Union.

The announcement of his arrival by Tass coincided with a fresh Soviet pledge "to give all round support to the U.A.R. in its struggle against Israeli imperialist aggression."

Almost simultaneously with the news of Sabry's arrival at Moscow's Vnukovo Airport, Tass said a senior Communist party emissary in Cairo had "reaffirmed the Soviet Union's steady resolve" to back the Egyptians.

This seemed to confirm what diplomatic sources have been forcasting in recent days -- that Sabry and his delegation will get pretty much what they want during their eight day visit.

Accompanying the vice president were Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad, Minister of War Muhammed Fawzi and Aziz Sidki, minister of Egyptian oil and mineral resources.

The Egyptian visit took on special importance in view of two approaching deadlines. First, U.N. mediator Dr. Gunnar V. Jarring is due to report to the Security Council Jan. 5 on his mission to negotiate a Middle East settlement. Exactly one month later the current cease fire expires.

Arab diplomats in Moscow say they expect Israel to rejoin the Jarring talks in New York before the end of the month to avoid being condemned in the report for breaking off the negotiations.

The Israelis began boycotting the talks last September, charging that Egypt, with Soviet aid had violated the standstill agreement by installing new anti aircraft missile sites along the Suez Canal.

Sources here said Sabry, Riad and the other delegation members would decide with the Russians on a diplomatic course of action to counteract the effect of Israel's resuming its seat at the U.N. negotiations.

But more important for the Egyptians, the informants said, was the impending end of the cease fire, which Cairo says it will not extend unless Israel consents to a timetable for evacuating occupied Arab territories.

Failing this, the Egyptians feel they need still more armament to prepare for a possible resumption of hostilities, the informants added.

Sabry is expected to be received by Communist party chief Leonid J. Brezhnev and Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, men he knows well from his frequent trips to Moscow during the rule of the late Egyptian president, Gamal Abdel Nasser. Sabry is considered to be "Moscow's man" in Cairo.

The Israeli Cabinet met Sunday and postponed once again its decision on returning to the Middle East negotiations.

An official announcement reported only that "a political discussion commenced and will continue at the next Cabinet session."

24 Hour Ceasefire For U.S., Viets

SAIGON (AP) - South Vietnam has announced its troops would observe only a 24 hour cease fire for Christmas and New Year's Day.

U.S. officials said American forces would honor the same truce period.

The Viet Cong announced two weeks ago three day cease fires for Christmas and New Year's Day and a four day stand down for Tet, the lunar new year that falls this year at the end of January.

The Saigon announcement, which was expected, made no mention of a truce for Tet. Sources said the government plans a Tet truce but will not announce it until shortly before the holiday, pending intelligence reports on possible enemy buildups.

Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops launched their biggest offensive of the war during the Tet cease fire period in early 1968.

The road to inner peace is a long, long, long road. And quite often one finds it very difficult to travel that road without being distracted by the superficial and limited things of this world. We are all only human, therefore, we are all subject to various trials and tribulations. These trials and tribulations are good because they strengthen us and enable us to look toward each other for assistance. We need each other.

If we are not able to withstand the tests and difficulties ourselves and fail to turn to our brothers and sisters for help, we slowly sink into a state of remoteness. Of course there are times when our brothers and sisters are unable to help us. So, what do you do? Your loaded down with all these unbearable problems and no one to turn to. Well, you can do one of many things; commit suicide; push them aside and maybe deal with them later; cop out altogether by indulging in some of those superficial things I mentioned earlier; or you can ask for spiritual guidance through prayer. I believe praying is one of the facets that leads us along the road and enables us to see light in the darkness.

To travel the road of peace, it is said one must go through stages. "The Seven Valleys" will allow us to take leave of ourselves and reach unto the ocean of "nearness" and "union". The first is the Valley of Search. "The steed of this Valley is patience; without patience the wayfarer on this journey will reach nowhere and attain no goal." There upon, the wayfarer enters into, the Valley of Love. "The steed of this Valley is pain; and if there be no pain this journey will never end. In this station the lover hath no thought saved the beloved, and seeketh no refuge saved the Friend. A lover is he who is chill in hell fire; a knower is he who is dry in the sea." If the wayfarers journey be confirmed he enters into the Valley of Knowledge. "He will come out of the darkness of illusion to the guiding light of the fear of God." If then it be the will of God he shall come unto the Valley of Unity. "In this station he pierceths the veils of plurality, fleeth from the worlds of the flesh, and ascendeth into the heaven of singleness. Peace be upon him who concludeth this exalted journey and followeth the True One by the lights of guidance." He shall then enter into the Valley of Contentment. "Although to outward view, the wayfarers in this Valley may dwell upon the dust yet inwardly they are throned in the heights of mystic meaning; they eat of the endless bounties of inner significances, and drink of the delicate wines of the spirit." After experiencing pure contentment, he thereupon enters the Valley of Wonderment. "Indeed, O Brother, if we ponder each created thing, we shall witness a myriad perfect wisdoms and learn a myriad new and wondrous truths. One of the created phenomena is the dream. Now there are many wisdoms to ponder in the dream, which none but the people of this Valley can comprehend in their true elements." After being endowed with the wonderments of this Valley the traveler cometh to the Valley of True Poverty and Absolute Nothingness. This station is the dying from self and the living in God, the being poor in self and rich in the Desired One. Poverty as here referred to signifieth being poor in the things of the created world, rich in the things of God's world. For whatever the creatures have is limited by their own limits, and whatever the True One hath is sanctified therefrom; this utterance must be deeply pondered that its purport may be clear."

I have only scarcely described the Seven Valleys, but if you are sincere in your search for the "answers", I am certain you will come upon the Seven Valleys again in detail.

Polish Power

Real freedom must have both form and content- its form must be individual free expression and its content democratic control of the economic resources of the society. In the United States we have only the form of freedom. While individual expression is relatively free (except for Black Panthers and Angela Davis), the minority control of the economic resources of the country makes the form of freedom nearly meaningless. The small minority, who own the industrial and financial corporations of the nation, use their wealth to buy free expression turning it into its opposite: controlled expression. Since mass circulation newspapers and TV stations involve huge expenditures of cash, the means of communication are virtually the monopoly of this economic elite making individual free expression impotent.

In Poland, there exists neither the form nor the content of real freedom in spite of the fact that the workers of Poland with the aid of the Red Army smashed minority control of the economic resources of the country after World War II. This contradiction is only understandable by understanding the nature of the political bureaucracy which took power, also with the help of the Red Army, in the midst of the revolt against the old ruling class.

The power of this bureaucracy is their control over the state apparatus of Poland. They do not own the economic resources of the country but control those resources through their control of the state. However since they do not own, they do not reap profits on investments as does our ruling class. Since they do not accumulate profits, that is monetary purchasing power, they can't simply buy free expression or purchase the means of communication as does our ruling class. Thus they can't control the content of freedom if they allowed the form of freedom to exist. Hence they can't allow the form of freedom to exist and still remain in power as does our ruling class.

They justify their control of the state by designating themselves the representatives of the Polish workers and peasants. Thus there can be no greater threat to the very existence of the bureaucracy then when workers meet in shipyards and choose their own leaders. Nothing could say more dramatically to the bureaucracy: "You are illegitimate usurpers of our political rights." The Poles succeeded in ridding themselves of their economic ruling class. The time is overdue for them to deal similarly with their political ruling caste. All power to the Polish workers!

The Clouds Cleared . . .

To The Editor:

The Byrnes and Nesti review of The Clouds is caustic indeed, but they persistently attack the very qualities for which the play should be praised. They deplore the banality of the music and its lyrics, though these seem to be appropriate in conveying the intended "divine vulgarity" of the chorus. To their credit, they do praise the chorus' fine performance, but without recognizing that it was at its best when galvanized by the music and lyrics. I felt the whole effect of the musical interludes was integrated -- everything contributed, and remarkably well in my estimation. They similarly attack the "stagnant" lighting, though satiric comedy should emphasize the light of day -- the glare of truth divested of the spectrum of colors which is primarily justified in evoking mood. Self-conscious lightning is far too common in college productions, and for once I was thoroughly grateful not to be distracted by rainbow effects.

Most inexplicably, they also criticize the characterization of Socrates for its inconsistency switching back and forth from "a brawny he-man to a screaming queen," though Roger Tiberii, who played the role, can hardly be accused of having tested this range of experience to any appreciable extent. In general, he exquisitely overplayed his role in a consistent and believable fashion. They additionally complain that his "extracurricular interest" in the "thinkery" students was only "vaguely hinted at," but I doubt that anybody in the audience had much trouble understanding the homosexual innuendoes.

Again, our intrepid reviewers deplore the effort to update the satire with references to Chomsky, Agnew, Eisenhower, and a host of others. I concur that these modern allusions didn't altogether work (because they were somewhat randomized across the political spectrum), but the effort was certainly in the spirit of Aristophanes. In fact, if he himself were the director, he would have gone a good deal further in extending the comparison. Byrnes and Nesti claim this updating resulted in an esoteric satire which would amuse a limited audience only. Quite the contrary, the dominant theme in the play was of a generation gap exacerbated by a "thinkery" (i.e., college), with implications clearly relevant to our problems today. How can this satire have "escaped" their understanding? What particular "thinkery" have they been attending all these years?

Finally and most absurdly, they attack the plot itself, the specific responsibility of Aristophanes, for (1) rambling too much, (2) not really being bawdy enough, (3) seeming more a cartoon than a feature length movie, and (4) in general simply because they find it boring. Holy Kazoola! Here is it clear they naively attack the play because it doesn't fit their preconceptions -- because it isn't what it was never intended to be. Their entire dramatic education seems to have been with comedy subsequent to Menander, and at that probably excluding the Brechtian epic theory of gestus anticipated by Aristophanes. Even the bawdiness which unaccountably disappoints them must be understood to have been more or less Athenian (quite enough for my own Puritan tastes) -- a modern Broadway orgy would have been hazardously anachronistic.

The ultimate failure of Brynes and Nesti, however, was their inability to sit back and enjoy the wealth of proto-Menippean comic episodes, both low and high, as these evolved with apparently aimless spontaneity.

There was also enough coherence to satisfy their analytic demands, but it had to be discovered through the act of laughter and in the spirit of the performance. This is the task with Aristophanes, and perhaps, most fundamentally, with all comedy. For myself, the swift and imaginative momentum of this particular production completely overwhelmed all the minor problems which might be picayunishly argued into the dead of night. Two hours passed as quickly as a cartoon. I quite agree , but this must be understood as the highest praise. Aristophanes was put to musical comedy, regaining for the chorus the ascendancy it deserves, a remarkable feat indeed for a modern production. It was Busby Berkeley gone berserk, a thoroughly enjoyable evening.

. . . On The Way To The Dorm

To the Editor:

A funny thing happened to me on the way to the Dorm. Last Thursday night about eleven thirty as I was walking back from studying at Herter hall I was approached by two guys in the tunnels near southwest. They stopped me by an exchange of small talk regarding buying some dope (a familar line of southwest) and they proceeded to rip me off for my long winter coat. The act in itself is an act of a fuckin pig. Any brother or sister that will rip off another brother or sister is exemplifying disrespect, disregard, and lack of concern for another human being.

The loss of the material possession didn't hurt as much as being faced with not being able to defend myself from such undesirables. I've worked hard at turning the other cheek and trying to be a nonviolent person. I don't like hurting people, nor do I like taking from others. I can understand the frustration deprivation type thing but man you are hurting your own kind.

There have been a great deal of rip offs in southwest and other parts of the campus lately. These acts hurt because it's showing that even though most of us are trying hard to get things together among ourselves, there is a small segment of people who just don't give a damn about what we are trying to do; and are more concerned with selfish, unthoughtful and unkind actions.

Don't Ask

WASHINGTON - President Nixon was asked at last week's press conference why he didn't release a top secret report on the SST that the White House had commissioned. The question was asked because it is believed that the report was unfavorable to the SST.

The President replied he had no objection to the substance of the report being made public. The problem was that when reports are made for the President, they're supposed to be held in confidence. That's what Mr. Nixon said.

Max Lindbergh, a friend of mine who is an aviation consultant, believes he knows what is in the report.

"It has nothing to do with the environment," Max told me. "The report says the reason we shouldn't build the SST is that by the time it comes off the assembly line there won't be any places left for Americans to go."

"I don't understand," I said.

"If we start on the SST now, it will be ready by 1979. Most scientists agree the SST is not a practical plane to fly over land because of its sonic boom. Its only value would be in flying over water, from one continent to another, in less than three hours. Therefore the success of the plane will be dependent on tourists, and there is some question as to how many tourists will be flying by 1979."

"I still don't understand."

"Well, for one thing, South America by then will probably be off limits for American tourists unless they're willing to be kidnaped by Communist guerrillas.

"In 1979, we'll be in a trade war with Japan because she dumped all her television sets in the United States. The Japanese will retaliate by refusing to let us dump our tourists in Tokyo.

"Chiang Kai-shek on Formosa will ban U.S. tourists because we wouldn't let him attack the mainland of Red China. And Red China will refuse tourist rights to the United States because we wouldn't let Chiang Kai-chek attack the mainland."

"What about Australia?"

"Australia will turn down SST tourist flights because we put a high tariff on wool, and Hong Kong will do the same because we won't let any men's suits into the United States."

"India?"

"India won't be talking to the United States because we gave fighter planes to Pakistan."

"Pakistan?"

"Pakistan won't be talking to the United States because we gave tanks to India."

"Surely South Vietnam will let us fly Americans to Saigon."

"Yes, but we won't find any American tourists who will want to go there."

"There is always Europe," I said.

"Hardly. The British will boycott the United States because we won't allow the Concorde, which they built with the French, to fly to the United States. And the French won't allow tourists to land in France because that's the way the French are."

"What about West Germany?"

"West Germany will be mad at us by then because we pulled 10,000 American troops out of NATO."

"I imagine the Soviet Union will give us problems because they have built an SST of their own."

"Not because of that, but because Life magazine will have published the memoirs of the deposed chief of state, Premier Alexei Kosygin."

"What are the chances of an American tourist business in the Middle East?" Max shook his head sadly. "Don't ask."

Many Things

To The Editor:

There's some things a person has no control over; some things he just can't change. Like the weather. When I arrived at UMass last January from the sunny Southwest, and found myself plopped down in one huge snowbank, I was distressed. I turned blue at the thought of snow; I cursed the snow and cold weather as I walked to and from classes, shivering in my cumbersome clothing and strange feeling boots.

But now, although the snow falls again and it's just as cold outside, there's a big difference in me. I've learned not to fight it. No longer do I dread going outside; I've learned to move with it; I no longer move against it. I even felt tinges of excitement as the first snow tell this semester. I walk much more freely now; no more stiff, calculated steps. Sometimes I run and slide down the walkways on my ski-feet, something I was afraid to do last semester.

And then there's some things a person just thinks he can't change. I used to think that for as long as I chose to go to school, I was condemned to the learning process on which our higher education system is based. I used to bitch and moan about boring professors, impersonal lecture classes, dry, ill-written text books, personal alienation. Early in October of this semester, I began working to change things for myself. I've helped to write an educational proposal which will allow me to live and learn as I want to. Next semester I will be one of a group of 15 students living on Nantucket Island pursuing independent studies of my choice.

Writing that proposal and making all the arrangements to insure it will actualize itself has been a lot of hard work. But every ounce of energy and every bit of time I invested was worth it for I've learned something very important: to take responsibility for myself, to define what I don't like, to seek alternatives and to choose one that I think will meet my needs. And I believe that you can do something about some of the things that are bugging you. But don't wait for someone else to do it for you -- it seldom happens that way. You're alive and can be freer than you think you can. But it's up to YOU. Work for yourself to change what you don't like. Become committed -- to yourself. The rewards of your effort will equal your inputs.

The love you take
Is equal to the love
You make
And love, my friends, is many things.

Born To Fly

Once upon a time, there lived a caterpillar who wanted to fly. Every morning, he would crawl down to the Clear Pool, look at his reflection in the water and sigh, "I hate being ugly and having to crawl! If only I had wings!"

As he was busily munching milkweed leaves one morning, he hit upon a solution. Dropping the tasty leaf he had been saving for dessert, he began to crawl up the stem of the tallest milkweed in sight. Reaching the top of the plant, he crept out on a swaying leaf, took a deep breath, and jumped. Seventeen sprained ankles later, he limped back to his milkweed leaf, bruised but undaunted. "Well," he muttered to himself, "by the process of elimination, that theory's out."

One night soon afterward, the caterpillar began to think he really was flying! He was rising above the milkweeds, even higher than the fenceposts by the Clear Pool, into a completely new and dazzling world - and his heart beat faster and faster until suddenly ... he woke up, and it was all a dream.

His dream only sharpened his longing to fly. That very morning, as he was crawling along the dusty path, he mused aloud, "I wonder if someone could teach me how to fly?"

"It's not just a matter of learning, you know," replied a strong voice above him.

"You must be born the fly," the voice came again, and this time the caterpillar spotted the butterfly who was speaking.

"I suppose you mean wings!" cried the caterpillar, defensively. "Well, that may be very well for you to talk about, but you're a butterfly! And just because I'm a caterpillar, and don't happen to have any wings..."

"Neither did I," interrupted the butterfly. "I used to look exactly like you do now, but I became so frustrated about being ugly and worming my way along through the dust that I finally quit rebelling and did what I knew I was created to do."

"What was that?" the caterpillar asked suspiciously.

The butterfly smiled into the caterpillar's apprehensive eyes and said firmly, "Build a cocoon."

Waving his antennae impatiently, the caterpillar disagreed. "I'm not talking about superstition," he insisted. Metamorphosis is just too far-fetched for me. It's a nice theory, if it keeps you happy, but nobody knows for sure if it's true!"

"Well," suggested the butterfly, "It's a theory until you try it out. Then you can know."

"Tell me what happened to you, first," said the caterpillar, cautiously. "What did you do in there?"

"To be honest," admitted the butterfly, "I was afraid I might die in that cocoon. But all those crazy things I had tried to help make me fly hadn't helped one bit, and I decided to at least give this thing a fair chance. I really didn't do anything - it was all done to me, once I entered into the cocoon! It was just as if the old me - the caterpillar me - had become completely unglued, and then out of all my raw materials was built this new me - with these glorious wings! And I've been flying ever since."

The caterpillar was silent for a long moment. Suddenly he blurted out, "I don't believe it! You couldn't have ever been a caterpillar! The whole thing is make believe!"

The butterfly sat patiently through his tirade and then replied, "You will believe what you want to believe," he nodded, "Just remember that you were born to be a butterfly?" And with that he flexed his brightly colored wings and sailed upward out of the caterpillar's sight, effortlessly borne on a fresh breeze.

For minutes the caterpillar stared at the empty sky. Finally, he turned and crawled over to the Clear Pool and stared again. Then slowly, deliberately, he made his way around the pool to a shaded crevice, where he began to spin a fine, silky thread. And the faint wind drifting by could only pick up the awed, repeated whispers, "Born to be a butterfly! Born to FLY!"

In a few days we will celebrate the birth of Jesus of Nazareth. It has been said of Him, "If any one is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old has passed away; behold, the new has come." Jesus Himself offered to give man a "new birth."

You can experience this new birth right now by inviting Him to come into your life, forgive your sins, and make you what He wants you to be. Jesus said, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any one hears my voice and opens the door I will come in to him." It's for real!

Chanukah Peace March Scheduled For Tonight

A peace match commemorating Chanukah, the Hebrew Feast of Dedication, will take place tonight at 8 p.m. in front of Hampshire Dining Commons in Southwest.

The Menorah, Torch of Peace, will be lit on the south side of the Campus Center later to culminate the march, followed by a reception in the Student Union.

Chanukah begins officially at sundown Tuesday. March organizers said they picked the Monday evening date to assure as large attendance as possible, since many students will be leaving UMass early for their holiday recess.

Two UMass administrators are scheduled to speak at the campus center ceremonies. They are Vice-Chancellor Rudolph Bromery and Dean of Students William Field.

According to a spokesman from the UMass chapter of Am Yisroel Chai, a national Jewish youth organization which is sponsoring the march, the holiday of Chanukah celebrates the third century B.C. revolt of Jews against King Antiochus of Syria in protest of oppression.

By converting his realm of diverse nationalities into a powerful comogeneous kingdom, Antiochus hoped to gain security against both Egypt and Rome. He issued a decree that all the peoples of his empire conform to the Hellenistic Culture by serving Grecian gods and "becoming Greeks." It was especially important for him to Hellenize the province of Judah in order to feel secure against Egypt.

All the peoples of the kingdom accepted and obeyed the edict except the Jews. Antiochus, therefore sent a strong army to Judah to root out the cult of the Jewish God with force, and to eliminate the observance of distinctive Jewish laws and ways.

A small victorious army of the Maccabbees (Hasmoneans) then forced the Syrian government to recall the Antiochus decree against the Jews and to re-establish Jewish religious autonomy. And when imperialist Syria became weakened, the Hasmoneans took the opportunity to erect a new independent Jewish Kingdom in Judah.

Chanukah stands for two ideals: first, for the achievement of religious liberty and secondly, for the national development of the Jewish people.

Future Of Craft Center To Be Discussed In SU

A meeting to discuss the future of the new craft center in the Student Union will begin at 8 p.m. tonight in Room 328 of the Union.

Richard Collier, Chairman of the UMass Craftsmen's Guild, which has been planning and operating the craft center, explained they hope that the area will become a drop-in workshop.

He added that they will be offering courses in various crafts and facilities will be provided for photography, leatherwork, silver, ceramics, candle-making, and batik, with a supervisor there who would be capable of lending help to people when needed.

The secondary part of the craft center, a sales outlet, is already partly functional. When completed, it is intended to provide a central area where UMass craftsmen can display or sell their products, where supplies for craftsmen will be readily and inexpensivly available, and where members of the community can go for advice, or to purchase handcrafted items created by their fellows.

Attempts to provide enough funds so as to have the work area functional by second semester have run afoul of committees and lack of time. Also, the Craftsmen's Guild as yet has no money for the equipment it wishes to provide, and the theft of some craft items from a display case has dissolved the small amount of money that had been accumulated to help with administrative expenses.

Program Manager Appointed At WFCR

Arthur R. Cohen of Amherst has been appointed manager of programming at radio station WFCR (88.5 FM) according to Charles F. Keenan, WFCR general manager.

Mr. Cohen will be in charge of all the programming for the non-commercial public radio station located on the UMass campus. The 34,000 watt station, which broadcasts to an audience in a six state area, is a cooperative effort of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and UMass. Its programming covers the areas of music, news, culture and public affairs.

The new manager of programming graduated from UMass with a B.A. degree in history. He has worked as a music announcer at WHYN—FM in Springfield and as a member of the film crew in the news department of WNAC—Channel 7, an ABC affiliate in Boston.

He joined the staff of WFCR in September 1969 as the news director, and was appointed manager of the news and public affairs department in July 1970. At WFCR, he developed two daily news programs: Newshour at 5:30 p.m. and The Evening News, heard at 10:30 p.m.

Mr. Cohen is a native of Sharon, Mass.

Educational Discrimination Of Women Being Investigated

Reprinted from the Boston Globe.

The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) plans to investigate and take legal steps to halt discrimination against women by educational institutions, particularly graduate schools.

Mrs. Glendora Putnam, chairman of the MCAD, said the commission will use some of a $42,000 Federal grant to study the level of discrimination against women in higher education. She said the MCAD knows that it exists as a local and a national problem. She said the study would determine just how educational institutions in Massachusetts discriminate against women.

The legislation is one of three bills filed by the MCAD for the 1971 legislative session, to provide increased protections of women's rights.

The bill would prohibit discrimination against women in housing and related mortgage, insurance and bonding. The bills also seek to eliminate discrimination against women in public accommodations, in educational institutions and in all employment practices.

Mrs. Putnam said the changes requested in the fair employment practices law would eliminate all the exemptions for women. Under the present law, women cannot apply for jobs involving heavy lifting or working extra hours.

"Those exemptions were good in the 1880's when they were protective," said Mrs. Putnam, "but today they are restrictive for women. A woman should be able to decide whether she wants a job involving heavy lifting or extra hours."

The MCAD's legislation to protect women's rights in education would prohibit discrimination against women in the state's fair educational practices law, which at present does not provide a specific protection for women.

Mrs. Putnam said MCAD in November received a $42,000 Federal Grant to develop an "affirmative action program to get women employed in areas where they have not been accepted in the past." Part of the program will be an investigation of the college and graduate school admittance practices for women in the state.

The bill concerning women's rights in the housing area has several facets. It calls for equal treatment of women in the purchase of a house, insurance and bonding services, the granting of mortgages and the rental of housing.

Mrs. Putnam said: "Earlier this year we received an opinion from the attorney general that the limitation was in violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

"So we have been acting in areas of housing and public accommodations and education. These bills would simply change the state law so that our purposes conform to the Civil Rights Act."

Mental Health Center Needs Staff For "Half-Way House"

A "half-way house" for ex-patients in the Holyoke-Chicopee area will be established shortly in Holyoke, according to Dr. Joseph Havens of the Area Mental Health Center. A search for a director and an appropriate site is now under way.

The plan is to use a partially or wholly empty apartment, rooming house or hotel, and gradually introduce the expatients to the community as they are ready for discharge. The house would have living facilities and room for social activities for the residents.

The home would be in charge of a resident manager or couple familiar with the readjustment problems of the expatients, who would be provided with an apartment and with a modest living allowance. They would have the professional advice and support of members of the Mental Health Center staff.

Dr. Havens is now seeking a resident manager and couple, and invites inquiries from interested persons in the area. For further information, call 534-3361.

Library Course Still Offered

The UMass Division of Continuing Education has announced that the credit program in library science, offered in cooperation with the School of Library Science and the Division of University Extension of the University of Rhode Island, will continue in the second semester.

Mrs. Vlasta Greenbie, of the Hampshire Interlibrary Center at UMass, will teach Library Science 502, library administration. The course will meet from 9 to noon on Saturday mornings beginning February 13 in Room 613 of Goodell Library at UMass.

Cost of the course will be $90. Information and registration materials may be obtained from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, telephone 545-0905.

"Small College" Atmosphere Emphasized At Santa Cruz

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. - In a Redwood forest, one of the University of California's campuses gives students the feeling they are attending a very small college where they can do whatever they wish.

One thing they don't wish for - and don't get - is letter grades. At Santa Cruz, you either pass or fail.

Something else the students are happy to do without is the tramping between the huge lecture halls of a place like the huge University of California campus at Berkeley, which has 27,500 students. Santa Cruz has less than 3,500 and even they don't study en masse.

The way this is done is to scatter and secluded five independent, residential colleges, with 650 students each, through the forest in a system resembling that of England's Oxford and Cambridge. Eventually, Santa Cruz will have 25 colleges.

A student's primary commitment is to his own college, but he takes courses in the other colleges and studies science in large central facilities.

Instead of receiving a letter grade, a student gets a written essay from his teacher on what he has and hasn't accomplished.

Nobody is required to keep dormitory hours, and some dormitories are coed. Many students are devoted to vegetarian diets or organic foods, so special counters are set up for them in cafeterias.

Students are encouraged to think up their own courses of study. Some have even gone to India to learn yoga, and one youth studied Mark Twain by spending a quarter term taking a raft trip down the Mississippi.

By the only available measures, the system is working. The drop-out rate is half normal, Santa Cruz students have a high rate of success in obtaining admission to graduate schools, and last year they were seventh in the nation in their number of Woodrow Wilson Fellowships won.

Lowell Tech Students Punishments Reduced

LOWELL — Lowell Technological Institute's appeal board reduced the punishments yesterday for seven students found guilty of violating the school's ban on drinking in dormitories.

The penalties against two were reduced from expulsion to disciplinary probation. The appeal board also ordered the students to make a public apology to Dean Leo F. King Jr., who leveled the punishments the students contested.

Five other students who had received suspensions or probation from King were assigned to work 20 hours for the dean in February.

King had disciplined the students for their participation in a beer-drinking incident Nov. 17 in Bourgeois Hall.

Another student, Joseph Toomey, editor of the campus weekly, acted on his lawyer's advice and did not appear at the appeal board hearing. Toomey, who was punished with probation, has maintained he was covering the event for the student newspaper.

Summer Session Credit Load

Two vital questions being asked about the Summer Session's new eight-week session, are 1) what the "normal" load will be and 2) what exceptions will be allowed, because of the new 2.0 graduation requirement which goes into effect with the class of 1972.

Dean Tunis and the Board of Admissions and Records have stated that as long as a student has 60 credits earned in his previous class, the new 2.0 requirement will not apply. This means that students will not have to jam their schedules with twelve and fifteen hour loads this summer simply to graduate by the end of August.

Fr. Cagers Rap AIC, 98-65, For 5-0

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

Despite a poorly played and rather sloppy first half the UMass freshman basketball team soundly defeated the American International College frosh, 98-65, in the Cage Friday night. The win was the fifth in a row for the UMass frosh against no losses; AIC dropped to an even record of 3-3.

In the first half Al Skinner kept the Little Redmen in the lead with some fine rebounding and hustling defense. The freshman forward scored 16 of UMass' 36 points in the opening stanza. Most of Skinner's points came on offensive rebounds and steals resulting in breakaways.

The lead fluctuated between four and ten points for the UMass frosh as Roberto Irizarri kept AIC close by scoring 18 of his 24 points in the first half.

The Little Redmen could not seem to get their fast break going in the first half as a quick AIC team hustled down the court on defense. Several times Rick Pitino brought the ball down on a break only to slow down and set up a play. And at the half UMass held a slim six-point lead, 36-30.

MORE SPORTS ON THE BACK PAGE

However, the second half was a different story. The UMass frosh opened up with two baskets on good passes by Pitino, one to Art Levine and one to John Olson. And, over the first six minutes of the second half the Little Redmen played excellent defense, forcing AIC into several bad shots. UMass outscored AIC 15-14 over this stretch to take a commanding 51-34 lead.

After this UMass was never headed, and with six minutes to go in the game and the score 77-49 reserve guard Dennis McHugh replaced Pete Trow for the Little Redmen. McHugh proceeded to score 12 points in the last six minutes.

UMass coach Pete Broaca wasn't terribly pleased with his team's overall performance although it did manage to win by a very substantial margin, 33 points.

Pitino, besides scoring 21 points, had 13 assists topping his previous total of 12 against the Amherst frosh. Skinner had 28 points and 22 rebounds, both season highs for the 6'3 forward.

Russell's Presence Easily Felt

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

There's something about Bill Russell that is great. It's hard to put into words but the man just has something about him that sets him apart from other people, and it's not his height.

Here is a keen and perceptive person, one who spoke at UMass last week and did not lay down directions in which his audience should take itself, but offered personal advice, urging (but only urging) those who attended his talk to think.....and participate.

In the real person, Russell has a way of coming across to one who listens to him. The experience of watching and listening to him in person is quite a bit different from that of seeing him run up and down a basketball floor on television and help the Boston Celtics win another one.

His presence is easily felt. Before his 8 p.m. speech of last Wednesday, he was to have attended a dinner at the Campus Center, an affair slated to get under way at 6:15 p.m. Among those invited to this dinner were UMass basketball head coach Jack Leaman and his co-captains, Julius Erving and Ken Mathias.

Because of complications, Russell couldn't make the supper on time. In fact he didn't arrive on campus until about 7:15, at which time word was received that he was in Southwest. Upon the reception of this information, a few select people, including Erving and Mathias, drove off to pick him up.

The picking up party, with Russell, got back to the Campus Center at about 20 minutes before eight, at which time the presense of this man filled up the small room on the tenth floor, where all the eating had been done.

Russell walked into the space, took a quick glance around at the 20 or so people, and uttered a simple,..."Hello." For a few seconds, no one was able to reply; all eyes were focused on Russell, and his presence was dominating, yet no one could find an appropriate thing to say to him, until Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education and UMass' athletic director started to rap with Russell about his college basketball days.

The ice was broken, everyone sort of settled down, and Russell had a couple of cups of coffee as he talked at ease with those present concerning any subject they wished.

Russell informed all that he was so busy hopping around the country to give talks at colleges and universities, that he hadn't even had time to see a pro basketball game this winter. He said that he spends even more time traveling by air now than he did when he was with the Celtics.

Gymnasts Overhaul Army

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity gymnasts upped their record to 2-0 as they downed Army, 155.10-140.45, in a meet held Saturday afternoon. The capacity crowd was with the Redmen all the way as the Cadets were overpowered in every event.

In placing at least two men in the first three places for each event, the Redmen swept all six first places, as well as capturing the top three spots in two events, parallel bars and rings.

Once again, Norm Vexler captured individual scoring honors for UMass as he won the still rings and horizontal bars events, and placed second on side horse and parallel bars. His efforts easily won him top all-around man honors, as he scored 49.10 in the all-around event, to leave Army's nearest competitor, Jim Rutherford, 6.5 points behind.

Although Vexler was leading scorer, the meet was characterized by a number of outstanding performers. First places were taken by Bob Nelligan in floor exercise, Rick Riley on side horse, Bob Henry in vaulting, and Dave Genest on parallel bars.

Danny Spier and Jay Aronstein tied for second on the rings, while Tony Vacca, a strong all-around man, placed second on high bar, and captured third places in floor exercise, Rick Riley on

Danny Spier and Jay Aronstein tied for second on the rings, while Tony Vacca, a strong all-around man, placed second on high bar, and captured third place in floor exercise, vaulting and parallel bars. Rich Seikunas, the third all-around for UMass, turned in a steady performance as his score of 45.90 netted him second place in the all-around event.

Nelligan won floor ex with a score of 8.65, followed closely by Army's Doug Radzieski's second place performance of 8.60. Vacca also was right behind the leader, as he scored an 8.55, which was good for third. Though they led by just half a point, this event saw the Redmen jump to an early lead they would never relinquish.

In the side horse event, UMass outscored Army, 25.85-21.90 to increase its lead to 51.15-46.70. Riley won the event with a score of 9.2, highest of the meet. Vexler placed second with a score of 9.0.

Vexler easily won first in the still rings event as he bettered his nearest Army opponent by 1.3 points. UMass dominated the event as sophomores Speir and Aronstein tied for second with scores of 8.5. The Redmen scored 26.15 points in the event, as the score at intermission read: UMass 77.30, Army 68.80.

The long horse vault proved to be Army's strongest event. Led by Rutherford's 8.65 vault, which was good for second place, it scored 25.60 points. However, UMass won the event by a quarter of a point, as it was led by Henry's first place vault of 9.05, and Vacca's third place score of 8.5.

UMass simply overpowered Army in the parallel bars event. The Redmen enjoyed their highest event total of the afternoon as they scored 26.40 points to bring their lead to 129.55-117.15. The Redmen swept all three places as Genest took first with a 9.05, Vexler placed second with a score of 8.70, and Vacca captured another third with a routine that was scored at 8.65.

The final event, horizontal bar, was won by Vexler with a score of 8.8. Vacca took second with an 8.4, while Pillasch of Army edged out Myslicki of UMass by a tenth of a point to take third. UMass scored 25.55 points in the event to bring the final score of the meet to: UMass 155.10, Army 140.45.

The Redmen were impressive in their home opener. They won a total of six firsts, four seconds, and three thirds, as well as taking the top two spots in the all-around event. Army could muster only two seconds and two thirds throughout the entire meet.

The Redmen now face a month-long layoff from competitive action. In their next meet, they will host Syracuse on Friday, Jan. 29 at 7:30 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Scorpio man enjoys intrigue. You may be able to convince him you are right, but first he will tease, invehicle and even threaten. For Scorpio, it is somewhat of a game or contest. Give him plenty of credit, state your indebtedness, but stick to principles. He'll come around.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Lie low. Play waiting game. Defer to mate, partner or close associate. Family conference is in order. Strive to express true feelings; you will be happier as a result.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Moderate activities. Renew relations with co-workers, others who have mutual interests. Stress diplomacy. Be available, keep health resolutions, including diet.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Good for establishing rapport with children, other loved ones. Break through barriers. Give of yourself, in return, there will be greater self-satisfaction. Basic change is in order.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Complete transaction involving home, property. Domestic situation is highlighted. You must put relationship to test. Find out truth where you belong, where you are going.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Accent on short journeys, visits from relatives. Ideas need developing. Brief theme can be expanded. Don't try too much at once. Scattering efforts results in delay.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Intuition can result in addition to possessions. Heed inner voice. Others may mean well, but it must be your style which is emphasized. Message will become increasingly clear.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Stress on appearance, personality. Laughter not only is tonic, but will sway others to your point of view. Be dynamic. Express yourself in artistic, individual manner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): What appeared to be a handicap can be transformed into asset. Realize this and act accordingly. Obtain hint from Libra message. Work in conjunction with group, organization.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Emphasis on friendship, hopes and wishes. Change, travel and variety are featured. You are stimulated and you inspire others. Loved one rediscovers your charms.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Aim toward goal. You will get material requirements. You may be surprised at backing received from family member. Be gracious, but don't be overly modest.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20 - Feb. 18): You are able to delve deep — within yourself. Personal philosophy of life expands. You become more sure. You realize that doubts have a place but can be overcome.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Legal complication could temporarily mar pgarens. Be sure of facts. Benefit from experience of others. Stick to conservative course. Older person deserves to be heard.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are bright, active, fond of travel, publishing and writing. You have undergone some significant experiences and now are in better position to consolidate gains. Change of residence or a home of your own appears to be upcoming.

He commented that he didn't know if or when the Celtics would officially retire his number six. He was also surprised to learn that the no-dunking rule in college basketball is now being enforced during the pre-game warm-ups.

About the no-dunking subject Russell had a lot to say. He thought that a stuff shot is an extremely tough thing to pull off during the course of a game, and that when it is, it is not particularly dangerous to the safety of the players involved, nor the rim or the backboard.

He labled the rule "racist", stating that it was formulated by men whose athletic backgrounds include, more often than not, schools like Kentucky and North Carolina. In mentioning these two schools, Russell asked anyone if he could name the number of black players who play basketball for these schools. No one answered.

Russell was congenial overall. As 8 pm. approached, the dinner affair broke up and the big man headed for the Student Union Ballroom. He wished coach Leaman continued success with the UMass basketball team. Then came the speech.

Again Russell's presence filled the confines of the room he was in, as an attentive audience heard him speak intelligently about the subjects that occupy a lot of people's minds these days. He had some tremendous insights to offer on people in general, and these should not go unremembered.

Although "great" is a label that can be attached to one person only as another person sees fit and no one can really say whether a man is "great" or not, Russell deserves some sort of recognition for the part he plays in this world as a human being. He's just got to be "great", or something close to it.

AIC Takes It On Chin As Cagers Romp, 93-40

By EARLE BARROLL

Employing a tenacious defense, strong rebounding on both the offensive and defensive boards, and a consistent shooting performance the UMass basketball team ran off the first 15 points Friday night and was never headed as it soundly thumped an outmanned American International College basketball unit, 93-40, before 4200 howling UMass fans at Curry Hicks Cage.

The game was decided in the first six minutes as the Redmen went on their wild 15-point burst before the Yellow Jackets could get untracked.

Mike Pagliara got the show rolling with a short baseline jump shot 32 seconds into the tilt. John Betancourt cashed in a hoop off a Chris Coffin steal to put the Redmen up 4-0 at 18:32. Coffin then came back with a free throw for the fifth Redman point.

Then Julius Erving made his presence known with an unbelievable drive from the foul line that sent the crowd in a frenzy. He was fouled on the play and banged home the charity toss to complete the three point play.

Up to this point AIC was throttled on every offensive trip down the court. It wasn't getting the good percentage shot, and when it finally managed to get one off Erving, Coffin and Ken Mathias were in good position to sweep the boards and start the fast break that virtually ran the Yellow Jackets off the court.

At 15:45 Pagliara made his second bucket of the evening off a fast break. On the next two plays Erving threw two of his patented court-length passes, the first to Pagliara who shoveled the ball to Mathias for a score, and the second one to Betancourt who went in all alone for an easy lay-up.

With around 14 minutes remaining in the first half and the score 15-0, AIC called time out to talk things over. Up to that point the Yellow Jackets could not cope with the tough Redman defense.

AIC scored its first two points after its time out when Steve Washington hit a short jumper at 13:57. Washington was the best Yellow Jacket on the court on this evening as he scored 11 points, the only AIC player to hit in double figures.

For the next ten minutes play became sloppy as UMass was free wheeling it up and down the court, with little resistance from the opposition.

It wasn't until Erving went to the bench with his fourth foul of the contest with 4:41 left in the half, that the Redmen settled down and played their tough brand of hoop until half time.

With Erving out of the line-up, AIC was still only able to get one bucket until the half as Mathias, Coffin, Betancourt, Pagliara, Rich Vogeley and then Charlie Peters tightened things up and made the last few minutes of the half for AIC very difficult.

The half came to an end with UMass going to the locker room with a commanding 42-23 lead.

The second half saw the first half played over again as the margin kept mounting for the Redmen. At 16:21 coach Jack Leaman began to clear his bench as Peters came in for Mathias, who had done a fine job keeping AIC's big man George Kastrinakas out of the action for most of the game.

Betancourt and Coffin exited a few minutes later, each having played his usual solid game on both ends of the court. Pagliara's evening of basketball came to an end in favor of Bob Dempsey, and Erving left the court with just under five minutes to play.

Now the fans had a look at the subs, and as coach Leaman pointed out after the game, he had never seen his young players shoot so well.

With Peters, Vogeley, Chris Nichols, Dempsey Sam Provo, Tom Austin, Bill Kesgen, Chuck Olsen and Bill Greeley rotating in and out of the game, UMass went on another surge in the closing minutes outscoring AIC 20-2,giving the final score of 93-40.

BASELINE BABBLES-The Redmen as a team shot 55.4% from the field and 73.3% from the charity line... AIC's shooting was very poor as it hit only 25% from the field...Erving led all scorers with 31 points in 30 minutes of action...Betancourt had 12 points and his backcourt partner Pagliara had ten...Peters saw his longest action of the season playing 18 minutes and doing a fine job, scoring seven points and pulling down six rebounds...Erving also led all boardmen with 18 rebounds...In the turnover column the Redmen had 19 to keep their season average in tack...This many turnovers can be credited to the easiness of the contest for the Redmen...On a final note, the Redmen committed only 14 personal fouls as a team.

Norwich Is Loser In OT As Pucksters Win, 6-5

By STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

It couldn't have been any closer , but the UMass hockey team won its seventh straight game without a loss Friday night, at Orr Rink, beating Norwich 6-5 in overtime.

Jack Edwards was the hero for the Redmen as he banged home the winning goal with just eight seconds left in the overtime of a game in which the UMass team was lucky to win.

The Redmen, taking to the ice for the sixth time in fourteen days, were obviously ragged for such a rough stretch against some fine opponents. Yet the jam packed Orr Rink crowd gave UMass that added incentive as the home team jumped off to a quick 3-0 lead in the first 11 minutes.

Edwards opened up the UMass scoring at 2:23 with a goal from Pat Keenan. This first score was on a power play, just five seconds after Wilder Parks had left his Norwich teammates for a few minutes in the sin bin for interference. Keenan wasted no time winning the face off and dropped it back to Edwards, who put it in the net for the score.

The Redmen added their second goal when at 9:46 Keenan took a pass from Dan Reidy and shot the puck past Norwich goalie, Jack Steverman. Just two minutes after that, UMass made it 3-0 as Bob Shea scored from Don Riley and Brian Sullivan. Goalie Steverman had been slightly less than impressive this opening period as the Redmen took just six shots and three of them went in the net.

Norwich finally got untracked and tallied twice before the end of the period to make it 3-2. Doug Howard scored from Jim Grip and Jim Tait at 16:58. And just 21 seconds later Howard scored again, this time from Leo Scarry. UMass goalie, Bruce Crawford, playing for the injured P.J. Flaherty, seemed a bit unsure of himself on those quick goals but seemed to gain confidence as the game progressed.

In the second period the teams traded goals and the Redmen held on to a one-goal lead, 4-3, entering the last frame. As far as shots on net go, it was the Redmen's best period. After a poor opening twenty minutes (Mass six an d Norwich 14) the Redmen tried a bit harder and got nine shots to Norwich's eight.

Norwich tied the game at 7:50 when Tom Cadigan banged in a loose puck. Scarry and Steve Toomy got assists on this goal that Crawford had little chance to stop.

But the Redmen got a bit inspired and forced the play in the Norwich zone for several minutes before it paid off with another goal. Lonnie Avery netted the fourth goal for UMass with assists from Don Lowe and Dennis Grabowski. The goal came at 16:21, and it looked like the Redmen had turned the tide and were on their way to another win.

The story looked brighter at the start of the third period when Don Riley got UMass that insurance goal at 5:48. Shea and Eric Scrafield got assists, and the Redmen made the mistake of trying to rest on a two-goal lead.

Norwich came storming back, and less than two minutes later a two-goal lead had been wiped out. Norwich scored at 6:39 as Cadigan got his second of the night. Scary and Howard added assists to that play. The tying goal came 52 seconds later at 7:31 when Don Mountford scored with assists credited to Jim Marr and Mike Forrest.

That was all the scoring for the period as the count was frozen at 5-5, but UMass had two great chances near the end of the period when Norwich had to serve penalties on two different occasions. The last penalty to Chris Donavan at 19:23 carried over into the overtime, and even then UMass could not penetrate often enough to test goalie Steverman.

During that last period Norwich really enjoyed a shot advantage as it tested Crawford 13 times. UMass got away just six tries.

In the overtime Norwich constantly brought the puck to the Redman zone, and it was obvious that UMass was tired and playing cautious. UMass was waiting for the big break. It got two chances for the break as penalties were called against Norwich at 2:08 and again at 7:12. But the Redmen wasted these opportunities and mounted no serious threat at all.

By the time that last penalty was over just 50 seconds remained in the overtime and the crowd had just about reached the end of its fingernails. But finally UMass came alive and played good hockey. Several mad rushes resulted in frustration, and when it looked like the Redmen would have to settle for an inglorious tie at 5-5, Bob Bartholemew latched onto the puck and slapped it over to Keenan who in turn relayed it to Edwards who dramatically and suddenly ended it all.

Once again the UMass juggernaut had done it again and now the team could rest on its 7-0 record for a month and a half before taking to the ice again. The next hockey game is Jan. 30 at Colby.

Goalie Crawford should be applauded for an excellent game in which his team was outshot 45 to 24. Crawford made some excellent saves throughout the game, especially in the overtime session when Norwich outshot UMass 10-3.

As was said before, UMass rests until January 30 when the Redmen begin the road trip that will tell them if they are really a great hockey team this year. For in seven days UMass has to play Colby, Bowdoin and Merrimack, three pretty good sextets, all away from friendly but chilly confines of Orr Rink. Those three games will be what people like to call the true test of champions.

UMass track team lost a heart-breaking meet away at Brown University on Saturday, 58-51. The highlights of this tough loss to Brown will be presented in tomorrow's sports pages.

Fine Showing For UMass Grapplers, Take 2nd In Quadrangular

The UMass wrestling team made its finest showing ever outside New England but had to settle for second place in Saturday's New York University-sponsored quadrangular meet in New York. The Redmen saw their mark of 15 dual meet wins in a row come to a halt by powerful West Chester State of Pennsylvania.

Before the fatal blow however, victories 14 and 15 were recorded over Gettysburg College and a tough NYU team that was 10-2 last year and undefeated so far this year. West Chester was also 10-2 last year and runner-up to Temple in the Middle Atlantic Conference a year ago.

The quadrangular was run like three dual meets, and scores were kept as such. UMass defeated Gettysburg (from Gettysburg, Penn.) 21-11, defeated NYU 20-18 and lost to WCS 22-12. NYU also lost by a close score to WCS, and Gettysburg was winless. Individually UMass won 16 bouts, lost 13 and tied one.

As against Harvard last Wednesday night, it was the UMass lightweights who did most of the scoring. Through the 118-pound class to 158 the Redmen were definitely the best balanced team, losing only three bouts in 18 tries. However the heavyweights could only come up with three victories in the last four weights, out of 12 tries.

Several individuals showed outstanding performances for the day. At 118 Nick DiDomenico and Dave Amato combined for three wins, and probably the key win in the victory over NYU was turned in by DiDomenico, when he bested the NYU grappler 5-2. This guy was previously undefeated in dual meets and had lost 1-0 in the Coast Guard tournament, both times to N.A.I.A. champion, Pease of East Stroudsburg.

Sheldon Goldberg at 142 and Clay Jester at 150 also won all three bouts, while Phil Davis lost only to West Chester's J. Schmidt, who is also an N.A.I.A. champion. UMass' Brian Urquhart lost only to his NYU opponent, in the 158-pound division.

At 126 Barry Godowsky lost two decisions but collected an important forfeit for his New York U. opponent. Kent Mignocchi, back in the 167-pound class, had things a little tough as he could win only one decision, over his Gettysburg rival. He was pinned by NYU after taking the initial lead in the bout.

Mike Duffy, wrestling his first varsity bout as a freshman at 177, was pinned by NYU after taking the initial lead in the bout.

At 190 Ed Carlsson lost a disputed decision to NYU, decisioned his WCS opponent, and then lost another close decision, to Gettysburg. Heavyweight Carl Dambman ran into better-than-usual heavies as he ran into NYU national junior college champion, as well as the Coast Guard tourney champ, and he got pinned in the first period. Against WCS Dambman met a 265-pound rival and was pinned in the second period, but he bounced back in his last round for a solid decision over Gettysburg.

The Redmen now have 41 days off before resuming their schedule against Yale on Jan. 30 at Yale and Springfield College at home on Feb. 2.

"Please Put A Penny In The Old Man's Hat"

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Issue Editor

Christmas is without doubt the most depressing time of the year. It all starts around the end of Thanksgiving and begins to build until about a week from the big day. By that time everyone has been duped into believing that the whole Christmas present-peace-on-earth deal is what Christmas is all about. And by two days after the 25th they realize they've been hoodwinked by that fat man in the sky, Santa Claus. But do they care?

Christmas used to be a good time for me. We used to live in my grandmother's house when I was little and she has one of those big front rooms that isn't used except for Christmas and wakes. Since no one ever died in my family, we just used it for Christmas. My father and my brother would go out somewhere to buy a tree and the whole family would help to set it up. It used to be a big ritual and we looked forward to it every year.

The only reason I look forward to the Yuletide now is because I get out of school for a while. My parents have only two out of four of us living with them now and my brother has gotten too dynical about everything to enjoy Christmas. He has just realized that things aren't as rosy as the guys who sell toys on TV would have you believe they are. My little sister, she's only 10, is probably still under the influence of candy canes and promises of happiness that can never be fulfilled. I suppose that's the only reason Christmas is fun any more. I get a kick out of watching her.

LONELY, BUT PROBABLY HAPPY. But then no one ever asks them. (MDC photos by Lawrence Goldberg)

Spend a lot of time around the combat zone and downtown Boston and you get to recognize a lot of people. There's a nun who sits on Winter St., or somewhere near there, and begs; there's a blind guy with the white dog lying at his feet who plays the guitar for money; there was the little man on the scooter, he had no legs and had to push himself around on a little flat scooter, but he died; and there's the guy with the white hair and the two canes with his arm strapped up on some kind of board who always yells at people. He yelled at me one day and started to follow me and I tried to get away from him. I was scared of a lonely, but probably very bitter, man. Christmas is a lot of stuff and nonsense.

I went to a "prestigious" prep school on Malboro St. for a couple of years and spent a lot of time around Boston while I waited for the train in the afternoon. I used to walk through the Common and see the bums stretched out on the park benches in the hot September sunshine. They used to come up to me in Copley Sq. in the mornings when I'd gotten off the subway and bum dimes off me. Sometimes I'd give them the dime and sometimes I wouldn't. But when I walked away the heels of my twenty-dollar shoes would go click, click on the sidewalk, in mocking derision of the poor guy's paper-thin and beaten black shoes. My expensive sports coat would keep me warm against the winds howling down Boylston St. while small groups of tired, dirty men would gather in the South Station subway to keep warm.

But you can't look at these guys for too long without feeling something. I started to realize that when I was walking across the Common one day with my father and some grubby old guy came up and wanted twenty-two cents to catch a train to Pawtucket or someplace. I'll never forget the look that crossed my father's face when that happened. He's worked in Boston for over twenty years and he's seen a lot of bums.

If you want to get away from bums, you couldn't have picked a better place that Amherst. This is a comfortable, stable town and there aren't any bums. No bums to look at, no one to feel sorry for at Christmas. It's as simple as that. Bums have their pride though. They don't want people to feel sorry for them. They want to make it by themselves. What does it take? I saw a bum on a sidewalk in New York last February while I was down for a weekend in the big city, and I almost started to cry. My buddies and I gave the guy every cent we could spare. Was that enough? When they used to come up to me in the Common or Tremont St. and ask for money and I gave it to them, was that enough? What did they want from me, anyway?

I doubt that I'll go out of my way to be nice to any bums this Christmas. But I refuse to get sucked into the whole cheap, tinselly, red and green plastic show.

Is that enough?

Guild Center Offers Outlet For Creativity

By LINDA A. BALICKI

Silver earrings, belts woven and leather, buckles, hats, pocketbooks knitted and crocheted, the products of creativity.

Working with your hands, giving of yourself, exhibiting the creative spirit innate in any man, producing that which will appeal to the creative spirit of others: the satisfaction of creativity.

A place where people can come and express themselves; where they can escape from the anxieties and pressures of the society in which we live and truly be themselves; where they can become part of what may be called "the antithesis of modern bureaucracy and anonymity": the UMass Craftsmen Guild Center in the Student Union.

Organized for students by students, the Crafts Center seeks to provide a place where craftsman or would-be craftsman may come to work, learn and exhibit, share or sell their creations with others and gain a sense of personal satisfaction from doing so.

According to Richard Collier, Chairman of the Guild, the Center hopes to be able to acquire the tools and equipment necessary for such crafts as leatherworking, glassblowing, pottery, knitting, crocheting, jewelry making and wood carving and sculpture so that interested students may come to the Center and use the tools without expense. The Center also hopes to conduct lessons in the various crafts so that those interested in discovering an avenue for self expression will be able to discover where their true talents and capabilities lie.

At present, the Center which has been in existence since Thanksgiving, is serving primarily as an outlet for the sale and display of the creations of its original members. It is currently facing financial difficulties due to lack of subsidation from either the Student Senate or Student Union Governing Board and are also faced with the responsibility of repaying exhibitors whose crafts have been stolen from the display case situated outside the Center located in Room 328. Collier stated that the Center has made repeated requests for funds from both the Student Senate and Governing Board if only to obtain funds for salaries and insurance coverage for the articles placed on display. He also estimated that the Center is seeking in the area of $5000-8000 to pay for the equipment which they need. It had been his hope that the Center might be in full operation by February, but the delay in financial backing may force a postponement until September.

Trustees Refuse Freshmen Admission To Co-Ed Dorms

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

BOSTON - Despite a recommendation from Mrs. Rowland's Sub-committee on Student Life, the Board of Trustees yesterday refused to allow freshmen in Co-Ed dorms while meeting here at the Parker House.

Avoiding what Trustee Lorenzo D. Lambson called "liberal" tendencies, the Board voted 7-6 to defeat the motion which originally had received the unanimous approval of Student Life Sub-Committee.

In other business, a proposal raising the Graduate School fee from $.50 to $2.00 was approved along with an endorsement of a new addition to the Infirmary and extra funds for campus security.

Vice Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Chancellor Oswald Tippo spoke well of the record of the coed dormitories. Bromery noted the increased security and the lessened property damage associated with coed dormitories; Tippo remarked that he had visited Butterfield and Greenough, and had been very impressed with what he had seen there.

Bromery spoke for the proposal to allow freshmen into coed dormitories, saying that requiring parental permission for freshmen under 21 should be an adequate precaution. It would be "unreasonable", he stated, to turn away a 25-year old veteran of Vietnam from a coed dormitory simply because he was a freshman. The non-coed dormitories are taking in an increased number of freshmen, some consisting of as much as 95% of freshmen students, and these dormitories have a poor record, he added.

Student Senate Treasurer Richard Verrochi, noted that freshmen often need the kind of guidance that living with upperclassmen can provide. He spoke of dormitory life as a source of education, in that dormitories bring together people of diverse backgrounds, and are often used as centers for university courses. "The center of education in the University is changing," he said.

Trustee Lambson said that there was a tendency to try to act in a "liberal" manner; automatically acting to make students happy. He opposed the motion.

A motion was made to defer a vote until a future meeting. Mrs. Rowland observed that when the motion had originally come up, in September, 1969, she had voted to defer, but now she felt that it was time to vote; she added that now she was entirely convinced of the wisdom of the motion.

The Trustees endorsed a proposed addition of several buildings to the Infirmary, which, it was stated, would not "compound a felony" aesthetically. One Trustee who favored the motion stated that the buildings were "not a bad solution" to the problem of increasing the facilities of the Health Services without creating an eyesore.

Speaking on security, Dr. Bromery noted that there had been about 60 bomb threats this year at UMass/Amherst. One suspect has been arrested, he stated, who he felt had probably called in a threat when intoxicated. Another person is suspected: "We know who he is and he knows that we know"; at present there is not enough evidence to arrest him. A conviction would mean 10 years in prison, Dr. Bromery said, and this should be enough to give any reasonable person pause before calling in a threat.

Bromery noted the problems of traffic (14,000 parking stickers have been issued), outsiders (UMass students are apparently harboring criminals), and internal security (students).

Security problems inciude the limited capacity of auditoriums and arenas. UMass now has a winning basketball team -- and, with a student body of 20,000, a stadium seating 3,000.

Dr. Bromery saw protection from outside intruders and the development of internal security measures on the part of students as especially important. The main thrust of security measures will be to provide highly visible, highly mobile deterrent factors for protection of the campus.

It was hoped that the State Legislature will approve the deficiency budget request which the Board of Trustees endorsed.

AT THE BOARD of Trustees meeting held yesterday at the Parker House, the decision was reached not to allow freshmen to reside in co-ed dorms. Trustee Pumphret voted against the motion, while Trustee Gordon voted favorably. Also present was Planning Director Jack Littlefield. (MDC Photo by Ed Fenwick)

Fall '70 Finds Life Simpler

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

"People are talking about personal associations, trying to identify the simpler things about their lives and clarifying them in their minds," said Dean of Students William Field in an interview yesterday afternoon. His remark was characteristic of the comments noted in an MDC survey of the 1970 fall semester.

Among those consulted in the survey were Dean Field and Michael West, of the administration, Gerald Grady, Joseph Frank and Richard Hartzler of the faculty, and various students.

Dean Field said that in general students appeared to be working toward their goals individually rather than through group confrontations. He offered the drug center on campus as an example of what he called a "renewed emphasis of people privately doing things to help other people for only personal reward."

Richard Hartzler, Professor of Business Law, emphasized this aspect of the semester, also. He said that his students have been very appreciative of opportunities for social action. He sees personal satisfaction as the guiding factor in the actions of many students this year.

"Rather than solve problems through political action students have preferred to attack problems directly through social action agencies, becoming involved politically only if those agencies are," Hartzler explained.

He sees the Continuing Education program as an important concept developed during the semester, also. Challenging tradition to force rethinking is important, he said.

"By whatever means they find available, students at the University are educating themselves far more than the faculty or any program is educating them," Hartzler said as a general comment on the semester.

Associate Dean of Students Michael West commented that people want to work within the system this semester. He said that students are approaching their problems with talk and non-violent action.

"People can perceive an attitude, a sense of hope, that encourages them to work through the system" said West.

He attributed the attitude to the individuals who have been installed in the University this year, namely Dr. Wood, Chancellor Oswald Tippo, and Vice Chancellor Randolph Bromery. Expectations rise when the students trust the administrators, he explained.

West sees decentralization, more authority, and decision making power allotted to the residential areas, as issues in future semesters. He identified the positive gains in co-ed housing as portenders of this.

"The only depressing thing about this semester is that the Legislature and the public don't seem to understand what the University is really about," West said. Misrepresentations of the goals and programs at the University have sometimes hurt it, he said.

Gerald Grady, UMass Business Manager, said that this semester has been a period of study, both academic and private, about national and campus issues.

Comparing this semester to the activity that the Strike caused last year, Professor Joseph Frank, Head of the English Department, said that the students seem more disillusioned with political activity on campus than apathetic.

"Washington is not responsive to student demands," Frank said. "The strike proved that."

He offered that as the reason students seem to talk more than effect political action on campus this semester.

All administrators and faculty personnel interviewed agreed that the ideas arrived upon at SWAP and the new Individual Concentration Major program were forward steps made this semester concerning curriculum reform and academic flexibility.

In the words of Professor Frank "UMass is a great University and has the potential for becoming greater."

Professor Hartzler's sentiments on student involvement in drafting codes such as student judiciary codes that are guidelines for the whole University reflect what all those interviewed felt as very important to th e University. He said that UMass is "way ahead in sensitivity to student needs and desires and that is what moves a school forward."

Student response to the fall semester 1970 was not as favorable as that of the faculty and administrators.

Most comments were concerned with issues that personally affect the student: bomb scares, dining commons, frustration with the non-action of the administration on issues such as security, and the general boredom of a so-called "non-active" campus.

More favorable and in agreement with the faculty and administrators' hopefulness was the view that this semester has been one of reflection. A great majority of the students interviewed felt that searching for their own individuality was a major effect of last year's Strike on the students this semester.

Generally it was the concensus among the students interviewed that this semester's student at UMass was concerned more with problems that affected him personally than with the national issues that guided activity last semester.

Peace March Held In Spirit of Chanukah

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

The Spirit of Chanukah, the Hebrew Feast of Dedication, radiated warm friendship amongst a small group of about 40 peace marchers despite the stinging cold and bitter winds, last night.

The group marched slowly from the pyramids outside of George Washington, through Southwest, and past the library to the south side of the Campus Center, singing celebration songs, and gathering people along the way.

The march was not only to celebrate Chanukah, which begins at sundown today, but was also a plea for peace and a protest against the injustices of war and oppression.

When the group arrived at the terrace on the south side of the center, Rabbi Cohen spoke briefly about the meaning of Chanukah, and his desire that all men be able to live in peace.

Chanukah stands for two ideals: 1) the achievement of religious liberty, and 2) the national development of the Jewish people. Dean Field arrived and also spoke briefly, saying that he was pleased that the group could come together in friendship on such a cold night.

Each of the eight candles on The Menorah, the Torch of Peace, were lit, and the group, huddled and shivering, then danced the traditional Jewish dance. Later the group gathered in the Hillel Office of the Student Union for a reception.

Harassment Continues In East Berlin

BERLIN (AP) - East Germany intensified its harassment of Berlin traffic Monday to coincide with a meeting of a West German political party group in West Berlin.

The Soviet news agency Tass carried a Moscow report of a Soviet protest, presented the Western allies in West Berlin, against the meeting by the Social Democratic parliamentary leaders.

The party is that of West German Chancellor Willy Brandt, who is due in West Berlin Wednesday to spend Christmas with his family.

Tass said the Ruasians had told U.S., British and French missions in Berlin that sponsors of such political meetings in West Berlin will have to bear all possible consequences.

An allied source said this was the same Soviet protest brought to West Berlin last Friday by a Soviet liaison officer from his East Berlin Embassy.

The allies responded to that on Saturday with a protest of their own that stated Soviet condoning of the East German stop and go tactics on the Berlin access ways could harm the prospects for success in the four power dialogue on Berlin. Those talks resume in January.

The allied protest was repeated in Bonn Monday by West German government spokesman Conrad Ahlers. But he said it was the East Germans who were disturbing the four power talks. He added that Bonn remained ready to negotiate a Berlin traffic agreement with East Berlin.

It was the second time in three weeks that Russian protests have made explicit Moscow support of East Germany's hard line against West German political activity in West Berlin, which the Communists claim is a separate political entity.

But it was the first time that autobahn harassment, which started Saturday, had accompanied such a comparatively low key session.

Western border officers said the harassment had spread to most access roads connecting to West Germany, 110 to 250 miles away, depending on which route is taken.

They said because of expected harassment, car traffic was unusually light. Trucks, which must haul goods, again were hardest hit with waiting time to cross into East Germany running up to nine hours.

The East German stop and go tactic is simple. Border guards put their traffic lights on red, then flash green for as little as 30 seconds at a time and Western vehicles must scury to get through before the light goes back to red.

Berrigan's Friends Deny Hiding Him

BLOCK ISLAND, R.I. (AP) - Peet Anthony Towne and Dr. William Stringfellow Monday denied that they harbored or concealed the Rev. Daniel Berrigan when he was a fugitive, and said they did not hinder authorities when he was arrested.

"Our hospitality to Daniel Berrigan is no crime," the writers, both 42, said in a joint statement each read at a news conference in their six room house on this island off the Rhode Island coast.

They denied that "we have done anything to conceal him," contending Father Berrigan had no need to be concealed.

Stringfellow, a lay Episcopal theologian, and Towne were indicted last week on charges of harboring Father Berrigan Aug. 7-11 while he was being sought by federal authorities to serve a three year prison term for destroying draft records at Catonsville, Md.

At their arraignment they pleaded innocent and were released in $2,500 personal recognizance each.

They called the news conference Monday to make a statement on the indictment. They contended it is "our Christmas greeting-especially to Daniel and Philip Berrigan, to all prisoners of conscience and to all Americans who wish to be free."

The Rev. Philip Berrigan was also convicted in the Catonsville case and is serving a three year term as is his brother Daniel in Danbury, Conn., federal prison.

Town and Stringfellow acknowledged that "at a certain time and in a certain place we did relieve, receive, comfort and assist" Father Dan Berrigan and "we did offer and give sustenance and lodging to him.

"We did not harbor or conceal him. We did not hinder the authorities. We are not disposed to hide what light there is under a bushel."

Town, attired in a hunting shirt and slacks, and Stringfellow, wearing a sport coat, and slacks, read their indictment returned by the federal grand jury in Providence last Thursday and then read their reply before answering reporters' questions.

Asked if they believed they were possibly breaking the law by having Father Berrigan as a guest Towne said they looked up the law later and thought they were innocent.

"Because we are innocent," they said in the statement, "we believe that we would not have been indicted but for the pervasiveness of the spirit of repression that has lately overtaken the nation. In that respect we consider that whatever happens to us will in truth be happening to all Americans." Calling the Indochina war "vainglorious," they called for an end to it and to violence.

"But more than that," statement said, "the war enterprise must be dismantled and the military predominance in our society must be reversed."

Supreme Court Approves 18-Year Old Vote

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court approved 5 to 4 Monday allowing 18-year olds to vote for president and Congress.

But in another 5-4 split the court disapproved lowering through federal action of the voting age for state and local elections.

The decision on the 1970 Federal Voting Rights Act came as the justices recessed for the holidays. The law's 18-year old provision takes effect Jan. 1.

Minutes after the ruling was announced Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, (D) Mass., said he would move for a constitutional amendment to lower the voting age to 18 in state and local elections.

About 10 million young citizens will be added to the electorate in 46 states and the District of Columbia by virtue of the court ruling. Hawaii had a 20-year minimum and Georgia, Kentucky and Alaska already permitted 18-year olds to vote.

The court approved also, 8 to 1, a provision of the law that abolishes residence requirements of more than 30 days for voting in presidential elections.

It unanimously approved Congress' suspension of literacy tests for five years throughout the nation.

The main question before the court was whether a simple act of Congress, rather than an amendment to the Constitution, could require the states to lower the minimum voting age.

Justice Hugo L. Black cast the key vote as the court came up with its answer.

On national elections, Black lined up with Justices William O. Douglas, William J. Brennan Jr., Byron R. White and Thurgood Marshall to form a majority and to approve what Congress had done in the 1970 law.

But Black left this group and voted with Chief Justice John M. Harlan, Potter Stewart and Harry A. Blackmun to strike down the reduction in the minimum voting age for state and local elections.

Harlan dissented alone from the approval of Congress' abolition of residence requirements of more than 30 days for presidential elections.

Sen. Birch Bayh, (D) Ind., chairman of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on constitutional amendments, said he doubts the current Congress will have time to approve Kennedy's amendment before its term runs out Jan. 3. But he said he looks for action in the new Congress starting in January. He said he expects the voting age to be reduced to 18 in state and local elections either through a constitutional amendment, which must be ratified by three-fourths of the states, or by state legislation.

Without such action, the prospect of having two classes of electors raises some obvious operational problems for which state and local officials had no immediate answers.

One possibility-an expensive one-might require two sets of voting machines at polling places, one to record the presidential and congressional choices of the 18 to 20 year olds and another for those entitled to a vote on all offices.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., (D) N.C., who led the fight against lowering the voting age by legislative rather than constitutional means, denounced the court decision as proof "that the American people are being ruled by a judicial oligarchy."

In the court ruling, Justice Black reasoned that the Constitution's Article 1, Section 4, giving Congress the authority to alter "the times, places and manner" of holding congressional elections authorizes Congress to reduce the minimum voting age to 18.

But, Black said, "it is obvious that the whole Constitution reserves to the states the power to set voter qualifications in state and local elections."

Douglas, Brennan, White and Marshall took the position Congress could fix the voting age at 18 for both federal and state elections under the 14th Amendment. This guarantees all citizens equal protection of the law and gives Congress authority to legislate to protect the rights and privileges of citizens from state encroachment.

On the other side stood Burger, Harlan, Stewart and Blackmun. Harlan said the framers of the Constitutions intended the states to keep for themselves, as provided in the 10 Amendment, the power to regulate elections. Burger, Stewart and Blackmun concluded Black had misinterpreted Article 1, Section 4.

They said Article 1, Section 2 in the 17th Amendment both prescribe that states use the same qualifications for national elections as they do for the state legislatures.

"The Constitution thus adopts as the federal standards the standard which each state has chosen for itself," Stewart said. He suggested the justices in the majority were influenced partly by what they thought as citizens instead of a strict reading of the Constitution.

Smokers, Catch Your Breath

WASHINGTON (AP)-Per capita cigarette smokin" increased in 1970 for the first time in four years, partly because of stepped up promotions by manufacturers, the Agriculture Department said Monday.

A report on tobacco use showed that per capita puffing averaged 4,030 cigarettes-201.5 packs-compared with 3,993 for each adult smoker in 1969.

The department's preliminary estimate last September was for an average of 3,960 cigarettes per capita this year.

The new estimates represents the first per capita increase since Americans smoked an average of 4,287 cigarettes in 1966, up 29 from 1965.

Total output this year was estimated at 575 billion cigarettes, compared with 557.6 billion in 1969, the report said.

"With new brands and a final push in radio and television ads before the 1971 advertising ban," the report said, "cigarette manufacturers substantially boosted sales in the second half of 1970."

Radio and television cigarette advertising will be outlawed by new federal regulations beginning Jan. 1.

There was no estimate on 1971 per capita smoking, although the report said "cigarette use may change little in the year ahead, even if smoking health publicity diminishes" because of state tax increases and advertising restrictions.

The MDC ceases publication for the year tomorrow. Next edition: Jan. 27.

Five Colleges Flies Again

Mrs. Barbara Burn, Director of International Programs, has announced that there will be Five College charter flights to Europe again next summer. Eligible to participate are students, faculty and staff of the University of Massachusetts, Smith, Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Hampshire Colleges, and members of these persons' immediate family.

The flights offered are: Boston-Paris-Milan June 17 - August 26, $250; Boston-London June 15 - August 25, $216.50; Boston-London June 15 - August 12, $248; Boston-New York-Madrid June 16 - August 26, $250. To sign up contact the Office of International Programs, 229 Whitmore, telephone 545-2710. Interested persons should sign up as soon as possible to ensure getting on the flight they want.

Mrs. Burn's office also offers other information on travel to Europe, summer study programs abroad, and work abroad. Among the many programs available are living with a family in Finland and earning a small wage by teaching them English, living with a family in Buenos Aires, Argentina, for four weeks next summer, and participating in work camps.

In announcing next summer's flights to Europe, Mrs. Burn has stated that these flights are the only charter flights to Europe next summer officially sponsored and authorized by Five Colleges, Inc.

Cambodian Soldiers Attempt To Clear Supply Highway 4

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)—Cambodian soldiers marched down Highway 4 southwest of here Monday to push antigovernment forces away from the vital highway to the sea that has been closed for a month.

With supplies, especially gasoline, running critically low in the capital, the government mounted a top priority campaign to reopen the lifeline to Cambodia's only deepwater port at Kempong Som, formerly called Sihanoukville.

Cambodian bombers, guided by Thai air force spotter planes, pounded the rice paddies and swamps along the sides of the highway to drive the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese back into their mountain strongholds.

Sporadic gunfire could be heard throughout the area, about 45 miles southwest of Phnom Penh, but there were no indications that the Communist led forces were trying to defend positions in the valley. Repeated ambushes and harassing attacks have kept the road closed since Nov. 20, and the government troops swept both sides of the highway in an effort to get traffic moving again. (On the northern front, a prisoner of war was quoted as saying the commander of a Viet Cong division was killed in an allied bombing raid two days ago.

Lt. Gen. Do Cao Tri, commander of the South Vietnamese 3rd military region, told Associated Press photographer Dang Van Phuoc that the body of the enemy field commander had not been recovered.

The Viet Cong general was identified as Muoi Tri, who led the Viet Cong 5th Division in bitter fighting against American forces in South Vietnam before the allied raids into Cambodia last spring. The 5th Division later was reported to have pulled back into western Cambodia, where it set up a command post in the ancient temple ruins at Angkor.

No major fighting was reported in South Vietnam.

The U.S. Command in Saigon announced that American troop strength in Vietnam dropped another 4,500 men last week, to the lowest level since Oct. 22, 1966. A spokesman said there are now 339,200 U.S. troops in Vietnam, 4,800 below the authorized ceiling of 344,000.

Survey Shows Women Feel Lottery Unfair

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

A survey taken of 100 students on their attitudes toward the draft, and possible alternatives to it, showed that more women than men feel that the present draft lottery system is unfair.

The survey was an attempt to obtain a sampling of campus opinions, and the writer chose names at random out of the Student Directory, usually taking the first and last name on each page.

Each person chosen was phoned, and if the student agreed to participate, he or she was asked to give his graduating class, age, and major department if he had one. The student was then asked 11 questions to which he could answer "Yes", "No", or "Undecided". Non of the questions asked had a right or wrong answer, all were matter-of-opinion questions.

A total of 52 males and 48 females were surveyed. Of the women, there were three freshmen, 21 sophomores, 17 juniors, and 7 seniors. Ages ranged from 18 to 21 accordingly. Twenty-seven were in Arts and Sciences, 9 were in Education, 6 in Home Economics, 2 with no major department as yet, and Physical Education, Nursing, Business Administration, and Agriculture all had one in each.

Of the men, the survey included three freshmen, 19 sophomores, 14 juniors, and 16 seniors. Ages ranged from 18 to 26, but most fell into the 18 to 21-year-old category, according to graduating class. There were 33 Arts and Sciences majors, 7 Business Administration, 6 Engineering, 3 Phys Ed, 2 in Agriculture, and 2 with no major department as yet.

Ninety-six out of 100 students felt that a man should not be drafted to fight in a foreign civil war, or to fight for ideas he believes to be wrong, and 99 out of 100 students felt that a man can be opposed to the draft and not be a traitor to his country, and one person was undecided.

Eighty-one out of 100 students felt that a man opposed to the draft, but unable to qualify as a conscientious objector, should not be forced to leave the country or be tried in court. Of the 13 who did not feel as such, most believed that a man should not be forced to leave the country, but should be tried in court. Six students were undecided.

Sixty out of 100 students felt that the present draft lottery system is not fair, with more women than men considering it to be unfair. Amongst males, the tally was 24 "fair", 23 "unfair", and 5 "undecided", but amongst females it was 8 "fair", 37 "unfair", and 3 "undecided".

Sixty-nine out of 100 students felt that the draft discriminates against the poor, including low-income minority group members, those in rural areas, and those unable to afford the costs of college.

A slight majority (54 out of 100) felt that student deferments are fair, with a few more women than men believing so. Only one female senior out of seven felt that they were fair, however. Amongst the males 26 felt that college deferments were fair, 23 felt they were not, and 3 were not, and 3 were uncertain. Four out of seven SBA majors, and four out of six Engineering majors that were surveyed considered them to be fair.

A slight majority of students (53 out of 100) also felt that women should not be eligible for the draft.

Despite Women's Lib, 28 out of the 48 girls surveyed felt that women should not be eligible, and one was undecided. Three out of three freshmen, and 13 out of 21 sophomores said "no", but only two out of seven senior girls felt that they should not be eligible.

Amongst the men it was close. Twenty-two said "yes", 25 said "no", and five not saying anything!

Most students, (84 out of 100) felt that members of local draft boards do not know all aspects of the draft law, and are not qualified to determine who is a conscientious objector and who is not. Fifteen students were undecided.

Seventy-one out of 100 students favored the immediate abolishment of the present draft system in favor of an All-Volunteer Army, such as urged by Senators Brooke and Hatfield. Eleven out of 14 male juniors favored such a system, as well as 5 out of 7 SBA majors, and 4 out of 6 Engineering majors.

Also, 74 out of 100 students would favor the immediate abolishment of the present draft system in favor of Universal National Service, such as proposed by former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara, whereby men, and perhaps women later on if the system proved to be effective, would be required to spend between six months to a year performing some service in the national interest, such as V.I.S.T.A., as an alternative to military service if the person so desired.

More women than favored such a proposal, with 39 "yes", 8 "no", and 1 "undecided", as compared to 35 "yes", 14 "no", and 3 "undecided" for the men.

It is also interesting to note that 18 out of the 19 women who felt that women should be eligible for the draft, were in favor of Universal National Service.

Congressional Seniority To Be Attacked By NCEC

WASHINGTON (AP) - Plans to find and finance candidates to run against some of the entrenched senior members of the House were announced Monday by the National Committee for an Effective Congress.

The private political action organization is preparing now for an assault on the seniority system in the 1972 primary elections, with anywhere from five to 30 members of each party the likely targets.

The target list was not disclosed but the NCEC said it would consist of "obstructionists" in key positions of power who are interested mainly in preserving the status quo.

"In all cases, defiance of change is the watchword," said an NCEC statement announcing the campaign.

The NCEC has been in existence 23 years, during which time it has provided campaign help to selected candidates of both parties and worked for congressional reform.

It reports distributing $930,000 in the 1970 elections, which helped elect 35 House winners.

Its success in backing 16 successful challengers to incumbent members was a factor in the decision to attack the seniority system through the primaries.

The committee said it already has begun a study of voting patterns and population characteristics in some congressional districts that will have new boundary lines as the result of redistricting plans required by the 1970 census.

My Name's Howard

WASHINGTON—Every man has one big dream in him that keeps him going for all of his life. My dream is quite a simple one:

I'm taking an airplane from Las Vegas to Paradise Island in the Bahamas, and sitting next to me is a gaunt, thin man with a moustache. He is wearing a white shirt open at the collar, an old sweater, an unpressed pair of slacks and tennis sneakers.

"Hi," I say in my dream, sticking out my hand, "my name is Art."

He refuses to shake hands but mutters, "My name is Howard."

"Howard what?" I ask, trying to be friendly.

"Just Howard," he snarls. "Now if you don't mind, I have private detective reports to read."

"What business are you in, Howard?"

"A little bit of this, a little bit of that. I buy and sell states," he said.

"You mean estates, don't you?"

"I said states, and I mean states." He is becoming angry again.

I try to get on his good side. "You seen any good movies lately?"

"The only movie I've seen lately is 'The Outlaw' with Jane Russell."

"Oh? How did you like it?"

"I think it's one of the greatest films ever made," Howard says.

"So do I," I tell him.

"You do?" For the first time he smiles.

"Yes, sir. It's been 20 years and I still can't get Jane Russell's performance out of my mind."

I can see Howard is starting to warm up.

"I was hoping they'd show it on this flight," he says confidentially.

"Wouldn't that be something," I say.

We have nothing to talk about for a few minutes and then I say, "What do you think of Las Vegas?"

"It's a nice place to own, but I wouldn't want to live there," he replies.

"That's a good one," I say, slapping Howard's knee. "Where do you stay in Las Vegas?"

"I have the choice of many hotels, but I usually stay at the Desert Inn on the top floor because I like the view."

"Do you gamble?"

"Sort of, but I never go near the tables," he says.

"That's a good idea," I say. "Stick with the slot machines and they can't hurt you."

We lapsed into silence again. I notice Howard is writing notes on yellow legal-size pads. Then he crushes up a page and starts all over.

"Having trouble?" I ask.

"I'm trying to fire a guy, and I don't know how to say it in a nice way."

By this time our plane is landing in Nassau. While I'm gathering up my things, Howard dashes off the plane. I notice he has left his briefcase behind.

I try to run after him, but he has already jumped into a limousine.

"Howard, Howard," I yell, "you forgot your briefcase."

"I don't need it," he yells as the limo pulls out. "You can have it."

I open the briefcase when I get to my hotel room and, to my surprise and joy, find $100 million, all in new 1,000 dollar bills.

A Child Is Born In Bethlehem.

The deck read, "Town joyous with news of Hebrew savior's birth." And the jump head read, "Birth of Hebrew savior attracts 3 rich foreigners."

Written by Rich Limacher with a Bethlehem dateline of Dec. 25, the led paragraph said, "Most of this town's residents and several thousand visitors here to register for the census ordered by Caesar Augustus stayed up most of the night and are active this morning. They are proclaiming the birth of 'their savior', or 'Messiah', according to a leading Hebrew spokesman."

Surely, it's the biggest story of the year.

Someday Is Never

"We boast of the freedom enjoyed by our people above all other peoples. But it is difficult to reconcile that we boast with a state of the law which, practically, puts the brand of servitude and degradation upon a large class of our fellow-citizens, our equals before law."

This quote could be written today in 1970 with little change in degree as to the harshness of its accusations. Yet it was stated by Judge Harlan in October 1895 during a law case fighting for the desegregation of train cars. It would be difficult to explain the "progress" of three-quarters of a century of recognition of all tones people as equal to the parents of an injured black child in Lamar, South Carolina. On March 3, 1970, this child's bus was stoned and battered with ax handles, chains, and bats, and finally overturned by one hundred white parents. The bus was driving to the newly integrated Lamar High School.

The Plessy versus Fergusen decision concerning the lawfullness of separate but equal public facilities in 1896, was not overturned until 1954 in Brown versus the Board of Education. In this case, the Supreme Court awarded a decision stating that if a school is separate, it is impossible for it to be equal. If it took fifty-eight years to rewrite our laws, how many years will it take for us to rectify years of discrimination? Always to promise "someday."

Security Checks

Dear Editor:

Last Thursday, December 17, 1970, there took place two security checks in Field House, Orchard Hill complex. There was one at 4 P.M. and one at 4 A.M.

At 4 A.M., as residents of Field, we awoke to three individuals entering our room. One of these persons, a student residing in the dorm, was standing in the middle of the room. Our house mother was at the door, apparently directing the procedure. This proved to be a quite upsetting experience from two standpoints. First of all, we didn't know who was coming into our room; and secondly, we felt they had no right entering our room.

We believe the security check to be an infringement on our rights as residents of Field dorm for the following reasons:

1. No one has the legal right to enter another's room without consent.
2. The employment of scare tactics to force people to lock their doors is not legitimate.
3. 4 A.M. is not a reasonable hour to conduct a check, thereby disturbing residents.
4. The residents were not informed of the security checks.
5. It is up to the individual whether he wants to lock his door or not-when he's occupying the room or not.

Alternative procedures should have been devised to inform the residents of the reasons why doors should be locked when the occupants aren't there or when the occupants are sleeping. Corridor meetings could have been called and signs could have been posted.

This incident serves to magnify several problems one faces in this university-there is a lack of communication, there is a lack of privacy, and there are infringements on our basic rights as individuals.

The Poetry of Lucille H. Bell

When a woman comes to grips with her traditional social role as a submissive sexual object she faces a very arduous task. I think that she somehow has to reconcile the "evil seductive whore" in her with the Holy Earth Mother, which is also very much her. If these poems are read in order, you the reader, will experience the long spiritual/physical journey of a woman as she attempts to deal with the problem and the resolution which hopefully resides in the last poem. The journey shows that "the spiritual is the real physical acts which the body makes." I want to suggest that for the 'mealspirit' that is this woman - and for every woman - the journey must be resolved in this way: "LET MY LOVE, LIKE SUNLIGHT, SURROUND YOU YET GIVE YOU ILLUMINED FREEDOM."

The Man With the Beautiful Eyes

In his eyes I can see
All the beauty of his being.
All the things he is to me.
He understands without even hearing,
The man with the beautiful eyes.

All I remember are those brown eyes
And those sensual lips, (not for kissing,
Not for telling silly lies).
His body strangely pure, love life missing,
The man with the beautiful eyes.

All the things his body doesn't say
His soul does, through those brown
Most magnificent eyes. He's a godly way
About him; and a love that man,
The man with the beautiful eyes.

Sex Ballad

I was a virgin
Until a fat black stallion raped me
In the sunlight in the fields
And the hills. I couldn't see.

I was human
Until I saw I was animal
And had hungers
And that thinking wasn't all.

I was Wendy
Until Peter Pan outgrew mother,
And my breastfeeding,
Then Peter made love to his brother.

I was a mermaid
And pregnant by the sea.
The sky and the winds delivered
My fish-headed baby to me.

Once I was fertile
Until someone decided I shouldn't;
They got me the Pill.
I'm the Earth Mother who couldn't.

I was a drag queen
For a fake-Cockney baby,
Very attached to his mother.
He was a lesbian when he laid me.

I was my father's mistress
In my dreams in his dreams.
Once I awakened to the touch
Of his hand, and my screams.

I was a sadist
Until my masochist died,
Then I squeezed his blood
Out of my chains and cried.

Yes, I was a whore
Until my body went out of business
And I didn't excite anymore,
And my customers went away sexless.

III.

Nature

The old familiar urge
Moves my soul.
The air is clean,
Carries the scent of flowers
Exhiliarating, pure.
It cleanses me.

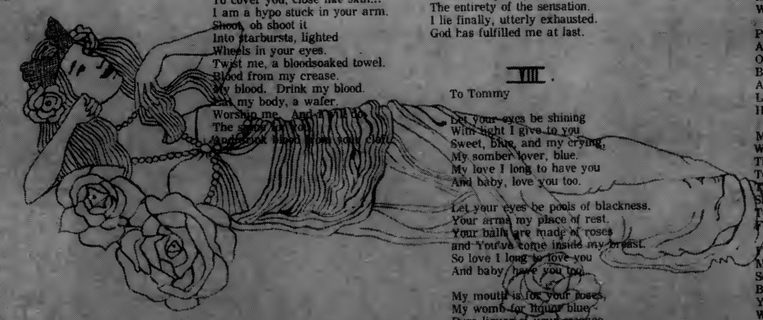
The land is
A hazy emerald.
Misty blue hands suspended
The water, like crystal,
Washes the pebbled beach
And the urge....

The old familiar urge,
Animalistic and beautiful,
Courses my veins.
The grass is inviting.
The sky
Is dusky.

If you were but
To touch me,
I'd give so willingly;
Because instinct tells me
"It's warm. Things are growing.
"Your urge is right. Yield."

IV.

On My Eighth Man



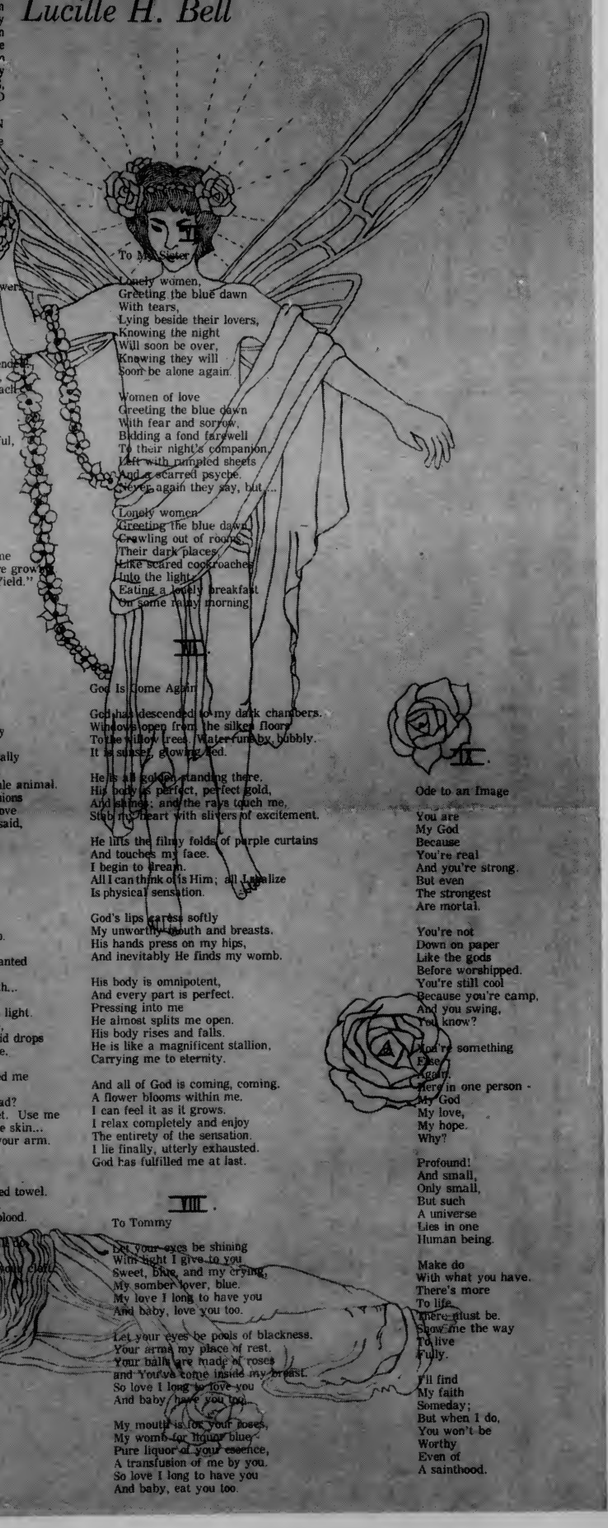
On my eighth man
As he entered my heat
I loved him passionately

And I loved him spiritually
Simply because he was
A male lover, not a male animal.
After seven fruitless unions
I reaped a harvest of love
And knew why mama said,
"Sex is the ultimate
"Fulfillment of love,
"Not an end in itself."

V.

Marc Was A Saint, Too.

Dear man, I always wanted
To be pretty and nice.
Please baby, burst forth...
Lick me with flame,
Again. Touch me with light.
Make me like a candle,
Dripping thick hot liquid drops
On your lap. Carry me.
Water in a bad vessel.
Drink me. Do you need me
Like you need water?
Even if the vessel is bad?
Make me like a blanket. Use me
To cover you, close like skin...
I am a hypo stuck in your arm.
Shoot, oh shoot it
Into starbursts, lighted
Wheels in your eyes.
Twist me, a bloodsoaked towel.
Blood from my crease.
My blood. Drink my blood.
Eat my body, a wafer.
Worship me. And I will be
The [illegible]



VI.

To Tommy

Let your eyes be shining
With light I give to you
Sweet, blue, and my crying,
My somber lover, blue.
My love I long to have you
And baby, love you too.

Let your eyes be pools of blackness.
Your arms my place of rest.
Your hairs are made of roses
And You've come inside my breast.
So love I long to love you
And baby, have you too.

My mouth is for your roses,
My womb for living blue.
Pure liquor of your essence,
A transfusion of me by you.
So love I long to have you
And baby, eat you too.

VII.

God Is Come Again

God has descended to my dark chambers.
Windows open from the silken floors
To the willow trees. Water runs by bubbly.
It is sunset, glowing red.

He is all golden standing there.
His body is perfect, perfect gold,
And strong, and the rays touch me,
Stab my heart with slivers of excitement.

He lifts the filmy folds of purple curtains
And touches my face.
I begin to dream.
All I can think of is Him; all I realize
Is physical sensation.

God's lips caress softly
My unworthy mouth and breasts.
His hands press on my hips,
And inevitably He finds my womb.

His body is omnipotent,
And every part is perfect.
Pressing into me
He almost splits me open.
His body rises and falls.
He is like a magnificent stallion,
Carrying me to eternity.

And all of God is coming, coming.
A flower blooms within me.
I can feel it as it grows.
I relax completely and enjoy
The entirety of the sensation.
I lie finally, utterly exhausted.
God has fulfilled me at last.

VIII.

Ode to an Image

You are
My God
Because You're real
And you're strong.
But even
The strongest
Are mortal.

You're not Down on paper
Like the gods
Before worshipped.
You're still cool
Because you're camp.
And you swing.
You know?

You're something Else.
Really.
Here in one person -
My God
My love,
My hope.
Why?

Profound!
And small,
Only small,
But such
A universe
Lies in one
Human being.

Make do
With what you have.
There's more
To life
Than just be.
Show me the way
To live
Fully.

I'll find
My faith
Someday;
But when I do,
You won't be Worthy
Even of
A sainthood.

Multi-purpose Dam System Meets Opposition

AMHERST—"It is the feeling of this sub-committee that the study report does not clearly substantiate the need for a new system of multi-purpose dams in the Connecticut River basin."

In a report acclaimed by the Connecticut River Basin Citizens Review Committee and environmentalists alike, a sub-committee of that citizens group has recommended that no further multi-purpose reservoirs be constructed in the valley unless a need has been clearly established pending thorough investigation of alternate possibilities.

This was one of several sub-committee reports presented Tuesday at the third meeting of the citizens review committee, which has been given 90 days to review a nine-volume report of the Army Engineers for the future control of the river.

Proposed by Conte

The review committee was first proposed by Congressman Silvio O. Conte and was adopted by the New England River Basins Commission.

NERBC Chairman Frank Gregg appointed 28 persons representing the four-basin states, and creation of the committee was announced formally Sept. 30.

During the meeting Tuesday the committee heard five area scientists speak against the Corps proposal which includes more than 200 dams and a number of pumped storage projects.

The subcommittee on Water Supply, Water Quality, Flood Control and Commercial Navigation remarked additionally in its report:

"In spite of considerable study of the report, the group has no clear understanding as to why or which new large impoundments are essential, what alternative measures are feasible and what sacrifices will be required in terms of environmental quality and personal income.

Lose Opportunities

"Opportunities lost, such as stream fishing, hunting, farming and forestry, wildlife habitat, and tourist attractions-scenic overlooks, gorges, cascades and falls-should be considered as part of the over-all "costs" of the project if they are to be replaced."

The report notes: "In conclusion, the sub-committee strongly agrees that any rational basin plan must provide for effective floodplain management as an integral part of the plan and any construction of dams large or small should be based on their need with reference to and in conjunction with accomplished floodplain zoning."

In making recommendations to the overall report which will be concluded Jan. 15 and then submitted to the Water Resources Council, the sub-committee stated that "active programs of floodplain management should be undertaken with all possible haste in all areas of the valley where there exists the possibility of flood damage and-or expansion."

Floodplain management was most prominently recommended by scientists in their morning presentation as an alternative to the construction of numerous dams and reservoirs.

Dams Destroy Ecosystem

Scientists additionally charged that such projects would mean additional development of the floodplain, thus laying the scene for a disaster when a flood comes that cannot be held.

It was also maintained that such projects would destroy the river ecosystem in addition to increasing urban blight along the river valley.

In other recommendations by the sub-committee, the members said that "The federal, state and local governments should undertake at once a program for the acquisition of key lands in the flood plains to safeguard their storage capacities and to provide recreation and open space areas near metropolitan centers."

The subcommittee also advised "that in some cases the above agents undertake programs to remove existing enroachments where serious danger to life is involved."

Members suggested "In a few instances, existing dams should be modified to provide larger reservoirs for flood control protection, in preference to construction of new impoundment structures."

In earlier testimony to the committee, Prof. R.M. Schuster of the University of Massachusetts had indicated that water held behind dams for a period of 3 or 4 weeks would contribute to the complete destruction of plant life in a basin below the level of the water.

The subcommittee additionally recommended that "no large new multi-purpose reservoirs be constructed unless the accomplishment of all above alternatives establishes a clear need."

Another suggested effort was "that small watershed programs be scrutinized for integration into overall flood control plans. There is considerable concern in the sub-committee over possible ecological impacts of small impoundment projects. The sub-committee recommends that no action be taken until more information is available and can be evaluated."

Emphasis on Land Management

In a final recommendation the sub-committee advised that "more emphasis be placed on land management measures: protection of high elevations from development; zoning against development where indicated by climate, slope, geology, or exposure; wise land use practices in forest and farm; and practices to minimize dangers from practices in forest and farm; and practices to minimize dangers from erosion, pollution, and rapid runoff on land suitable for development."

Day Lee, of Deerfield, and a member of the sub-committee on Water Supply, Water Quality, Flood Control and Commercial Navigation, commented Wednesday that an additional report would be forthcoming from the sub-committee on the major proposed dams.

Lee noted that these reports would be compiled in a final report of all the subcommittees on or shortly after Jan. 15, when the last meeting of the citizens review committee is held.

G.R. Higgins of the sub-committee on power reported to the citizens review group that "The desirable goal would seem to be determination of the optimum mix of the power sources for proper balance of the technological and ecological factors."

Higgins reported that it has become evident that the needs of the basin need no longer be matched closely by electrical generation within the water shed.

Power from Canada and tidal power from the coast were among possible sources discussed by the entire committee.

EX STUD ED OFF TO HANOI, says the DAILY CALIFORNIAN. The Berkeley campus press announced that a former editor-in-chief of the newspaper left for Hanoi, Dec. 3, with a delegation from the National Student Association. They were to sign "peace treaties" with students of North and South Vietnam, as ordered earlier this year by delegates to the NSA national convention in St. Paul, Minn.

DC must have scooped the nation's press on this one, since even that "newspaper of record," The New York Times, seems to have skipped coverage of the event.

Gowdy Selects Erving On Second All-America Team

Julius Erving, of UMass basketball notoriety, has just recently received probably his biggest publicity boost. One of the biggest and most likely the best monthly magazine on sports, SPORT, has chosen Erving as a pre-season second-team all-American. The citation came in an article in the January issue of SPORT entitled "Curt Gowdy's College Basketball All-America".

Obviously the selections were made by the former voice of the Boston Red Sox and present top sportscaster for the National Broadcasting Company, Mr. Gowdy. He compiled three dream teams, a first, second and third-team all-America, and he listed many honorable mentions.

His first team comprised Sidney Wicks of UCLA, Artis Gilmore of Jacksonville, Austin Carr of Notre Dame, John Roche of South Carolina and a surprise sophomore, George McGinnis of Indiana. Gowdy feels that if it wasn't for the emergence of the super soph McGinnis, Erving would have won first-team honors. Regardless of that, the following is what Gowdy had to write about Erving?

"Had we not made an exception for the exceptional sophomore, Julie Erving of Massachusts would have been our first-team choice at forward. As it is, he surely will become the Redmen's first basketball

Julius Erving

All-America. A remarkable success story, Erving was 6-3-1/2 when coach Jack Leaman recruited him. Leaman thought Erving would reach another inch in college. But the junior has sprouted to 6-6 and Leaman now thinks his young star will grow another two inches before graduation.

"As a 6-4-1/2 sophomore, Erving was the only major-college player besides Gilmore to average over 20 rebounds a game. And he averaged 25.7 points a game despite taking a moderate 19 shots per contest. ("He could have scored 40 a game if we wanted him to," insists Leaman.) Erving picked up valuable experience while traveling with a U.S. Olympic development team last summer. He was named MVP in three of three European tournaments."

Erving has gotten accolades in other publications and he has been previously voted highly on pre-season all-America lists, but getting such raves from a magazine the calibre of SPORT and from a man as highly-regarded as Gowdy is something else. It should help him get more of the ink he deserves from other national publications that have previously treated him with less accord. Only Curt, he's more often addressed as Julius, not Julie.

Student Ski Card System Lowers Rates For Collegians

Thousands of college students will be skiing at special rates this season, thanks to the Student Ski Association, and a young graduate engineer and famous skier, Kim Chaffee.

The Student Ski Association has designed a program to bring down the cost of skiing, thereby enabling college students around the country to ski more, or take up this growing winter sport. Says Chaffee, older brother of Olympic skiers Suzy and Rick Chaffee, and himself a former college ski racer: "As an undergraduate at Harvard and later as a graduate student at Berkeley, I saw how disheartened college students were over the high cost of skiing. So, last year I set out to do somthing about it." That something is the Student Ski Association.

Chaffee admits that the Association's college rate program and Student Ski Card system was inspired by the airline youth fare card concept. "Through our national Student Ski Card program," says Chaffee, "we are now able to provide college students across the country and a large selection of prominent ski areas offering special low rates on lift tickets, lessons, rentals and lodging." Last year Chaffee signed up 34 ski areas around the nation, all granting half-price skiing to his first year membership of over 8,000.

This season the number of North American ski areas participating in the national SSA college rate program has climbed to over 100, with additional areas entering the program each week. Areas like Waterville Valley, Glen Ellen, Mount Snow and Jay Peak in the East; Mount Telemark, Schuss Mountain and the Playboy Club in the mid-West; and Aspen Highlands, Jackson Hole, Squaw Valley and Alpine Meadows in the West, make this a very extensive college ski program.

Nearly all these area, says Chaffee, grant $1 off the all-day lift ticket every Saturday and Sunday, and holidays (including holiday weeks), plus HALF—PRICE tickets during the week (half the weekend lift ticket price). Many participating areas (nearly 80%) also provide college students with half-price rates on ski school lessons and equipment rentals during the week on an availability basis. The Association's staff is currently signing up lodges in ski country that will grant 25% savings to Ski Card holders during the week.

The Student Ski Card program is open to undergraduate, graduate and professional school students of any age. High school students, faculty and students' wives and husbands who are not in school are as yet not eligible. In order to qualify for the special student rates at any of the participating areas, each Student Ski Card holder must present his school or student ID card along with the Ski Card. Proof of school attendance is not required when ordering a Ski Card through the mail.

Typical savings on a two-day ski trip during the week (non-holiday week) can net a college student over $17 with the use of a $4 Student Ski Card from the Student Ski Association. With most major ski areas charging over $6 for an all-day lift ticket, plus $6 for complete rentals and $4 for a ski school lesson, it's easy to see how half price skiing through the Student Ski Card can save many times the small $4 cost.

As part of the Student Ski Card program, the Student Ski Association has begun publication of a national skiing news-magazine-The STUDENT SKIER. Distributed on college campuses and mailed to all Ski Card holders, The STUDENT SKIER features stories and articles on various ski areas in the SSA program, pointers on how to go skiing on a student's budget, plus listings of ski areas lodges and ski shops granting students discounts.

A nationwide Student Ski Card promotional campaign is now under way on nearly 1,000 college campuses in North America. Students at many colleges will find posters and application for Ski Cards on campus bulletin boards. Ski Card sales are also handled by fellow students, working as SSA Campus Representatives.
